Fairbanks praises Bills' Ferguson

BUFFALO [AP] — Last season when O.J. Simpson was breaking all kinds of National Football League rushing records for the Buffalo Bills, the team was noted primarily for one thing: it's ground attack.

This year it's different. The Bills have come up with a mixture of running plays and passes and are leading the East Division of the American Conference with a 7-1 mark.

As Coach Chuck Fairbanks of New England put it Sunday after his Patriots were knocked off by the Bills for the second time this year, "That's a good football team. It's not a one-man team. It's a fine offensive unit."

The Patriots, who lost 29-28 Sunday, were high on Bills quarterback Joe Ferguson.

"Ferguson hasn't been given the credit he deserves," said cornerback Ron Bolton of the Patriots. "He's a lot better than a lot of quarterbacks in this league with bigger names, a lot better."

Coach Lou Saban of the Bills described Ferguson as "a fine quarterback" and said his ability to bring the team from behind to victory is "a sign of maturity, no question."

Ferguson hasn't had much time to mature. A third-round draft pick in 1973, Ferguson started all 14 regular season games for Buffalo last year. He hit on 44.5 per cent of his passes for 939 yeards and four touchdowns.

This year, with less emphasis on the ground attack, Ferguson has had a better chance to display his wares. In eight games, he has connected on 59.3 per cent of his passes for a total of 1,143 yards and 10 touchdowns, well ahead of last year's statistics for the entire season.

Like last season, Ferguson has had option this year to hand off to Simpson for slices through the line or sweeps around end, or to give it to Jim Braxton, who bulls up the middle like a bulldozer.

But he has been going more and more to the passing game. His favorite targets are wide receiver J.D. Hill and the other wide man, Ahmad Rashad, who came to Buffalo during the off season from St. Louis.

In the New England game Sunday, Ferguson hrew 23 times and completed 15 times for 242 yards and one TD. And 12 of his passes came on first down situations.

"He hurt us more on first downs," said Patriot safety Jack Mildren. "Buffalo never throws on first down. We didn't expect it. In the past they always ran on first down."

Patriots Coach Fairbanks also was impressed with Ferguson. "In the two games he's played against us," Fairbanks said, "and in every Buffalo game I've watched on film, Ferguson has done a heckuva job. The kid's a fine quarterback."

Walton, Blazers not burning well

PORTLAND, Ore. [UPI] — Bill Walton and the Portland Trail Blazers make their first big road trip of the young NBA season this week, but there is no need for trembling in Boston, Philadelphia, Atlanta and New Orleans that the big redhead has done anything yet to turn the Portland franchise around.

He's been spectacular in his own right in a number of games, especially in rebounding. He's averaging more than 18 a game, is blocking about five shots a game, and closing up the inside alleys to the basket, while averaging about 17 points a game.

Bob McAdoo of Buffalo says "He'll beat Dave Cowens because he's quicker." Most players in the league have been impressed with Walton's rebounding and all-around play. He even has taken a rebound, and with the passing lanes cut off, dribbled the length of the floor to dunk the shot.

But awesome, such as Kareen Abdul-Jabbar, Walton isn't. In the win over Buffalo, President Ford, as a spectator, rose to his feet to applaud Walton on a play that saw him put up a shot while headed toward the seats at the end line while being fouled and the ball went in and he converted the free throw for the three-point play.

While everyone, including the Blazers themselves, say they're legitimate contenders, the standings do not yet reflect it.

Portland is 4-5 on the season thus far, and seven of those games have been at home, where the home record is 3-4.

"I am having to play more than I like, "says Portland's Lenny Wilkens, only player-coach in the NBA.

Because Portland has had more cliff-hangers than were expected, at least by the fans, the Trail Blazer coach hasn't used his bench, especially rookie guards Phil Lumpkin and Dan Anderson, as much as he would like.

Turnovers have been killing the Blazers, who are averaging about 25 a game. They had 14 in the first quarter in Sunday night's loss to Golden State, the surprise leader of the Pacific Division with seven wins and two losses.

"You'll see a difference in this team in another two weeks," Wilkens had told the fans in a post-game interview following the season-opening win over Cleveland, but he meant improved team play. The club hasn't jelled yet as a team.

"They have great individual players," said Jeff Mullins, the Golden State guard who is out with a broken hand, after watching the warriors beat Portland for the second time in three contests. "But they still haven't got it together yet as a team.

Esposito, Vachon lead NHL stats

MONTREAL [UPI] — While the world revolves and brings its inexorable changes, there are some things that just remain the same from one year to the next.

In hockey, the first month of the season has brought more than its share of surprises with such teams as the New York Islanders, Los Angeles Kings and Vancouver Canucks casting off their perennial losers' image and other powerhouses such as the New York Rangers, Montreal Canadiens and Boston Bruins experiencing unexpected difficulties.

But when it comes to the individual scoring race, the view at the top is constant.

Phil Esposito, winner of the National Hockey League Scoring Championship five of the last six years, and Bruin teammate Bobby Orr, who has exceeded 100 points in each of the last five years, were tied for the lead with 21 points through Sunday night's games.

Esposito, seeking his sixth consecutive goal scoring title, was on top once again in that department with 13 goals in 11 games while Orr, the league's leading playmaker in four of the last five years, led in assists with 16.

Teammates Jim Pappin and Ivan Boldirev of the Chicago Black Hawks were third and fourth in scoring with 19 and 18 points, respectively, followind by Tom Lysiak of Atlanta and Denis Potvin of the Islanders with 16 points each.

One of the primary reasons for the Kings' lofty position atop division III with only one loss in 12 games is the work of Rogie Vachon, who has permitted only eight goals in eight games to lead NHL goaltenders with a 1.00 average.

TOUR LEAVES UNIV. OF MASS. .... 8:00 AM
Leaves Amherst Center .... 7:50 AM
Leaves Smith College .... 7:30 AM
Leaves Mt. Holyoke College .... 7:15 AM

Peter Pan has chosen a special hike for those wanting an invigorating, scenic day. The weather will be perfect for hiking — not too hot, not too cool — and you'll be accompanied by a knowledgeable, experienced hiker to answer questions and go over the maps before you arrive at the starting point.
The hike route leads to the summit of "The Dome", near Pownal, Vermont, in the south-western section of the state. The average hiking time up and back is about 2 1 2 hours, but with allowance for lunch at the summit and rest stops, we'll be there for just over 4 hours.
Wild raspberries grow in abundance on this trail, so bring your baskets or sacks. There is a spectacular view from the top of "The Dome"; to the west are the Adirondacks of New York State, and to the south lies Mount Greylock in the Berkshires.
Complete box lunches will be provided to all and included in the tour. The outward bus trip will be via the scenic Mohawk Trail with its "hairpin turn" all the way from Greenfield to North Adams and Williamstown. The return trip will be via Bennington, and the Molly Stark Trail to Wilmington and Brattleboro. A supper stop will be made on the way back, with expected return time about 8:00 PM. $11.50

Letter to the sports editor

Boxing—just pure brutality?

To the Editor:

Growing up can be a painful experience. As once progresses from self-centered childhood and adolescence into maturity, certain ideals and ideas of what's fun must be left behind in the sandbox. We can all remember, whether in the city, suburbs, or countryside, times when it was fun to play cops 'n' robbers, Cowboys 'n' Indians, wrestling and fighting. Guns and fists were toys, and we knew in our naive little way that they didn't really hurt anybody [only "sissies" cried when they got hit. Right?] As we grew older, the punches landed heavier, and we learned that maybe fighting wasn't so much fun after all, and it was saved until really needed. Guns, to most people's minds, are still toys, since very few of us have really seen just how fun they aren't. Thus, the Army children (infantry) still play "war games." And it's still "glorious" to go off to war and kill a few "gooks" for Mother and God.

It is acutely indicative of the stage American mentality is at, when a man who makes a career out of pummeling another man's face into bloody pulp, is lauded as "the last hero of the 60s." When I was 13, a man named Cassius Clay fired my imagination; he was a hero to me, then. I followed loyally his early professional fights, never questioning the irony of his boast that his face "had never been touched," and always singing his "Legend of Cassius Clay, the most beautiful fighter in the world today." I cheered his bravery before the Draft Board, and vowed then and there, that when they called me, I wasn't going either. I defended his name change. Now, a decade or so later, grown up, I cannot rationally defend the man [or any other — Foreman, Ellis, Frazier, Dempsey, or whoever] for making his living [living? at $5 million for a night's "work"?] out of punching another man's face. I used to know an old ex-heavyweight fighter, whose head had been so beat around, that if you were to approach him from behind, you ran the risk of getting a face full of old knuckles. He wasn't senile, but punch-drunk — like the old one-eyed dog, who'd snarl and attack anything or anyone who came at him from his bad side, and lick the hand of anyone with the sense to approach from the other way. This old boxer suffered extensive brain damage, a high school graduate who had to be taught, when middle-aged, how to push a broom through the men's room of a broken down hotel. He was lucky. How about those others who weren't so lucky, who never got up off the canvas — dead from massive brain hemmorhaging?

Modern boxing is a brutal "sport," far removed from the "business of surviving" in the streets. The streets made is necessary to learn to fight, and fight good, to keep your guard up. Muhammad Ali and George Foreman are not in the streets now. There is no reason for them to be trying to bloodily subdue each other in a false, contrived battle field. It is an artificially created rivalry, imposed upon them by profit-grubbing managers and agents. They are not heroes, but grieviously exploited dupes. As savage, primitive, and unnecessary as were Rome's arenas, they were, in essence, no worse than the butchery going on in today's ring. Muhammad Ali has been credited with "taking a dead sport out of the grave and giving it life if not more." Much like Dr. Frankenstein.

It is sad to realize that America, and much of the rest of the world, have not even grown past puberty. In this country, the two most popular sports are probably boxing and football [if not the two, they are certainly close], both of which are predicated on the act of breaking human bodies. What football game has not seen broken bones and bloodied faces? How many fans don't expect to see this? How many fans pay hundreds of dollars for ring-side seats so they can see the blood better? How many starving people cheered Ali, the "People's Champion," when he pocketed the 5 million? How many of you out there are awake? How many of you have grown up?

Writer's apology: Ali still the best

Oops. Mr career as a prognosticator has been set back a couple of milleniums.

When, in last Tuesday's Collegian, this reporter stated that George Foreman would defeat Muhammed Ali, he didn't realize the magnitude of his grevious blunder. The statement must go down in history with other brilliant comments such as: "Peace in our time" - Nevile Chamberlain, "The world is flat" - King Ferdinand of Spain, and "The Earth is the center of the Universe" - a variety of quacks.

Commentary

As I sit, locked in my room, fearing for my life and munching on my commentary of October 28, I can vividly recall all the new words (and ways to use them) I learned, when elated but rowdy Ali supporters began offering me suggestions pertaining to my sex life after the conflict in Kinasha. To say the least, a few of the messages were, as Jim Woods is wont to say, "enough to jar your mother's preservatives".

Still in all, I believe that I made only five errors in judgement; overestimating George Foreman's stamina, underestimating the zip on Ali's punches, underrating the new champ's ability to absorb a punch (the few that connected, he shook off), being unaware of Ali's tremendous desire to win, and writing the article to begin with.

After viewing Muhammed's bouts prior to the Foreman Fiasco, I thought he could only sting like a butterfly and float like a bee, but the greatest promoter the game has ever known proved that he is also a truly breat boxer in becoming only the second man ever to regain the title of Heavyweight Champion of the World. (The first was Floyd Patterson who regained his title from Ingemar Johansson.)

A lot of people, myself obviously included, thought the only way one would be able to see if Ali had "guts" would be to picture them strewn across the ring, but Muhammed kept his guts inside and they still showed, in what has to be termed as one of the greatest comebacks in the history of sports and a resounding victory for the elderly (Ali is still 32 years old, even though one wouldn't notice it).

The ever-humble Ali put the pressure on himself by telling the entire world that he would win...and he did. This is the mark of a fierce competitor; what folks like to call, "a winner".

Well, the only thing left for me to do now is to take my foot out of my mouth, get up, and calmly limp away.

B's ready to slice into Sabres

BOSTON [UPI] — The last time these two teams met, the Buffalo Sabres destroyed Boston's big dad (as in awful, not terrifying) Bruins, 9-5.

And there is a developing paranoia about Buffalo sports teams in Boston, since the combined record between the two cities this season leans heavily toward Buffalo, 4-1 Boston's Bruins will try to make it 4-2 Tuesday against the Sabres in Boston.

The Bruins are doing a few things differently since that season opener on Oct. 10. for starters, they're finally achieving some balance in their scoring, and 10 goals by 10 different players Sunday will prove that. Phil Esposito, with four points Sunday night, moved his league-leading total to 17 points in 11 games, and Bobby Orr also scored four points as Boston wallopped the Minnesota North Stars 10-1.

"I asked them for some balance," said Coach Don Cherry, "and this (10 different scores) is carrying it too far. But it was nice to see the other guys scoring too."

Goalie Gilles Gilbert said his hand, which was bothering him earlier, is better, but now he has a minor back problem.

"It bothered me for a while, but it's getting a little better," he said. "But I did something to my back Saturday, but that shouldn't be too bad."

The Sabres have done well since their deal with the Vancouver Canucks, and they are in first place in the Charles F. Adams division. The trade sent Gerry Meehan and Mike Robitaille to Vancouver in exchange for defenseman Jocelyn Guevremont and another player who has since been sent to the minors.

Injuries continue to weaken UMass

McNally lengthens list of wounded UMass QB's

By JAY LUPPOLD
Sports Staff

For Brian McNally, it has been a surprising, frustrating and very short 1974 football season.

McNally, who fell victim to that injuryitis that has struck the UMass football team this year, will be going under the knife today for a separated shoulder he suffered last Saturday against Connecticut.

The 6'3" sophomore from Concord has had to play the roll of one of those players a coach likes to have around thus far in his brief stay at UMass.

"I came up here as a defensive back and played last year on the freshman team. Then this year in spring practice I was playing on defense, but when Fred (Kelliher) got hurt in the Villanova game I was spending half of practice on defense and then going over with the offense learning the plays," McNally said.

Most would think that this would tend to make most players a bit on the ired side and Brian understandably was. But not at the coaches, more so simply at the turn of events that brought about this "yo-yo complex".

"It was difficult, but understandable", Brian added.

Sitting next to Brian in the Cooley Dickinson Hospital lounge was Ed McAleney, another player turned spectator for the rest of the year. "Brian was one of the best defensive backs we had until he went to play quarterback", pointed out McAleney, who had his left leg wrapped with an ace bandage after his ankle surgery for ligament damage.

It was nothing less than a pressure situation when McNally did get the call three weeks ago against Boston University. Mark Tripucka got banged up and McNally was sent in. At the time it was 14-7 for UMass. McNally led a long drive with Jim Torrance finally carrying it over for the touchdown, but not all was roses for induction for the tall 190 lb. rookie. He threw an interception that resulted in a touchdown for the supposedly lowly Terriers, but the Minutemen held on for the win.

"It was really great when Torrance went over, but I felt a thoudand times worse on the interception," McNally said.

He was still not quite a proven QB against Rhode Island the next week, but when the gun sounded McNally had shown everyone that he had what he needed. Tripucka couldn't move the ball and Brian was inserted with three quarters still left to play. Final score: UMass 17, Rhode Island 7.

And then the big test - Connecticut, the game for all the marbles, to bring the Beanpot back to Amherst. But no go for McNally and company. After bringing the team to a 9-0 lead on three Greg Sprout field goals, McNally attempted a sneak.

"At first I just thought I hurt my shoulder, nothing bad, but when I went back to the huddle I tried to move it and it popped out. I went to the sidelines and then to the locker room. Dr. Snook only needed about 30 seconds to tell me I was done for the year," McNally so clearly remembered.

Brian McNally, up until now has had a successful athletic career. He most always has been on a winning team, going all the way back to his little league days. In his year of prep school at Hotchkiss in Connecticut where he was a defensive back the team was 7-0.

It has been a disappointing season for him this year, but not completely. The coaches now know that he can do the job. They know he is a complete athlete (he was a tri-captain in high school for baseball and basketball besides football), and they also know that he is mature, complete and ready for two more years. But Brian knows that he is no longer the starting quarterback anymore. He has been relegated to keeping the charts and talking on the sideline phone for this year anyway.

"It will be just like before next year. Kelliher will be back and there is still Pete Colten and more fighting for the job", he explained.

Injuries aren't all that bad anyway. Look to the bright side. At least you can get to watch "I Love Lucy" and "Hogan's Heroes" instead of beating each other in the afternoon. And the nurses aren't so bad either.

McNally at least has some company. Ed McAleney is there, so they can both compare scars.

And judging from the way this season has been going, who knows? Maybe he'll have more company before he leaves Cooley Dick.

Also pictured are Randy Thomas (partially hidden behind Gillin), John McGrail (behind Thomas), Tom Wilson (263), freshman standout Cliff Staples (far right), and Vermont's Bob Graves. Thomas, Gillin and McGrail went on to take second, third and fourth as they were all timed in 24:40 over the five-mile course. Wilson placed sixth while teammate Staples, in his first championship meet captured ninth. The Minutemen runners, who were ranked fifteenth in the nation in the October 24 poll, will travel to Franklin Park next Monday to defend their New England title.

Stickers record three blanks in tournament

UMass successfully placed seven players on the college teams which will compete in the Northeast Tournament in New York on November 16th.

Joanne Lorrey, Barb Martell, and Lori Nazar made the College 1 team, while Kathy O'Neil, Elaine Senosk, Joanne Smith, and Kate Stanne made the College II team following this past weekend's performance of UMass' varsity field hockey team at the Northeast College Tournament in Andover, Massachusetts.

This was the first in a series of tournaments which eventually sends three teams to a National tournament in Illinois. This weekend set up three games apiece for twenty-five participating members and divided the teams into divisions A and B, with equally strengthened teams on both.

UMass played two games on Saturday, one against the University of Vermont, who they defeated 3-0 and one against Worcester State College, who they also defeated 3-0. Sunday's match-up was with Keene State College and UMass shut them out 5-0.

UMass did not face the University of Vermont during the regular season, but were supposedly set up against a better team. They instead clinched the victory in the first half, with two goals by Joanne Smith and one by Kathy O'Neil.

UMass was defeated 2-1 by Worcester State College in regular season play, but the players felt they were the better team. They proved it Saturday as Joanne Smith contributed two goals again and Elaine Senosk shot one.

Keene State College received the same treatment they got the first game of the season. Joanne Smith had a hat trick in this game while Joanne Lorrey and Kathy O'Neil made the other two goals for the third shut-out of the weekend.

The tournament produced the best field hockey UMass has played. Coach Albert delighted in the team's efforts.

"We played good hockey at our last game at Smith and it carried right over," she said. "We were completely dominant in all three games.

"We returned to our intelligent passing offense. It was just beautifully co-ordinated."

"Our goalie, Jean Kentfield, was not really even tested. She had to make only ten clears for the weekend. This is probably the reason she did not make a college team."

The college teams were selected solely on the basis of the three games played and players were chosen by four women on a committee which attended every game.

The two teams chosen from each division advance to the next tournament, at their own expense, where the competition includes players from both college and hockey association teams.

The UMass varsity team completed their season by outscoring their opponents twenty-four to ten. The high scorer was Kathy O'Neil with six goals and second high scorers were Elaine Senosk and Joanne Smith with four.

The junior varsity team completed their 8-1-1 season with six shut-outs; five were their last games. The last time they were scored on was October 15th against Bridgewater when they were defeated 1-0.

The high scorers were Cheryl Meliones with eight goals and Karen Gipps with five. They scored twenty-five goals against their opponent's five.

DUKAKIS TOPS SARGE

BOSTON [UPI] - Democrat Michael S. Dukakis and his organization of McGovern campaign survivors trounced liberal Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent yesterday despite Sargent's efforts at foisting the state's problems off on Washington.

Summarizing his defeat, Sargent said, "the price of hamburger" plus Watergate spawned a "national tide which was running against virtually every Republican."

With 550 of the state's 2,187 precincts or 25 per cent reporting, the unofficial count gave Dukakis 212,385 votes with 161,484 for Sargent.

Elected lieutenant governor with Dukakis was Thomas P. O'Neill III, the 31 year old son of the U.S. House majority leader who also won re-election. O'Neill succeeds Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight a longtime confidant of Sargent's.

In the end, Dukakis reaped the rewards from an electorate which had had it with incumbents and

Olver, Collins win

State Senator John Olver (D-Amherst) and state representative James Collins (D-Amherst) carried Amherst by about a four to one margin in late night returns yesterday. Both had been opposed by first time Republicans.

Olver was re-elected to Franklin-Hampshire - Hampden county seat by a vote of 4,263 to 1,057. Gerald McCarthy, his GOP opponent was defeated in his bid for the seat, which includes Amherst and Northampton.

Collins, representing the 4th Hampshire District, polled 4,048 votes to his opponent's 1,491. He was opposed by William Atkins, a self-proclaimed Republican liberal from Amherst.

Rain plagued election day in the area, but the polls moved smoothly. 5,676 residents voted yesterday out of a total of 9,222 registered. Some 1,200 UMass students voted in Amherst, according to the Town Clerk.

Brittany tenants meet trustees about security deposits

By DENNY MATTEAU
Staff Reporter

At least 350 tenants of Brittany Manor met with trustees and lawyers last night in the Campus Center to exchange questions, information, and complaints regarding the general situation of security deposits and rental procedures since the owners of Brittany Manor declared bankruptcy in September.

E. David Mazzone of Wakefield, Mass., a court-appointed trustee, began the meeting with an explanation of his responsibilities as set forth by the Federal District Court in Boston.

A petition was filed on September 23 by Robert Waldman and David Dick under Chapter 12 of the Massachusetts Bankruptcy laws. Chapter 12 basically states that the owners may have their creditors restrained from foreclosing on holdings while they try to pull themselves out of financial difficulties. Justice W. A. Garrity ordered that court-appointed trustees take over from Waldman and Dick.

Mazzone said that he is presently trying to ascertain exactly where the monies from the tenants' security deposits went. "I expected to find your deposits put aside" he said, "but I must tell you that that is just not the case."

"There are fifty-one apartment complexes similar to Brittany Manor, fourteen in which investments have been made, and that's generally where your securities went," Mazzone said.

A tenant questioned the legality of using the deposits for capital investment. Mazzone answered that he is not sure of the details, but he feels that this use of the deposits may have been illegal. "But it's the job of the D.A. to look into that," he said.

"However", continued Mazzone, "if the money went into viable investments, and real estate is usually viable, then we will liquidate those investments and return the securities when they are found."

He could give no clear estimate of how long it will take to find the money. "There's 35 million dollars involved in the whole case and we're tracking it down check by check," he said.

The discussion turned to the withholding of rents, and John O'Keefe of the Veterans' Coalition for Community Affairs read a statement in which he said, "Is the underworld involved in this?" That question was not answered. O'Keefe went on to advocate the setting up of escrow accounts by tenants withholding rent. (An "escrow account is a special account from which the depositor cannot withdraw money placed there without special authorization, thus guaranteeing that the rent will be paid once differences between tenant and landlord are settled.

O'Keefe especially advocated this action for tennants planning to move by January.

"The Veterans Coalition is prepared to physically prevent the eviction of these tenants" O'Keefe

Romanian scholar says Dracula actually lived in Transylvania

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

Romanian born scholar Radu Florescu announced last night before a packed Student Union Ballroom that he "came without his fangs".

Speaking with a slight accent, the DVP lecturer said, "I have endeavored to try and make Dracula a somewhat respectable subject. I hope to convince you all that Dracula did exist."

Florescu contends that the myth of Dracula being a vampire arose as a result of a fictionlized account written in 1897 by Bram Stoker about an actual 15th century man.

"Stoker combined the cult of vampirism which is still strong in Romania, as well as in other European countries, and the story of Dracula, a man who put one fifth of the total population of the land to death," Florescu explained.

Florescu, who teaches a course about Dracula at Boston College, stated that Stoker had picked up a distorted myth of Dracula through Germanic sources which pictured the man as a vampire.

"Dracula was born in 1431 and was beheaded and impaled in 1476," Florescu said. "He lived in Transylvania which is an actual province in central Romania, and reigned as a Prince.

"I think of him as being one of the greatest captains of all time against the Turks," he said.

LSO drops office hours

The newly set up Legal Services Offices for students will no longer have open office hours because of increased demand for legal aide, LSO attorney Bill Dorsch said yesterday.

"The reason is that we're just finding people are waiting over an hour sometimes and that's too long," Dorsch said, adding, "We will have over 85 appointment slots per week by appointment."

Previously, the LSO had open office hours Monday, Wednesday and Friday and was encouraging people to make appointments.

"We feel this will be a lot better than the present system but we'll change to something else if it doesn't work out," Dorsch added.

Senator calls it "like a slum"

Conditions at Webster House hit

by JIM KASSNER
Staff Reporter

Living conditions at Webster House on Orchard Hill are described as being "lousy" and in some cases "like a slum", by student senator Mark Kaizerman.

A resident of Webster House Kaizerman said at a House Council meeting that most people would be "appalled at the conditions in Webster House."

"Right now, people really don't have any pride. They don't feel that they have to clean up after themselves when the building is so messy anyway," he said. He believes the residents of the house would do their best to maintain the dorm, if the Physical Plant helped restore it to a respectable condition.

Among the complaints voiced at the Council meeting were the following: exposed electrical wires, broken heating units, unswept floors and stairwells, and the bathrooms in general disrepair. It was also noted that many rooms didn't have curtains, and also the fact that room windows have been used recently as "garbage disposals."

During one incident last week, a resident of the dorm apparently threw a chair out one of the upper story windows, and the debris still remains at the foot of the building.

Kaizerman said he spoke last week with two Physical Plant representatives who, after touring the building, left with a "2½ - 3 page list" of complaints. He was assured that within a week, things would "shape up."

Paul Whiteman, Director of University Custodial Department, said he was first made aware of the existing conditions at Webster sometime last week when he met with Kaizerman, Whiteman admitted the condition of Webster House was possibly "somewhat worse than the other houses on the hill", but said that he had no explanation as to why.

"We're working on the areas that he (Kaizerman) brought to our attention. We're going to make every effort to take care of the problem within the limitations of our staff," he said.

Currently, Webster has a janitorial staff of three men assigned to it. When asked if more men would be assigned to the dorm, Whiteman replied that he couldn't hire more men because of budget restrictions, but would temporarily remove men from other areas of the campus to work in Webster.

When Whiteman toured the area Oct. 29, he said that he didn't consider the area to be in particularly bad condition.

"Because of the long weekend situation (Veteran's Day) there was a bit more trash than usual in the trash rooms. But other than that, no, I didn't think it was in unusually bad shape."

Later that day, Whiteman said the complaints of the residents were being taken care of "now", and that main attention was being given to the corridors, stairwells, and bathrooms, the areas needing the most immediate attention, according to residents.

The University Health Inspector, George Reed, said he didn't feel he should become involved in the issue.

"Mark (Kaizerman) is working with the right people (the physical plant). Unless the maintenance crew refuses to take care of the problem, I see no need to involve myself in this matter at this time." Reed declined to make any further comment.

Among the alternatives for the alleviation of the problem discussed at the Webster House Council meeting was a proposal to help combat vandalism in the area. With the aid of the Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG), a student security system may be evolved for the dorms in the area.

Kaizerman suggested that this may help to prevent vandalism, and encourage increased responsibility among the residents to keep their dorms maintained.

New statistics show decline in UMass parking registrations

By MARTIN J. WATERS
Staff Reporter

The number of cars driven to the UMass campus daily has dropped sharply since parking lot fees were increased to as much as $55 per year and the bus service greatly expanded.

In 1972 students, staff and faculty registered some 16,000 vehicles for 8,000 parking spaces. This year an estimated 11,300 autos are registered.

These facts contradict statements to The Collegian by Robert W. Kittle, the director of parking and transportation, and by Susan C. Tie, the parking coordinator.

Robert J. Godding, the director of the student senate transit service and overseer of the bus system, produced statistics showing the decline in auto registrations since the overhaul of the transportation system.

Kittle and Tie, the two top parking officials, both took over their positions after the system was changed.

When asked if the changes effected the number of auto registrations Kittle said: "I don't think it's made a bit of difference."

He indicated the total auto registrations remained about the same before and after the changes.

Kittle was unavailable for comment regarding the contradiction in statistics.

Mandatory dorm life hearing is tonight

The legality of mandatory dorm residential life will be the topic of a campus wide hearing tonight in the Hampden Student Center from 7-9 p.m.

The Student Organizing Project (SOP) is conducting the hearings with guest administrators: Sid Meyers, University lawyer; Peter D'Erricco, Legal Studies Department; and Mike West, Assistant Dean of Students.

Students with grievances or opinions to air are urged by the SOP to attend the hearings.

According to The SOP, students, administrators, and outside experts will testify concerning present conditions and what alternatives are available, including the possibility of a suit to force the administration to abandon its policy of mandatory dormitory residence.

Author to lecture on business issues

David F. Linowes, auther of "Strategies for Survival," will speak tomorrow at the School of Business Administration.

His talk, in room 120 at 3:30 p.m., will be on "Accounting and Social Responsibility." Linowes' appearance on the UMass Campus is part of the School of Business Visiting Lecturer Program which gives students opportunities to discuss current business issues with recognized business authorities.

Linowes' ideas on socio-economic management to improve the effectiveness of governmental and social institutions have received wide publicity, and his articles have appeared in such publications as "The New York Times," "Nation's Business," and "Business and Society Magazine."

concluded. Mazzone pleaded with the tenants to pay their rent. "It's necessary in order to keep Brittany Manor running and to get the necessary reorganization done," he said.

William Ryan and Art Boothbe, who were appointed by Mazzone to directly manage Brittany Manor, and who are maintaining an office in apartment 105, spoke about their role in eviction cases. "We don't have the authority to not evict you", said Ryan, "but we're responsible for doing it if it is ordered."

He went on to say that it is imperative that rent be paid now in order that improvements in maintenance, etc. can be made, but that he will not act on eviction if a tenant notifies him that rent equal to the amount of the tenants security deposit will not be paid in the last month or so that the tenant lives in Brittany Manor. Ryan also asked that tenants not pay rent directly to the Hancock office in Brookline, but pay it through his office in apt. 105 so that a record may be kept of the payments.

AMHERST STUDENT•HAMPSHIRE CLIMAX•UMASS COLLEGIAN•SMITH SOPHIAN•MT. HOLYOKE CHORAGOS

Mt. Holyoke students seek trustee seats

The difficulty of nailing current jelly to the wall was never more apparent than it was Monday night in a WMHC broadcast of the Student Trustee Proposal, Susan Cartmell (president of SGA), Jeanne Amster (member, Student Conference Committee) and David Truman presented their differing views on the proposal to news directors Anne Hart and Kathie Anderson.

The proposal itself advocates placing two students as voting members on Mount Holyoke's Board of Trustees for the duration of their four years here. It is based on the apparent failure of the two recent-graduate trustees to function as key observers of the community. That the young members rarely see Mount Holyoke more than twice a year during Board meetings suggests that their perception of the community is no better than any other trustees'. In fact, it may be worse in that they, unlike the more established and secure members, are still struggling to make a living and hence have less time for even worthwhile diversions.

In addition, Ms. Cartmell and Ms. Amster indicated that the communications between students and the Board are "minimal," and that, in terms of student power, we are voiceless in this forum. "The delineation of power is clearly in the hands of the Trustees," stated Ms. Cartmell. Because the two major students proponents of the proposal see the Trustees as the ultimate control and power mechanism in the community, they are convinced that the student population (which provides 67 per cent of the college's financial backing annually) should have some power in the decisions rising from the Board. Ms. Amster brought home the problem of student power most aptly in stating, "I think it is demonstrated to them (the students) daily how much everythin is done for them."

Mr. Truman is clearly of another political stance. However, it is not quite clear what that stance is. In responding to Ms. Cartmell's charge that students should have a voice on the college's most vital committee, Mr. Truman stated "They (the trustees) are Mount Hoyloke legally, but most of the things they really do are fairly routine." Elaborating on this point he maintained that the Board has relegated all real power to committees on campus in which students already have input. Student participation is already, "very broad."

Heartbreak House

Reviewed by BOB MACKENZIE

Bernard Shaw's Heartbreak House played to near-capacity audiences these past two weekends at Smith College's Theatre 14.

Although Heartbreak House may be labelled as a farce, Shaw describes the play as "A fantasia in the Russian manner on English themes". The characters are lifted from a Chekhov play, Anglicized, put into an English country setting, given a massive dose of Shavian wit, and let loose on the audience.

Set in the summer of 1914, the action is concerned with the lives, love affairs, and careers of a group of "socially correct" Britishers, who are all either living at, or visiting, the home of the eccentric Captain Shotover.

Also residing in Heartbreak House are Hector and Hesione Hushabye, Hesione being one of Shotover's two enchanting daughters. Don Howard and Juliet Jordan, who, respectively, portray these two characters, performed admirably, and were overall, outstanding in the production.

The major action through all this, is the dilemma of Miss Ellie Dunn, performed by Susan Kincaid, who is engaged to be married to the odious businessman, Boss Mangan. Mangan, played competently by Joseph Garaventa, is the "goat" of the story, as much of this high society's "fun" is directed at him. The Boss dies in the last act, not to anyone's regret, as a bomb falling from one of the first German bombers over England explodes in the back yard.

This ending shows Shaw at his best, with the exploding bombs following on the heels of a hot political tirade by Captain Shotover. The society people, of course, think the whole business 'quite a lark", the closing lines being Hesione and Ellie's expressing hope that the bombers will return the next night.

On the whole, the production was tight, coherent, and generally of a high standard. This is not to say that it was without its faults, however, as an occasional bad costume (Hesione's in Act 2), poor sound effect (the bombs), or amateurish little bits of acting, somewhat marred an otherwise excellent showing.

Amherst decision to go co-ed draws mixed reactions at Smith

By CAROLYN HULL-RYDE
Smith Sophian

There were mixed emotions at Smith over the Amherst decision to go co-ed. In a random polling of students, comments ranged from relief to disappointment.

Many students commented about the fact that Amherst is the last male college in New England to go co-ed. Gail, a house resident, said, "I think the decision stinks. I believe there is a place for the all-male school. This just limits the possibilities for someone who wants to go to a unisex school."

Kathy '75 said, "It's a shame to see the male school tradition go down, but in this day, it's outdated. Co-education will make Amherst more attractive to prospective students."

Comments were made about future problems in five college cooperation that would result from the decision. A reliable source said President Mendenhall believed the Amherst decision would have a deleterious effect on five college cooperation. Students predicted that five college courses would no longer be taken for social reasons but for academic reasons.

Student sentiment has been and continues to be strongly against co-education for Smith. "Smith has different goals and reasons for remaining all women," said Anne '76 who added, "the Amherst decision to become co-ed is totally different from the Smith question."

Commenting on the social implications of the decision, Laurie '76 said, "I think it's going to be great for the valley; there will be a much healthier social-sexual atmosphere. Smith and Mt. Holyoke women will develop more relationships at UMass. There will be more of an integrative social life altogether in the valley as I see it. I think it should have gone co-ed sooner."

Diane '78 said, "I'm glad Amherst will go co-ed. It's always healthier for men and women to live together. It helps men to see women's weaknesses as well as their strengths. It will help them to understand women as human, as colleagues, and friends, rather than sex objects."

Community chest contributions are running ahead of last year

Contributions are flowing in--totaling $23,161 as of Tuesday, October 29--and more should be raised by a phonothon in the 1974 Amherst Community Chest Campaign. Some 50 persons volunteered to participate as callers in a phonothon this past weekend. The volunteers were board members or supporters of the 15 agencies to benefit from the campaign, or members of local service clubs. The individuals called Amherst residents from 12 noon to 4 p.m. this past Saturday and Sunday (November 2 and 3). They gave those they called an opportunity to ask questions about the agencies and the campaign.

The $23,161 figure represents only a small fraction of the anticipated return of contributions and pledges, which must total $60,000 for the campaign to reach its goal.

The sum raised represents approximately 40 per cent of this year's goal. The total raised to date is already higher than the sum of contributions raised at this point in last year's campaign.

The University of Massachusetts, Amherst college, and Hampshire College have now raised a total of $8,505. Contributions from banks, utilities, and business have reached $4,246. The sum from Professional-Government-Clubs sector totals $2,306, and precinct and special givers have contributed $8,470.

Co-ed commentary

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Reporter

A couple of things for you. First, Amherst College, that elite bastion of scholarly masculinity, has decided to have the other sex of the first time since it was founded, 150 years ago in 1821. i.e., It's going coed next year. The Collegian's five college page paid a visit to those two monoliths of the opposite gender, Smith and Mt. Holyoke, to record students' reactions and to see if they felt it heralded similar changes for their campuses.

Another thing: There is growing support among members of the five college comunity for a residential exchange program, where instead of five college students only taking classes at other colleges, they could actually live in dormitories of another school. Five College News asked Smith and Mount Holyoke students what they thought of this and also if they might participate if it goes through.

The questions: What do you think about Amherst College's decision to go coed? What do you think about the proposed five college residential exchange?

Merril Greene — Mt. Holyoke Senior from Arlington, Va. majoring in Art History. I think it's a real good thing...It's quite different going there and being put on the spot in a classroom, it's a challenge. You try to prove yourself not as a female but just as a competent, intelligent human being. It's not a matter of denying your sexuality, it's just a matter of putting it aside for the moment.

Sheila McCurdy — Smith College Senior from Spring Harbor, N.Y. majoring in Biology. I've talked to a number of guys over there and they all have different ideas. It seems to be a mixed reaction as far as I can see; some are violently against it. There are things that can be accomplished at a men's college that would be complicated by admitting women.

Cathy Leland — Mt. Holyoke Junior from Los Altos, Cal. majoring in Psychology. I don't think it will have that much of an affect and Holyoke will still be a single sex schol. There's a 12 college exchange where students from Holyoke and Smith and Dartmouth and Amherst. There are girls who go to Amherst and spend a year there.

Sarah Duncan — Smith College Sophomore from Waco, Texas majoring in Theater. I never considered Amherst as being over there. I don't think Smith will ever go coed. I think residential exchange is a good idea for Smith, mainly because you can't live off campus, well you can if you go hand in hand with someone else up to the psychiatrist or something.

Pam Gilmore — Mt. Holyoke Junior from Baldwin, N.Y. majoring in Music. I think it would be tragic in terms of the women who would have to endure at least the first four years. It wouldn't begin to settle any sort of sexual normalcy until there had been girls there in all classes. They'd have to endure a lot of degredation. I just don't think Amherst men as a whole, this is a generalization, know how to conduct themselves in the presence of the opposite sex,

Criticizes Globe ethics

Bellotti wins in Attorney General race

BOSTON -- Democrat Francis X. Bellotti was elected state attorney general over Republican Josiah A. Spaulding last night, pulling ahead at the outset of ballot counting and holding his lead throughout the night.

With 908 of 2,187 precincts reporting, Bellotti led Spaulding 319,333 to 293,815.

In a victory statement to his campaign workers, Bellotti praised his backers who have been loyal through several statewide campaigns.

He also criticized the "ethics and credibility" of The Boston Globe, which published a poll showing Sapulding had pulled even after the Democrat had built a big lead earlier in the campaign.

There was no immediate reaction from The Globe.

Bellotti, lieutenant governor from 1962 to 1964, was considered a favorite in the race until a Boston Globe Monday showed Spaulding had tightened the race. But the lead was apparently not enough.

Spaulding has never held elective office. A native of Worcester, he was chairman of the Republican state committee in the 1960s and ran against Sen. Edward M. Kennedy in 1970.

Both candidates are practicing attorneys. Bellotti, from Quincy, has a trial law firm in that city and Spaulding, who now lives in Manchester, has practiced corporate law with a Boston firm.

The impending vacancy in the attorney general's office was created when Democratic Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn ran for governor and later lost in the September primary to Michael S. Dukakis.

Bellotti ran unsuccessfully for governor in 1964, for attorney general in 1966 and for governor again in 1970.

He lost the 1970 gubernatorial primary in a four-way race. In 1964, he lost the gubernatorial election to John A. Volpe after upsetting the governor of his own party' Endicott Peabody, in a bitter primary contest.

In 1966, Bellotti lost the attorney general's race to Elliot L. Richardson in a bruising campaign featuring last-minute conflict-of-interest charges made by Richardson.

Spaulding sought to capitalize on Bellotti's track record throughout the 1974 campaign, telling voters he is less "political" than his Democratic opponent. Bellotti, a conservative on many social issues, kept a low profile throughout the campaign.

Spaulding, a liberal, charged Bellotti with "false advertising" based on the Democrat's ads which indicated the attorney general can somehow reduce the cost of living. Bellotti said he was simply pledging to fully enforce consumer protection laws and help consumers save money.

On Tuesday, Bellotti took out a full-page advertisement in The Boston Globe accusing the newspaper of unfairly convering his campaign because the newspaper's law firm is the same one at which Spaulding works, he said.

Bellotti at one point was quoted as saying he wished voters would "forget" about the attorney general's race in a Globe story. He started out with a big lead in the polls, relying heavily on voters who supported him in past campaigns.

Bellotti's campaign emphasized crime prevention plus protection of personal privacy. Spaulding said he wanted to remove politics from the attorney general's office.

Guzzi scores major victory over Quinlan

BOSTON -- Rep. Paul L. Guzzi won a smashing victory for secretary of state over GOP State Sen. John M. Quinlan last night, building a 2-1 lead from the start.

The Newton Democrat, whose personal loan from four friends caused a campaign furor in late October, indicated he will continue his fight for some form of public financing for statewide candidates.

With 908 of 2,187 precincts reporting, Guzzi held the lead over Republican Quinlan, 396,385 to 207,427.

Both Guzzi and Quinlan made their initial statewide runs memorable, and the battle for the hitherto innocuous secretary's office proved to be one of the most exciting races.

The two Harvard graduates, who had more in common than others on the ballot -- products, more or less, of the "new politics" concept -- slugged it out like the politicians of old.

Quinlan ,39, served five terms in the Senate, a Republican who captured and easily retained year after year a seat that the Democrats had held. He had been a teacher and once was an aide to former Sen. Leverett Saltonstall.

Guzzi, 32, had been a teacher-coach prior to winning a House seat two terms ago.

Both candidates staked out a claim to election reform and this was the decisive campaign issue, especially when Guzzi ran into a conflict in campaign fund reporting from his upset primary victor over Secretary of State John F.X. Davoren.

Quinlan was the principal author of Question 5 on the ballot, which would re-write the state's corrupt practices law. Guzzi had ageed on most features of the law but split away with a majority of the election laws committee on some of its technical features.

Dracula, nicknamed "Vlad the Impaler" successfully defeated two Turkish invasions, and the impaled thousands of Turkish captives.

Florescu, who says he is an indirect descendent of the Prince, discussed the cult of vampirism and how it exists today. He said garlic and crosses are used as preventives against the cult.

"If a body is disintered and is not decomposed, then it is a sure sign of vampirism. A stake must then be heated until red hot and driven through the heart or the buttocks of the corpse into the ground," he said.

Florescu stated that an iron curtain has been raised between two conceptions of Dracula. "In the United States," he said, "the Dracula story is not taken seriously. It is treated lightly in the American press.

"But Romania needs heroes, and Dracula has continued to be one. He is considered as a savior of the race, since he remained true to Romania, while everyone else was degenerating into Turkish ways," he said.

Women politicians up 50 per cent

WASHINGTON [UPI] – Conneticut gubernatorial candidate Ella Grasso led a record list of 800 women candidates yesterday in elections predicted to bring a 50 per cent gain in the number of women holding political office throughout the nation.

Grasso, a two-term Democratic congresswoman, was favored to defeat GOP Rep. Robert Steele and become the first woman governor elected without the help of her husband's political reputation.

In addition, women were expected to win as many as six new congressional seats, 200 additional state legislative spots, a lieutenant governorship and one big city mayor's seat.

One potential result of an increased number of women in the state legislatures could be the ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Grasso, 55, was one of three women running for governor. But the other two -Republicans Louise Gore of Maryland and Shirley Crumpler of Nevada -generally were not credited with as good a chance against incumbents in those states.

Forty-seven major party women were running for Congress -three for the Senate and 44 for the House. Noe of the 11 incumbent women, with the possible exception of Rep. Marjorie Holt in Maryland, was expected to lose.

Insiders said six new women congressional candidates had a good chance of winning. They were Democrats Gladys Spellman of Maryland, Martha Keys of Kansas, Colleen O'Connor of California, Helen S. Meyner of New Jersey. Fran Ryan of Ohio and Republican Millicent Fenwick of New Jersey.

But the big gain for women was expected in the state legislatures, where one of the most important women's issues -the Equal Rights Amendment -is still being fought.

A spokeswoman for the National Women's Political Caucus estimated that as many as 670 women might be elected to state

"This is important, because we will be building a pool of talented women to draw on for the next congressional elections," she said. "It also looks like we're going to pick up enough votes to get the ERA through."

A total of 33 state legislatures have voted to ratify the ERA, which would outlaw discrimination against women under current statutes, although the status of the vote in two of those states is in question.

Four women also were running for lieutenant governor - Republicans Leona Troxell of Arkansas, Ann Batchelder of Nebraska and Louise Kazanjian

Democrats sweep state

Democrats ousted. Republican governors in New York; Massachusetts, Connecticut and Tennessee Tuesday but the GOP stopped a Democratic sweep of the nation's 10 largest states by re-electing Gov. William Milliken of Michigan.

The Democrats swept toward victory in the bulk of the 35 governorships at stake.

Democrats, who went into the election with a 32-18 edge, held on to governorships in Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Oklahoma, Vermont, Arkansas, Maryland. Rhode Island, Texas, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Idaho and Ohio.

The trend was not all one way. South Carolina and Kansas, with Democratic governors, gave leads to Republicans. But Republicans were losing in Colorado, Michigan, Wyoming and Arizona.

Rep. Hugh Carey defeated Nelson Rockefeller's hand picked successor for governor of New York and in Connecticut Rep. Ella Grasso became the first woman ever elected governor on her own.

Mrs. Grasso, the 55 year old daughter of an immigrant Italian baker who settled in Connecticut, enjoyed a commanding lead from the outset in her quest to become the nation's first woman elected governor in her own right. Three other women governors followed in their husbands' footsteps.

Governor George C. Wallace won election as Alabama's first three-term governor, securing the power base for a fourth presidential campaign.

Despite a 1972 assassination attempt that left him paralyzed from the waist down, Wallace began his campaign for the 1976 Democratic presidential nomination even before he concluded the gubernatorial campaign.

Wallace outpaced 67-year-old former State Sen. Elvin McCary by landslide proportions in early returns.

First black elected to Bay State Senate

BOSTON [UPI] -- Bill Owens, an ex-convict and one of the most flamboyant orators in the Massachusetts House, yesterday became the first black elected to the state Senate in Massachusetts' history.

Owens' victory over Republican Francis I. Hector, also black, was a result of Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent's refusal to allow the Senate to redistrict itself last year without creating a district made up of most of Boston's black neighborhoods.

Owens, who now becomes ranking member of the Legislative Black Caucus, endorsed Sargent's re-election effort last week.

In addition to Owens' history Senate win, blacks won seats for the first time from the fishing village of New Bedford and from the gun manufacturing Connecticut River Valley city of Springfield. When added to the five secure black seats in Boston, most of them in the Roxbury section, it brings to seven the number of blacks in the 240-member House.

Owens is a doctoral candidate at the University of Massachusetts.

Dukakis winner in state race

Republicans - characterists even Sargent's best efforts could not deny.

Sargent was among the first Republican to disassociate himself from the Nixon and Watergate scandals. As the state's unemployment rate continued its upward spiral, topping out a week before the election at 8.3 per cent, he said it wasn't his fault.

But Dukakis disagreed and hammered away at the Sargent record, drawing blood where the governor was most vulnerable; his party label, which he couldn't escape; and the economy, which was too ugly to hide under the Washington rug.

A major factor, however, in Dukakis' landslide win was the 41-year-old Brookline Democrat himself.

He has been running for governor since 1970 when he was the bottom half of a gubernatorial ticket headed by Boston Mayor Kevin H. White, a ticket overwhelmed by the Sargent Dwight combination.

Dukakis picked up the battered remnants of George McGovern's presidential campaign organization and began early to weave it into a low profale, door knocking children's campaign. It was a tactic that overwhelmed Attorney General Robert H. Quinn in September's Democratic primary.

Sargent and his running mate, Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight of Holyoke, were seeking re-election to their second four-year term. Dukakis ran with state Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill III, son of the U.S. House majority leader, who won a five-way contest for the democratic nomination for the lieutenant governor in the September primary.

Sargent described himself as the underdog at the outset of the campaign. How own polls and those published by The Boston Globe showed him way behind, and Dukakis appeared to be a shoo-in throughout much of the campaign.

A mid-October poll published by The Globe gave Dukakis a 25 point lead. But the final poll published by the newspaper Monday said the Dukakis lead had been cut to 6 percentage points with 110 percent of the electorate undecided.

The Dukakis strategy was to project a fresh face on the head of a cool, efficient administrator-a person who could and would get the job done. The primary job, of course, was bringing life back to what Dukakis and his running mate, Thomas P. O'Neill III, projected as a dying economy.

But the way in which the Dukakis O'Neill team would do that remained a secret throughout the campaign, except for vague references to eliminating patronage in the governor's office and promises of a 5 per cent across the board productivity drive which Dukakis allowed the voters to believe was actually a proposed budget cut.

Dukakis, a state representative for eight years, was White's runningmate in 1970.

The state's economy -- coupled with an unemployment rate which has been well above the national average -- was one of the major campaign issues.

But the race evolved into a series of charges and countercharges in six gubernatorial debates over taxes, patronate and efficiency in government.

Dukakis, in great part, campaigned on promises. He said he would avoid budget deficits and new taxes, eliminate patronage and require a 5 percent "productivity and efficiency" increase in state government.

Democrats tighten Congress control

From Wire Services

Democrats tightened their control of Congress yesterday in an apparent landslide that engulfed Republicans and threatened a bitter battle with President Ford in the last two years of his term.

A nationwide surge gave Democrats control of the Senate and House and promised a one-sided majority certain to give President Ford's legislative programs serious difficulties.

President Ford said inflation dominated yesterday's elections and pledged to work "wholeheartedly" with Democratic victors to right the American economy.

With results from the West still to come, Democrats had ousted Republican Senate incumbents in Kentucky, Colorado and Florida.

One of the few Senate seats that the Republicans had held any hope of gaining -- in Indiana -- went to the Democrats early in the evening when Sen. Birch Bayn, (d-Ind.), won re-election over Indianapolis Mayor Richard Lugar.

Democrats further solidified their hold on the Senate with victories by incumbents Russell B. Long of Louisiana, Herman Talmadge of Georgia, Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina and James B. Allen of Alabama.

Democratic Rep. Wilbur Mills, prestigious chairman of the House Ways and Means Cimmittee, last night pulled ahead of his first Republican opponent in his 36 years in Congress in early returns and appeared winning political forgiveness for his Tidal Basin fligh with the "Argentine Firecracker" last month.

With 72 of 441 precincts reporting in Mills' district in central Arkansas, Mills had 16,561 votes or 55 per cent and Mrs. Judy Petty, making her first political race ever, had 13,517 or 45 per cent.

Mrs. Petty, an attractive 31-year old divercee and former administrative assistant to the late Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller, was giving Mills easily his closest race since he first won election in 1938.

Democrat John Glenn, the first American astronaut to orbit the earth, won landslide election in Ohio's Senate race, swamping Republican Mayor Ralph J. Perk of Cleveland.

President Ford, in re-election cross-country barnstorming to elect Republican candidates, was apparently unable to sway even his home town voters in Grand Rapids, Mich., where Democrat Richard VanderVeen built an early lead over his GOP challenger and held on through the evening last night.

About 145 million Americans were eligible to vote, but off-year turnouts are traditionally low. Forty-three per cent of the eligible voters cast ballots in the last off-year elections, in 1970.

This time apathy and political disenchantment spawned by Watergate, and even rainly weather in the East and Midwest, held turnout even lower. The level of participation will not be known for several days, but as President Ford noted, some surveys indicated a turnout of only 40 per cent of the electorate.

If that is the case, Ford said in an election-eve statement, the 94th Congress which will have to deal with major economic woes could be chosen by only 21 per cent of the voters.

"I don't think anyone wants that kind of minority decision," Ford said. He called on people to vote, whether they be Republican or Democratic, saying that those who shun the polls are "actually voting 'no' to our system of self-government."

Ford's personal campaign spanning nearly 17,000 miles, covered 20 states, and he made inflation his theme. Watergate, the scandal that brought the appointed President to office, was always in the background as he warned against election decisions that could undermine the two-party system.

He raised the spectre of runaway, inflation-fueling spending by a "veto-proof Congress" with Democratic margins that could overrule him by the required two-thirds votes. Actually, even with Democratic dominance, the wholesale overriding of Ford vetoes is not realistic prospect. Philosophic differences within the parties preclude it.

Ford also said that there is a danger of legislative dictatorship.

Issues aside, the Democrats had a hefty head start. In the past five mid-term elections, the party out of the White House has gained an average of 26 seats in the House and four in the Senate.

There were big swings in 1958, a time of recession, when Democrats gained 49 House and 13 Senate seats; and in 1966, a time of adjustment, when Republicans picked up 47 House and 4 Senate seats.

Nixon had no comparable coattails in his 49-state sweep of the 1972 Presidential election. Republicans gained only 11 House seats, and lost two in the Senate.

Never has the face of American politics changed as markedly in two years as since that 1972 landslide.

From Wire Services

BOSTON-- The Democrats increased their majority in the 12 member Massachusetts congressional delegation from nine to 10 when Republican incumbent Paul W. Cronin, a staunch loyalist to former President Nixon was ousted by reform Democrat Paul Tsongas.

Three Democratic congressmen were easily reelected with opposition from minor party and independent candidates.

They were U.S. Reps. Torbet H. MacDonald of Malden in the 7th district; Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Cambridge in the 8th; and John J. Moakley of Boston in the 9th district.

In the 4th District, Democratic incumbent Robert F. Drinan of Newton turned back challenges from independent Jon Rotenberg of Brookline and Republican Alvin Mandell of Newton.

In the 1st district, which includes Amherst and Northampton, Republican incumbent Silvio O. Conte of Pittsfield defeated Democrat Thomas R. Manning of Pittsfield by a 2-1 mrgin.

In the 3rd district, centered around Worcester, Democratic state Rep. Joseph D. Early of Worcester defeated GOP state Rep. David J. Lionett of Worcester in early returns for the seat held by retiring Democratic congressman Harold D. Donohue.

In the 10th district, GOP incumbent Margaret M. Heckler of Wellesley defeated Democrat Barry F. Monahan of Fall River.

Gerry E. Studds of Cohasset, the incumbent Democrat, defeated Republican J. Alan MacKay of Hingham in the 12th district.

Democratic incumbents Edward P. Boland in the 2nd district (including Springfield) , Michael J. Harrington in the 6th district and James A. Burke in the 11th district were unopposed.

In the 5th District, Cronin, a freshman congressman, was considered a slight underdog against Tsongas, a lawyer and Middlesex County Commissioner. The race focused on the district's economy and the candidates' personal finances.

Urges emergency stockpiles

Kissinger says global planning needed for food

ROME [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger declared war yesterday on world hunger and starvation with a five-point blueprint for global action.

He said a concrete and concerted program could end hunger within a generation. He called on oil-rich nations to help pay for it.

Keynoting the United Nations World Food Conference which had been called at his urging, Kissinger told the more than 1,000 delegates from 100 countries including both China and the Soviet Union that they must all "act together to regain control over our shared destiny."

Countries that are able to do so should build up food reserves that other countries could draw on in case of emergency, Kissinger said. Distribution of the stockpiled food should be supervised by an international agency, he said.

U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim opened the 10-day conference at the modernistic Palace of Congresses on the outskirts of Rome. Kissinger gave the keynote address.

Kissinger said the world "may have the technical capacity to free mankind from hunger" but must gear this to globally-planned storage and distribution.

He said that immediately after the conference the United States would convene a group of major exporters to form a program for increasing food production.

The secretary of state urged help from the oil producing countries, whom he partly blames for the current food crisis because they increased oil prices several times over, thus forcing up the price of everything else.

The secretary of state said the oil producers have "a special responsibility" to help finance the war on hunger.

The American secretary also indicated without naming it that the Soviet Union should join the rest of the world in building food reserves.

Kissinger said the long-term picture was even more bleak than the short-range problem. He said the population explosion was closely tied to the food crisis,

"Hundred of millions of people do not eat enough for decent and productive lives." Kissinger said. "In many parts of the world 30 to 50 per cent of the children die before the age of five, many of them from malnutrition.

"World population is projected to double by the end of the century," Kissinger told the conference. He said that at that rate, "at some point we will inevitably exceed the earth's capacity to sustain human life."

He said adequate nutrition for the world by the end of the century would require 150 per cent more food, or a total output of three billion tons of grain every year. He said food reserves would require "as much as 60 million tons over current carryover levels.

Ford awaits results of expected GOP loss

WASHINGTON [UPI] - With a White House aide predicting GOP election loses would fall short of "a horror," President Ford waited in the Oval Office yesterday for results of the congressional races into which he had invested his own efforts to help the Republican party.

Among those who joined the President was John R. Stiles, an old friend from Grand Rapids, Mich., and the manager of Ford's first House race 25 years ago. The two men traditionally have gotten together for the long election night vigil.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen promised Ford would issue a statement when the bulk of the results were in.

"I think the standard off-year election reverses are possible," said Dean Burch, Ford's political counselor. "But I don't anticipate this is going to be a horror."

Nessen added that "the general feeling at the White House is that it is not going to be as bad as some of the predictions make it out."

Polls and forecasters predicted Ford would face a new Congress with an increased Democratic party majority despite his personal appearances in 20 states on behalf of Republican candidates.

Ford traveled 16,700 miles on the campaign trail during the past month. The Republican National Committee, charged with the presidential campaign expenses, paid $2,000 for each hour that Air Force One spent in the air-including the cost of 77,000 gallons of jet fuel.

Rarely has a U.S. chief executive done so much campaigning in a non-presidential election year. Political sources said Ford was motivated partly by a desire to help his party recover from Watergate, but the President also clearly enjoyed the political forays. Ford's speeches made it clear he did not expect this election to reverse the polls or the Democrats' control of Congress.

Defendants told FBI that they knew little

WASHINGTON [UPI] — FBI agents testified yesterday that former Attorney General John N. Mitchell and White House aide John D. Ehrlichman told them in the first month after the 1972 Watergate bugging that all they knew about it was what they read in the newspapers.

Watergate prosecutors called agents Daniel C. Mahan, John Denton and Robert E. Lill in support of charges that Mitchell and Ehrlichman lied to the FBI during the initial stages of the Watergate investigation.

With the conspiracy trial of five of former President Richard M. Nixon's close aides now in its 26th day, chief trial prosecutor James F. Neal prepared to lay the foundation for introducing the tapes of several presidential conversations.

Neal was expected to lead off with Federal Aviation Administrator Alexander P. Butterfield, former White House director of administration who helped install Nixon's taping system.

The five presidential tapes that have been played so far were authenticated by former White House Counsel John W. Dean III, who participated in the conversation. Prosecutors do not have witnesses to authenticate the other tapes, and must lay another foundation for introducing them into evidence.

Presiding Judge John J. Sirica said he clearly heard former White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman, also a defendant, mention the word "Gemstone" in one of the Oval Office tapes recorded June 23, 1972, six days after the break-in.

With the jury of eight blacks and four whites out of the courtroom, Sirica said he heard Haldeman mention "Genstone," the code word for bugging operations at the Democratic National Commitee.

Haldeman has contended he never heard the word until months later. His lawyer, John J. Wilson, said Haldeman used the word "convention."

Sirica ruled that the defendants could not have personal copies of the White House tapes to be transcibed. He said the defendants and their lawyers must continue to listen to the tapes in the special prosecutor's office.

"That's the vice of this whole thing," Haldeman attorney John J. Wilson protested.

"That's the ruling of the court," Sirica said firmly. "Let's proceed.

Mahan and Lill testified that Mitchell told them July 5, 1972, when they interviewed him in his law office he "had no knowledge of the break-in...except for what he had read in newspaper accounts."

Under cross-examination, however, the agents acknowledged that Majan in writing his FBI report had misspelled certain names and got the date wrong.

Bike owners shafted

To the Editor:

The purpose of this letter is to complain about the "service" motorcycles are afforded by the Campus Center garage.

Last year, motorcycles were parked on the inside of the fourth level, where they were protected from the weather and in clear view of the ticket booth, to hamper vandalism. The charge was 25 cents each time the bike was taken out, or the flat rate of $2 a month. This was fine, it got our bikes out of the weather, and gave the garage some extra revenue it otherwise wouldn't get.

This year things changed. First of all, bikes were charged 60 cents a day, or $18 a month, a 900 per cent increase!! In addition, bikes were required to park next to the outside wall, where there is no protection from the elements.

When I asked Mr. Wiskowsli [I think that's his name anyway] why the rates had been raised, he said that bikes were a "nuisance" and if anyone complained, he wouldn't allow them in "his" garage. When I asked who had authorized the rate increase, he said he had. I was informed that he had total autonomy in determining the rates and restrictions on vehicles parking in the garage, and he in his infinite wisdom decided to charge motorcycles a discriminatory charge. I told him that motorcycles needed protection from the weather, which is why we used the garage in the first place, and that bikes used otherwise unusable space, but he didn't care.

What kind of bullshit is this? This clown doesn't like motorcycles in the garage, so he tries to shaft bike owners. I don't like being threatened by someone who I am paying the salary of, and I especially don't like to pay people to shaft me. The Campus Center garage is supposed to provide a service to the University community, but that service is not supposed to be a shafting of some members of that community.

I want to know: Why this clown has autonomy in the setting of rates and other functions of the garage; what right he has to discriminate against motorcycles; what right he has to make threats concerning the use of the garage.

Since I am paying the salary of the position of the Director of the Garage, I want this guy replaced. I want to get my money's worth, and I want someone in charge who is responsive to the people he is supposed to serve. Perhaps the Student Senate can find out why this type of person is allowed authority of such an absolute type. If the garage director must have autonomy, at least get someone in there who knows how to wield power wisely, in a non discriminatory fashion. The present situation is intolerable, inexcusable, and not in the interests of the students or other groups that use the garage at the present time.

Violated rights

To the Editor:

Now is the time for a major revision in both University and Societal policy. The major revision that must be made concerns the regulation [prohibition] of all smoking in public places. The rights of non-smokers have been flagrantly violated both at the University and in Society in general.

The fundamental argument put forth by smokers is that it is their right to smoke where and whenever they feel compelled [themselves] to smoke. By definition, a basic right is one that allows the individual to act in such a way so not as to interfere with or infringe upon the rights of others while behaving as such. Smoking does violate other people's rights because it infringes upon their health. It has been conclusively demonstrated that the cigarette smoke of the smoker damages the health of both the smoker and the non-smoker. Smoke that burns from the cigarette as well as the smoke that is exhaled by the smoker that is not absorbed by the smoker's lungs, is inhaled by the non-smokers in the vicinity of the smoker, causing adverse health effects. Furthermore, the smoke from cigarettes, cigars, pipes, marajuana, and hashish are absorbed on almost all clothing fibres as well as Human hair.

The University classrooms, dining areas, and entertainment places must prohibit any smoking if the rights of non-smoking individuals are to be established. I have been to the University Senate to request that the President submit a referendum that would prohibit smoking in University classrooms, and I have been informed that the President will submit the referendum when he feels like submitting it. Responsible leadership? I think not. The University classrooms and dining areas should be places where their basic purposes can be fulfilled while preserving the rights of individuals. When people smoke in these areas it infringes upon the individuals rights because the individual is not allowed to learn in a classroom free of both adverse physical and psychological effects that are produced by the people around them that are smoking. In addition, the individual is not allowed to enjoy his or her meal and-or entertainment because of the lingering smoke that is present because there is no prohibition of smoking in these very public places.

In conclusion, I address all smokers and non-smokers with the following question: Is it not a basic right of the individual to remain uninfringed upon by the adverse physical effects of cigarette smoke at least in designated areas such as University classrooms and eating areas?

Searching for a director

To the Editor:

Right now there is a Search Committee being set up to fill the position of the Director of the University Food Services Department. This is an extremely important position. It is this person that sets the "tone" for the whole Dining Commons system. This person has an awful lot to do with whether students get the most for their money or not. It is my firm belief that there are many students out there who are not completely satisfied with the Dining Commons as it exists now. I know that there are many students who take a great deal of interest in the price of their meal ticket. If these students are really concerned then I would urge them to apply to be on this Search Committee.

The Search Committee has eight seats reserved for students. We are attempting to get as many people to apply for these as possible. The appointments will be made by the President of the Student Government. The work on the search will consist of the following:

1. a couple of introductory meetings to set general guidelines

2. a review of all applications for the position

3. Interviewing the final candidates during the week of December 8

4. Final prioritization of candidates.

This Search Committee is very important because it has such a great deal to do with the selection of the next permanent Director of Food Services. Applications to join the Committee can be picked up at the Student Senate Office, 420 Student Union until November 8. I hope that many students will take an interest in themselves.

Weiss abandons format

To the Editor:

Fred Weiss has written an article about Ted Kennedy. Let us hope that his article represents a new turn for the Collegian. This is the first time in a long time that something has been said in favor of someone instead of blatent, bigoted, negative opinions. Mr. Weiss has abandoned the usual Collegian format of criticism, arrogance, and pseudo-intellectualism, and instead has offered a compassionate and more realistic way of looking at Sen. Kennedy and the issues that surround him.

Living in Webster

To the Editor:

We the members of the Webster House Council are very upset with the conditions in our dormitory. We have already taken steps within the dorm to alleviate certain conditions but cannot accomplish a great deal without the help of the Physical Plant and Residential Life.

Our complaints stem from unsanitary cleaning procedures such as the vacuuming of the halls only once a week; the understanding amongst janitors that the walls are not to be washed [especially the walls in the showers]; bathrooms are not properly cleaned; the toilets and showerheads in many bathrooms are broken. On top of this, many rooms do not have curtains and wall lights.

We have tolerated these conditions long enough and we expect to see immediate action from the Physical Plant.

Webster House Council

In defense of Deboard

To the Editor:

In reply to Rosanna Falabella's letter, [October 31], I would like to say that she is actually very sharp to so detect seductive sexual overtones, and also very bright to be able to tell people exactly what they mean, when all the time they were in the dark as to what they meant.

Pat Deboard's letter was, as far as I can see both innocent and sincere. All the people whom I have talked to about it, men and women, seem to have missed the part where he asked for all those hideous things which Rosanna Falabella was so enraged over. Pat Deboard is probably very lucky that he wrote nothing more pernicious, I would hate to give Rosanna a reason to be so bitterly enraged, it could be dangerous. As it is, however, the only one who has any true reason to be angry is Pat Deboard, angry at the cheap slander which she felt it her duty to spew onto paper.

By the way Rosanna, I hear you're pretty hot to trot.

Banks not only buyers

To the Editor:

*The letter of Matt Burns [*Collegian, October 21, 1974] exhibits an error that has plagued many recent discussions about UMass dormitories. Mr. Burns states that the only buyers of the dormitory bonds are Chase Manhattan, Merrill Lynch, etc.

The truth is that, in general, these firms act merely as a selling syndicate. They hold the bonds for a day or two, reselling them almost instantly to thousands of buyers around the country. For a small percentage fee, they save UMass the trouble of directly soliciting funds from investors.

In summary, these large financial firms act as pass-through devices. They are part of the ongoing effort to get people to invest in socially useful projects.

Student energies need rechanneling

To the Editor:

In the context of the present controversy, everyone seems to have forgotten, or chosen to ignore, the University's conception of Itself, as expressed time and again by Its professors and administrators. Not just here at UMass, but across the country [and elsewhere]. What, according to most professors, is the main difference between "college" and "university?" A "college" exists, they'll tell you, for the purpose of teaching students something, while a "university" has the function of providing an arena and atmosphere for professional research. Thus, given this definition, the University student must take second priority [at best] to the "intellectual pursuits" of the professors. To protect these pursuits, they set up a strong-handed administration which, like all strong governments, is inevitably doomed to become the usual self-serving bureaucracy which all too often takes charge over the lives of people it has no right to domineer.

As long as this basic set-up exists, it is hopeless, even childish, to hope for any kind of changes from above. Professors and administrators will continue to laugh at student attempts to gain any kind of control over their academic lives, especially undergraduate students. They would much rather see the University go down in a cloud of literary dust, before giving any real ground to students. As far as any one campus is concerned, the struggle for student rights is doomed to up-and-down activism-and-apathy, while the professors hide in their windowless study rooms, knowing full well that the long-term processes of history will show once more that students wield absolutely no real power as students. It will take only a full-scale revamping of the basic societal values and goals before the academic world can become realistic.

Don't waste your energies playing games with Bromery and Wood; use them where they'll affect the system best -- in the streets, on the job. There's a world out there - a more important one than the isolated campus village, and one that's a lot more seriously fucked up than UMass, which is only a small symptom of that greater society. If half of the students organizing around the SGA demands put half their energies into rent-strikes, welfare strikes, consumer boycotts, or organizing alternative communities, the results would be immeasurably greater. These are things that can have a far-reaching effect now.

Collegian going independent?

To the Editor:

Along with our efforts to make the Collegian more responsive to community input, we have been researching the activites, policies, as well as the structural mechanisms of the Collegian. It has come to our attention that the Collegian editors are actively assessing the feasibility of financial independence. Because the Collegian is one of the major vehicles for communication on campus, this is obviously an issue of great importance to the UMass community. The newspaper has a circulation of 23,000, and for many people it is the only source of news and information concerning this campus, the nation, and the world.

Presently, the Collegian's budget totals $280,000. Out of this total $78,000 is Student Activities Tax monies, channeled through the Student Senate. The remaining $202,000 is obtained through advertising. Over the last few years the trend has been moving into the direction of increased advertising. With the increase in the percentage of the budget which is dependent on advertisements, the percentage of the budget which comes from student monies is decreasing. The result has been that the Collegian has become less responsive to student needs and more concerned with attracting advertisers.

It is possible that the Collegian, backed by the financial security of advertising which it has obtained as a result of being a student publication, will attempt to go independent, setting itself up outside of the perameters of the SGA or any other student group. It has reached the point at which this issue should be brought out into the open for discussion and debate.

WE WOULD APPRECIATE RESPONSES CONCERNING THIS ISSUE FROM THE BOARD OF EDITORS, THE COLLEGIAN STAFF, AND MOST IMPORTANTLY, THE STUDENT POPULATION.

Thought for food

For a student who cannot afford to eat properly, food stamps are a blessing from heaven. The problem is a needy person may starve to death before the application is fully processed. According to the Northampton Welfare Office, the delay in processing is due to a shortage of personnel in the local and area offices. It seems there are a lot more hungry people in the Amherst area than was expected.

I began my application for food stamps during the first half of September. Fortunately for me, I had a good supply of peanut butter as well as a few generous friends that have kept me alive since then. Nearly a month after I handed in my application at the Campus Center, I had my interview. That was almost three weeks ago. According to the woman that interviewed me in Munson Hall, I should receive my authorization to purchase food stamps any day now. I sure do hope so, because I'm almost out of peanut butter.

For those in UMieland that have considered food stamps, here are a few bits and pieces that may prove helpful.

First, the application form must be filled out and handed in. It is a typical bureaucratic form that takes a while to figure out and then has no room for anything out of the ordinary. After that, one awaits an appointment for an interview.

Copies of all relevant bills as well as pay check stubs for the past five weeks should be brought in to the interview. At Munson Hall, they already had a copy of my bill from the Bursar's office. If you know that you were not declared as a tax deduction by your parents last year, bring in a document signed by your parents that states that. According to an article that appeared in a Parade magazine a month ago, only students that were not declared are eligible for food stamps, but I was told at my interview that this is not necessarily true. If you have any outstanding loans, you should bring in documentation for then. if possible.

As a student, you may discover a discrepancy between your reality and that which the government bases its food stamp program on. The first is that rent for on campus students is figured on a five month semester. At this university, the fall semester lasts for four months with a six week winter intercession. During this six week period, a student is expected by the University to live elsewhere. Granted that some students are able to live for free during intercession, but some cannot. Unfortunately for them, the government won't let the food stamp interviewer take this into consideration.

The amount of aid a person receives in Food Stamps is determined by need. This is figured by subtracting expenses from income, which seems reasonable. That is, unless one of your major expenses as a college student is books. This is the second glaring discrepancy that I found. Don't most students find that they have to buy books? The federal government no longer considers books an acceptable expense.

For those of you that buy prescription drugs, this is deductable as long as you spend ten dollars a month. If you spend less than that, don't bother to write it down, because it is no longer deductable.

I hope these hints will help those poor hungry folk on this campus. Meanwhile, its time for me to check my mail box for my authorization again. I just hope it arrives before Finast passes on the Amstar sugar price increase to the consumer.

Can public servants strike?

By BOB FOSTER

Thousands of firemen slept comfortably while Montreal burned this past weekend. Little action could be taken to control the conflagration. A handful of supervisors and suburban volunteers desperately tried to contain the fires. But, containment could be the only realistic goal. Saving the structures was an impossible task. "Why did the firemen sleep amid alarms from five major fires," you ask? The answer is plaguingly simple. They were on strike.

The strike is a relatively contemporary phenomena. It finds its roots in theories of social democracy. As the conception of Man's relation to government changed, so did worker's attitudes. Subservience was no longer the focal point of the worker-employer relationship. Instead, democracy, or more specifically, egalitarianism took the employment spotlight. Workers discovered that they were no longer simply means of production in a giant, inalterable process. Instead, they became humans with individual rights and needs. Together, they formed collectives; for in union, there is strength. Organization bred power. Unions became the oligopolistic creatures that they are today.

Incidents such as the Montreal fires bring forth a question that has been plaguing government since the formation of unions of public servants. How does one balance the need for public services with the human desire to unionize and demand? More specifically, at what point must society clamp down on the demands of striking public servants? How many lives can be lost before the fireman returns to the station, the policeman to the beat? Montreal seems to show that when public health and welfare is the obvious cost, the strike is an irrational and outmoded weapon.

The firemen of Montreal were extremely lucky. Not a single fire-related death occurred during their inaction. Only a few serious injuries and thousands of dollars worth of damage resulted. Luck was the only factor that saved their collective conscience. Death due to negligence always creates the heaviest burden upon the conscience of the individual. And indeed, in spite of their demands, the men were negligent in their duty to the ultimate degree. Total inaction in the face of crisis is the most unforgivable of sins.

Many may consider my judgment of these men as harsh and inconsiderate. But, such is not the case. For I depend upon a singular value in my judgment, the ultimate value of human life. Property damage or loss can be forgotten or repaired. Injury is a bit harder to justify. But death is unjustifiable when it could have been prevented.

Death was not a factor in the Montreal incident. Yet, the potential was there. Only fate or luck or divine will (depending upon your philosophy) interceded. Perhaps the next time they will not be so fortunate. Maybe next time the tiny infant or the elderly woman will perish because of a strike.

Do not misunderstand me though. Workers, students, professors, administrators, etc. do have rights. These rights to life and happiness should not be compromised. But, in the simultaneous equation of life, these same individuals must understand the rights of those citizens that they protect. Compulsory and totally binding arbitration on all parties seems to be at least a partial solution. Let's pray that a strike of this sort never inadvertently takes the life of an innocent victim. Luck prevailed. Pray that it continues!

Election reflection

I'm getting ready for another election day, and thinking about what each election has meant to me. You won't be reading this until after all the results are in, but there's always that kind of weird, suspenseful feeling about going into any election. I recognize the falsehoods and malpractices of politics as well as anyone else, and it often bothers me to know that the political world is so classless and degrading.

But you know? Elections — they don't have to be so crude and leave such a foul taste in your mouth. It's the public that demands that their leaders are good actors, who say alot, but don't get anything done. A candidate that really addresses the issues with solid proposals is so often labeled "radical" by the voters and the press that he-she loses continuously.

It's that very same public that asks its politicians to speak the truth without doubletalk, that is usually turned off when the truth is voiced. It's easy to find one thing to disagree on with every politician, but its so hard to find someone that says something real.

An old campaigner just keeps on campaignin'.

This is the first time I've ever been on the side of a candidate that was favored, but it wasn't that easy for Collins in 1972. But he's a good candidate and, if there is such a thing, a good politician. There is little doubt in my mind that Jim will win this year, and its a good thing, because he's been saying and doing things, and he knows what he's talking about (a rare commodity for politicians).

So getting ready for this election day just comes natural. All the work's been done and it's all up to you, the voters, to see what happens today. It should be interesting to read this in the same paper with all the election returns. By now, you all know if there's a new governor and if Frank Bellotti has sleazed by again.

But if there's one feeling that every politician has on every election day, it's that feeling of making or breaking dreams, which fill the air of every campaign so greatly that it's hard to see the reality of the outcome. This is my last election as a UMass student, and things are going to look different next time around. But I know what day it is today and that's all I can think about right now.

U.S. "Tar Baby Plan" revealed

Recently disclosed secret documents, prepared by Henry Kissinger, have revealed widespread support in the highest levels of the U.S. government for the white racist regimes in Southern Africa. The documents were disclosed in an article appearing in the October, 1974 issue of Esquire magazine.

"We would maintain public opposition to racial repression but relax political isolation and economic restrictions on the white states," the document states. The document made clear such a stance would create an explosive condition in the U.S. and abroad if it became public knowledge, so it directed the State Dept. to say one thing while doing another.

The document grew out of a 1969 memorandum from President Nixon to Kissinger---then Nixon's national security council advisor--to draw up a "comprehensive review of U.S. policy towards southern Africa (south of Zaire and Tanzania)."

On August 15, 1969, Kissinger presented five possible African policy "postures" to the National Security Council (NSC), and elite group of foreign policy and security planners which advises the president. The postures ranged from complete acceptance and overt support for white-ruled African states, to support of black insurgent struggles. Late in 1969, the NSC formally approved the "Tar Baby" option which favored communications" with white supremacist states, linked with covert support.

Perhaps the most significant recommendation made by Tar Baby's "General Posture" statement was the gradual relaxation of the U.S.'s military sanctions against the Republic of South Africa. The first step, according to Tar Baby, was to "relax" the arms embargo against South Africa with liberal treatment of equipment which could serve either civilian or military purposes or which could serve the common defense."

On the difficulty of the U.S. maintaining even covert support to racially repressive countries in the face of international opinion--especially resentment from Third World countries--the memorandum cooly calculated, "our interests are clearly worth retaining at their present political costs. These interests include access to air and naval facilities for which alternatives are expensive or less satisfactory, a major tracking station, and significant investments and balance of trade advantages."

The real reason of course, that the National Security advisors decided to support the white racist governments has more to do with the $2.4 billion in U.S. investments in the region, and the desire for military security and allies, as well as a basic affinity between the policy makers and fellow whites. Whereas there isn't a single passage in the entire 111 page National Security Study Memorandum that says supporting racism is wrong (only that it might backfire politically), "chaos", "black insurgent violence" and "communism are treated as inherent evils."

Since the implementations of Tar Baby, U.S. investments in South Africa have nearly doubled. The U.S. has broken United Nation sanctions on Rhodesia and is largely responsible for propping up the Rhodesian economy.

A regular stream of top level advisors shuttle back and forth between South Africa and the United States at a rate higher than "any time in the last thirty years," as a South African newspaper put it.

"U.S. lies"

Ever since the unjust, inhumane and Barbaric War against the rightous peoples of Vietnam, the Economy of the United States entered into a recession state. This recession was heightened by an increasing hostility and isolation from the peoples of the exploited world, and a few "self interested" European countries namely France-who was sitting by ready to capitalized on markets that the United States was being forced to give up.

To offset this double jeopardy and at the same time to fulfill the only motivating factor of business ie profits, inflation set in which once more worsened the living standard of the American people. To offset the rising discontent of their domestic population, the capitalist conjured up our "Oil Crisis" which became uncontrollable.

The press as an instrument of the power structure - remember the Cold War, McCarthyite Witch Hunt, the distruction of Black leaders and liberation forces - took up the banner and began to cast racial aspersions at the Arabs, blaming them for the inevitable distruction of Western Civilization and chronic crisis that the United States was in.

What they didn't reveal to the public was that it was the CIA who instituted the Shah of Iran, that both Saudi Arabia and Iran are pro-United States, with two of the most sophisticated armies in the world today equipped exclusively with United States weaponry. What the press didn't bring out is that food prices have increased much more rapidly than oil prices. The press didn't reveal to the public that the reason for the "Oil Crisis" was just merely to shake the economic of the rest of the capitalist world, to convince America that no matter what the circumstance might be America is still the greatest country, the most secure and the most stable.

The press-might have succeeded in convincing their ignorant populace, but weren t successful in convincing the most oppressed group in this country namely-Third World populace, who are quite familiar with the lies that the power structure-through their various organs-perpetuates.

They are beginning to realize that now that their Brothers and Sisters in the Third World are capitalizing on the weakness and shortcomings of this greedy, avaricious and Barbaric society its imperative that they heightened the Struggle in the "Belly of the Monster". Now more than ever the circumstances are very ripe for a peoples' struggle and victory in this country.

If oppressed people do not seize on the weakness of the oppressor we will be giving them time to regain their strength and it will be a very long time again before we will ever have this opportunity. Seize the time.

UMW critical of coal mine safety policies

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer
Part 2 of a 2 part series

The rate of disabling injuries among all coal miners is twice the national average for other industries.

Everett Acord and Jonathan Williams are two of the 50 UMW safety coordinators across the country. It's their job to see to it that safety complaints from the men are quickly called to the attention of the companies and the federal mine safety inspectors.

Both men are former miners. Both are also outspoken in their criticism of safety policies of the state, the coal companies and the federal safety inspectors who are charged with enforcement of the voluminous federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969.

Their sentiments were reflected in Washington, where mine safety became the most controversial issue in the complex negotiations between the UMW and coal company representatives for a national contract to replace the three-year agreement that expires Tuesday Nov. 12.

The issue is packed with emotion. More than 100,000 miners have been killed since the turn of the century, and safety is a topic that will quickly bring an argument here in the coalfields.

Under the expiring contract, each UMW mine has an elected, three-man safety committee composed of miners. If the committee thinks a section of the mine is unsafe, it recommends to management that the situation be corrected. But the company is under no obligation to close the mine, unless the committee members feel the situation constitutes "imminent danger." Then they are empowered, under the contract, to immediately pull the men from the mine.

"There's been a number of cases where the committees have done this," says Acord. "But the trouble is that there's a lot of 18-and 19-year-old miners these days and many men are now in the mines who don't realize when they're working under conditions that constitute imminent danger."

The United Mine Workers have argued for years that they must have the final say on all mine safety, whether or not "imminent danger" is involved. The companies' reply has been that they would lose control of the mines if the union had the final decision on safety.

Acord said: "The companies have safety people and some of them are good...But they're always under some production-oriented supervisor. And some of those inspectors are just plain incompetent...As it is now, our safety committeemen must work eight hours and then make inspections on their own time. We want the companies to pay for the men for safety work and we want them to recognize the fact that we're serious about safety."

Israel rejects PLO's legitimacy as U.S. steps up arms shipments

By United Press International

Israel yesterday rejected the Arab summit's recognition of the Palestine Liberation Organization as sole representative of the Palestinian people. It warned Arab leaders it was a dangerous illusion to think military force would solve the Middle East crisis.

The Israeli warning was delivered even as Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger flew to Cairo to see if he could repair earlier peace efforts damaged by the Arab summit decisions in Morocco.

It came after Israeli helicoptor-borne troops crossed five miles into Lebanon, and blew up a house in the village of Majdal Zoun the military command said was used by Arab guerrillas. They returned with two suspected guerrilla collaborators - the village mayor and one of his sons.

In a policy speech to the Knesset parliament designed as a response to the summit decisions, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said Israel has enlarged its armed forces and embarked on a big weapons procurement program.

Diplomats in Washington said the United States is speeding up shipments of arms and aircraft to Israel following a request last week to Secretary of Defense James R. Schlesinger by Israeli Ambassador Simcha Dinitz.

The Arabs at Rabat recognized the PLO as the sole representative of the Palestinian people and authorized it to set up a Palestine state in occupied areas given up by Israel.

"The government of Israel categorically rejects the conclusions of the Rabat conference, which are designed to disrupt any progress towards peace, to encourage the terrorist elements and to foil any step which might lead to peaceful coexistence with Israel," Rabin said.

"The government of Israel will not negotiate with terrorist organizations whose avowed policy is to strive for Israel's destruction and whose method is terrorist violence.

"We warn the Arab leaders against making the mistake of thinking that threats or even the active employment of the weapon of violence or of military force will lead to a political solution. This is a dangerous illusion."

He said the size of Israel's standing army has been increased, methods of mobilization improved, large scale fortifications were under construction and "large arms purchasing efforts have been made."

Nixon walks in pain; out of real danger

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] - Former President Richard Nixon is "terribly physically weak" and in pain when he walks but does not want to spend another week in the hospital, it was reported yesterday.

The regular medical bulletin said gradually increased physical activity had been ordered for the 61-year-old Nixon who Monday took his first steps since an operation and lapse into shock a week ago.

Julie Nixon Eisenhower, who had been near her father's bedside much of that time, was back in Washington - an indication he is considered out of imminent danger.

Although doctors want to treat him at Long Beach Memorial for at least another 10 days or two weeks, Nixon was reported by a White House aide in Washington to have told his family and staff he wants to get out much sooner.

"He is in much better shape - cussing out everybody," the aide said.

The daily report by Dr. John Lungren said Nixon was being given intermittent "positive pressure breathing treatment" to combat the congestion of a small amount of fluid in his left lung.

Studies are also being made of a condition in the right lung known as atelectasis-an inactive area of lung tissue.

"The former president is terribly physically weak," Lungren said. "He also still has some pain when he moves in the area of the hematoma, the blood mass in his left flank."

Nixon was reported by another source close to the family to have had three meals Monday and to have lost the hoarseness in his voice.

Kent State testimony continues

CLEVELAND [UPI] — An FBI agent testified yesterday that one of eight former Ohio National Guardsmen on trial here told him a "second lieutenant fired a shot toward" a crowd of demonstrators at Kent State University and heard guard troops open fire at the same time.

Four students were killed and nine wounded during an anti-war demonstration on campus May 4, 1970. Two of those who were wounded testified earlier yesterday.

Agent Thomas Murphy testified in U.S. District Court at the trial of the former guardsmen who have been charged with conspiring to violate the civil rights of the dead and wounded students. No officers of the Guard were indicted.

Union walkout makes coal strike more likely

WASHINGTON [UPI] - A coal miners strike next week - which could dim the nation's lights, sharply curb steel production and add hundreds of thousands to the unemployment rolls - appeared certain yesterday, despite union promises of new contract proposals.

United Mine Workers union leaders walked out of contract talks early yesterday and although a union spokesman said "we're busy working on our own proposals," there seemed little chance an agreement could be achieved and a contract ratified before the deadline at midnight Monday.

No further talks were scheduled, but a spokesman said the coal mine operators "fully expect to hear from the guys (UMW representatives)."

The contract covers 120,000 UMW members in 25 states, who produce about 70 per cent of the country's coal. Experts predicted a lengthy strike would disrupt electric utilities, especially in the southeast where stockpiles are low.

A Georgia Power Co. official said in Atlanta the company might be forced to institute "rotating blackouts" in all parts of the state if there is a prolonged coal strike.

Major steel mills also have less than three weeks inventory of coal and the industry estimates some furnaces would start to close down within two weeks.

The Federal Office of Emergency Preparedness estimated the spin-off results of prolonged strike could add 600,000 to 1 million workers to the already-high unemployment rolls.

Guy Farmer, general counsel of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, said the operators gave the UMW "an offer that in my opinion has not been exceeded in any negotiations in any major industry in total scope."

But UMW President Arnold Miller responded by leading his officials out of the negotiating session and declaring, "With this contract proposal they've declared a strike in the coal fields."

Jon Hite, Collins' campus co-ordinator, said he "expected about 60 per cent turnout which is good considering the bad weather and mid-terms."

Amherst followed the voting pattern of the rest of the state with Michael Dukakis sweeping 3,654 votes to incumbent Francis W. Sargent's 2,372.

Leo Kahian, the American Party's candidate for governor polled 73 votes and the Socialst Workers' candidate Donald Gurewitz polled 233.

Democrat Paul Guzzi, newly elected Secretary of State, tallied 3,089 votes to Republican John Quinlan's 2,141. However, in the race for Attorney General, Amherst didn't go for the winner.

Republican Josiah Spaulding, who lost statewide, polled 4,075 to Bellotti's 1,156.

Representative Collins, a former UMass Student Senate President, said there was statewide recognition of Bellotti but the town looked at each of the two candidates and decided to go for Spaulding.

Reupublican U.S. Congressman Silvio Conte continued his relelection streak in Amherst, polling 3,639 votes to Democrat challenger Thomas Manning's 1,779.

Voters in Amherst were faced with two referendum questions concerning nuclear power when they went to the polls yesterday. One question asked whether the state senator from the district should be directed to oppose construction of a proposed nuclear power plant at Montague, Mass, 15 miles north of Amherst.

The other question asked voters to instruct their state senator whether he should sponsor a resolution calling for the dismantling of nuclear power plants at Rowe, Mass., and Vernon, Vermont.

Soviet sailor freed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — State Department officials said yesterday a Lithuanian sailor who was turned back to the Russians at sea by the U.S. Coast Guard after he tried to seek political asylum in 1970 had left Moscow for the United States.

Officials said Simas Kudirka left Moscow by plane with his Brooklyn-born mother, his wife and two children -but they would give no details on whether he was flying directly to the United States or stopping en route.

Kudirka was arrested and sent to the Vladimir prison camp north of Moscow after his abortive attempt at freedom Nov. 23, 1970.

The 44-year-old seaman gained worldwide attention when he leaped from the deck of the Soviet fishing trawler Sovetskaya Litva to the Coast Guard cutter Vigilant off the coast of Massachusetts.

Although Kudirka begged for political asylum, the Vigilant commander allowed the Soviets to take him back after the Russians beat him almost unconscious on the U.S. ship.

Springfield public defenders seeking student volunteers

Attention all students interested in a future in law or any law-related field.

The Public Defenders of Springfield are looking for volunteers with your academic background and obvious interest in the judicial process to serve as social services workers and criminal investigators.

In return for what is really a very small part of your time (2-3 days a week), the Public Defenders can offer you the invaluable experience of working inside a criminal courtroom and being an actual part of what is happening there. You will also get a taste of the street life of Springfield, where you will learn how to use community resources to communicate with the people and their problems.

In a sense, the internship can be whatever you want to make of it; there will be few limitations on the work you will be doing, and you will find that most of the assignments come directly from one of the nine attorneys. Though your training may seem somewhat informal and the office facilities a little less than ideal, the learning experience you can have with the Public Defenders can give a whole new meaning to your undergraduate education, a very real and practical application of things that you have only read in books up until now.

This is a chance to reach out to some people who really need your help. And it is a chance to work with some of the finest and most dedicated professionals that you will ever meet.

Don't let the most exciting experience of your education pass you by. For more information, contact Debbie Cohen, Mass Defenders Committee, 19 Catherine Street, Springfield, Mass 01109 or call 736-2735. Get in touch with Joe Sullivan at the Outreach office on campus if you are interested in obtaining academic credit for your internship.

Physical Education plans majors' club

All majors in the Department of Professional Preparation in Physical Education and Dance are invited to meet tonight, at 7:00 p.m. in Room 153 of the North Physical Education Building. Several majors have expressed a desire to coordinate a student organization or club.

The development of a Physical Education Major's Club would provide a representative group who could establish communication with the Department Administration and Faculty, elect student membership to serve on Department Committees, elect student membership to serve on the Student Committee of the State Association.

Also they would plan special programs requested by their peers, assist in bringing guest speakers to campus, and provide a much needed dimension of student leadership.

If you have questions, please contact Arlan Barber at 545-2323.

Hampshire to vote on clerical union

On November 15 the clerical staff at Hampshire College will vote on whether or not to form a union local of District 65 of the Distributive Workers of America.

The organizing effort at Hampshire began last January as a result of the staff's discontent with their working conditions at the College. Included in the greivances are: job insecurity, low wages, inadequate benefits, lack of promotional opportunities and administrative paternalism.

Bullet in brain threatens life

Serpico, in Netherlands, happier, more radical

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

HAARLEM, Netherlands [AP] — Frank Serpico, the lonely crusader who helped expose widespread graft in the New York City police department, gazed out the cafe window at two long-haired Dutch cops going by in a mini squad car.

The one next to the driver was a lady cop, blonde and pretty.

"Happy as larks," observed the former plainclothesman whose fight against police payoffs and official cover-ups shook the administration of Mayor John Lindsay and became a best selling book and hit movie. "Cops over here are respected. They relate to the people. They aren't plotting ways to put you in jail to meet arrest quotas.

"Policemen in Switzerland are even listed in the phone book, so someone in trouble can call them up at home. In New York it's still a big deal getting them to live inside the city limits. Here cops on the beat can wear long hair, beards, earrings, anything they like."

Serpico, known to prostitutes in the other Harlem as "The Beard," studied his own collar-length hair and neat spade beard in the mirror. He tugged the gold earring in his good ear and ordered up a genever, a "young" Holland gin.

For more than two years now, Serpico has been in self-exile abroad, almost constantly on the move, trying to find himself and maybe - he smiles wanly at the suggestion - trying to lose somebody. Both he and Alfie have trouble sleeping.

He was warned, he testified in court, they were going to "do a job" on him and he could end up "face down in the East River" for giving evidence against fellow plainclothesmen on the take from gamblers.

Serpico stood apart in the ranks of the New York police department, the nation's largest, as one of the few officers ever to report corruption and then voluntarily take the stand against crooked cops. For breaking the unwritten precinct house law that in effect puts cops above the law, he was shunned and hated by his fellow officers and written precinct house law that in effect puts cops above the law, he was shunned and hated by his fellow officers and written off as a "psycho" by his superiors.

Four years had gone by since a cop on riot duty in Brooklyn handed him an envelope containing $300 with the words "It's from Jewish Max." It had been more than three years since he tried to get high administration officials interested in the existence of a "pad," an organized system of bribes from numbers operators that was netting dishonest cops $800 a month in the south Bronx division to which he was assigned.

Frustrated at departmental foot dragging, Serpico at last took his story to The New York Times. The resulting newspaper series caused a sensation. In the fallout of related events, the embarrassed mayor appointed the independent Knapp Commission to investigate police corruption. Amid a welter of indictments and federal investigations, the police commissioner resigned, the department was reorganized and its rules revamped, holding field commanders responsible for the conduct of their men. Precinct captains were banished to the sticks and there was an exodus of retiring top brass.

Walking the streets of the old Haarlem, which long ago gave its name to the New York ghetto, Frank Serpico, now 38 and retired on a disability pension, tries as much as he can to forget the past and live in the present.

"I don't look beyond tomorrow," he said, turning his right ear to the peal of bells from the town hall clock. "The way my head is now, I don't think I'll be around very long. Who wants to live forever?"

Besides the unknown enemies Alfie listens for, there is the enemy within, the bullet fragments still lodged in his brain that could begin moving at any time, bringing total paralysis or death. The lost hearing in his left ear causes him to lose his balance in the dark and become confused when sound comes from several directions.

Always a loner, The Beard abroad has become even "more radicalized, more anti-establishment" than in the days when his hippie clothes, bushy hair and swinging Greenwich Village life-style made other cops suspicious of him. He was a crack shot and a karate expert, but he didn't "belong to the club." He liked ballet and opera, kept T.S. Eliot's poems in his locker and, he laughs, "didn't stash money in mason jars out in the back yard to avoid embarrassing bank accounts."

The dust has settled now, and every crooked cop he testified against has served his sentence and gone free. Serpico wonders if he would do it all over again.

MassPIRG praises Amherst on privacy issue

MassPIRG has applauded recent actions by Amherst town officials improving citizen access to public records. PIRG encouraged other communities in the Commonwealth to adopt similar measures.

On Monday, October 21, Selectmen of the Town of Amherst adopted new procedures encouraging enforcement of Chapter 1050 of the Acts of 1973, the new Massachusetts "Freedom of Information Act." The selectmen recommended the establishment of a local appeals procedure and requested an administrative order from the town manager outlining a uniform procedure for the release of the documents.

Attorney David G. Burwell, MassPIRG Freedom of Information Project Director, indicated that Amherst's action will encourage compliance with the Act that went into effect July 1, 1974. Burwell stated that "A weakness in the Act is the lack of any provision that guarantees enforcement of the Act on the local level. By the institution of a local appeal procedure for citizens denied public records, the Town of Amherst has set the pace for the adoption of similar measures in other communities."

The action by the Amherst officials came in the wake of a September 27, 1974 MassPIRG report indicating that the new Act had done little to increase citizen access to public documents. Mass PIRG is contacting the 24 cities and towns surveyed in the report to encourage those communities to adopt procedures similar to those adopted by the Town of Amherst.

UFW picket turned away 60-100 shoppers

The Progressive News Service is the result of many people's need for free access to the media on a regular basis. Anyone who wishes to write an article or a series of articles, should submit them to the Progressive News Service, c-o Veteran's Coalition in the Student Union, second floor.

By STEVE ROWLEY
Progressive News Service

In response to a call for support from local United Farmworkers boycott committees, close to 60 students from the 5-College area joined a Mass Picket as the Holyoke Shop-Rite supermarket last Saturday.

The purpose of the event was to call attention to the fact that Shop-Rite is one of two chains in the Western Massachusetts-Northern Connecticut area which is allegedly failing to honor the UFW's grape and lettuce boycott.

Through singing, chanting, leafleting and conversation, the picketers were able to turn between 60 and 100 shoppers away from the store. Although the reasons for shoppers' support may have varied considerably, each turn away served to put economic pressure on the store.

The picketers hoped that this pressure along with that from picket lines organized on store throughout the rest of the chain, will serve to show Joe Mott, head of the Shop-Rite chain, that workers in this area will not tolerate the denial of workers' right to a choice of union representation, even if that denial effects only workers on the west coast.

The mass picket was seen as being successful in drawing attention to the plight of the migrants and the consumers' control over that situation. Weekly pickets at each of the Shop-Rite stores will continue, drawing support from those who pledged their aid at the mass picket, until Shop-Rite agrees to stop carrying non UFW lettuce and grapes.

Workers on the UFW boycott have announced that 7.1 Million lugs of grapes are now in cold storage on the west coast, the market for such produce having been so severely effected by the strength of the boycott. This amount of grapes is more than has ever before been stockpiled in California and the agricultural corporations have left grapes hanging on the vines because of lack of storage space.

In the past, when the United Farmworkers were able to win contracts, it was after such a serious decline in the market for grapes. Also seen as an indication of the union's strength are recent activities in the tree-fruit orchards and wine vinyards. Grower in the tree fruit area this year, because of use of scab labor, picked fruit ranging from over-ripe to undersized from trees in one picking, usual practice involves 3-4 pickings which allows for the harvest of the fruit when it is ripe and full-sized, but not yet rotting. Such a harvest has caused a 40-50 per cent throw-away rate of the fruit when such a rate is usually only less than 10 per cent.

The reason for limiting the harvest to one picking is seen by the UFW to be a result of the constant walk-outs of the scab laborers. Elsewhere, in vineyards owned by Ernest and Julio Gallo, the nation's largest wine producers, machines are being used to harvest the grapes, following a strike of workers who refused to work under Teamster's Union contract. According to the UFW, grapes that used to go into Gallo wine, spiders, mice, pieces of grape vine, and pesticide coated leaves automatically "harvested" by the non-discriminating machines, are used to make up the ingredients of the "pop wines" such as Boones Farm, Ripple, Spanada and Thunderbird as well as other Modesto wines.

As a result of the effectiveness of the Gallo boycott throughout the country, UFW boycott members have encountered threats of violence against themselves and liquor stores which have agreed to conform to the Gallo boycott, as well as threats by the Teamsters that refusal to accept Gallo deliveries will result in a halt of deliveries of all liquors to the liquor stores. Such efforts against UFW supporters are seen by the UFW as the result of an expensive public relations campaign for Gallo which was probably triggered by a considerable decline in Gallo sales (reported as being down 17 per cent last summer by the Wall Street Journal).

Upcoming activities for which the local committees are asking support include an Anti-inflation rally to be held in Springfield on November 16, sponsored by local labor groups and another Mass Picket to be held on November 23 at the Boston Rd., Springfield Shop-Rite.

Professor Burroughs' funeral to be held in Amherst today

Funeral services will be held today for Professor Joseph D. Burroughs at 2 p.m. in Grace Episcopal Church in Amherst.

A long time member of the Human Development Department and a faculty member at Project Ten, Burroughs died in his sleep Sunday night of an apparent heart attack.

Burroughs, a graduate of the University of Virginia and formerly a member of the faculty at Cornell, was 58 years old.

He was planning to take a leave of absence next semester and take part in a human development project in Hawaii.

In addition to his duties as a tenured member of the Department of Human Development, Burroughs was most active in the BDIC program and Project Ten-Pierpont. Always an innovator, Borroughs was constantly open to new ideas, was always concerned with the needs of his students, many of whom he loved as if they were his own son or daughter.

In lieu of flowers, a memorial scholarship in his name is being set up.

Red tide studied

BOSTON [AP] — Public health officials believe future outbreaks of paralytic shellfish poisoning, also known as the red tide, may be predictable.

The first international conference on red tide ends here today under the sponsorship of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Sea Grant program and the Massachusetts Science and Technology Foundation.

There have been three outbreaks of the marine algae that form red tide since it was first spotted in Massachusetts in the fall of 1972.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Tensions and counter-tensions on the celestial scene make a precisely predictable week all but impossible. Ups and downs on all levels of life cause careers to bloom or fade personal relationships to be strengthened or diminished with little warning either way. Occupations and preoccupations are apt to bring material gain one day and little but frustration and disappointment the next. Lovers are inclined to quarrel; enemies may quite suddenly find a pathway to friendship emerging from the unexpected discovery of much in common. There is little to bolster egos on the one hand — and must to instill self-confidence on the other. Success and failure seem at times to vie with each other for the last word, while good moods and bad alternate in swift succession.

Those who are wise in the ways of the world will make no plans that are not flexible. More important than a basis in soundness where plans are concerned this week is an ability to change horses mid-stream — or anywhere else that circumstances demand. This is no week for those who are set in their ways — but it is also no week for those who insist that the new and different are all that are important, all that will insure progress. Rather, this is a week when the new and the old must exist in harmony together, just as the usual and the unusual must be at peace with each other.

SCORPIO (Oct. 22-Nov. 7) — There is no excuse for ignoring the advice of others. Make certain that you know which side your bread is buttered on this week. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — Business affairs are such that there may be much confusion early in the week. Make an effort to cooperate with co-workers — even those you dislike.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — Though a number of new schemes may present themselves early in the week, you would do well to ignore all but the most flexible. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — If you would add appreciably to your business or professional income, act at once on the suggestion of one who has recently known great success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Investigate any new plans for gain, especially should you be asked for a cash contribution to get the scheme underway. Take your time. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Profits run high where partnership activities are concerned. On the other hand, there is much to indicate that present partnerships may dissolve.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Take no notice of those who are blowing their own horns. There is much to be gained by sharing knowledge about present endeavors. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — Execute your plans quickly — but don't rely on other people's approval of them. Results may not be what you expected — though they may well be good.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 5) — Promises may be kept even though you may have changed your mind about what prompted them. Don't be surprised to be charged with error. (March 6-March 20) — If you would be able to take advantage of present opportunities, take the time and effort needed to inform higher-ups of your abilities.

ARIES (March 21-April 4) — A week when flattery, though it may be easy to apply to another's ego, will gain you very little. Take care not to rest on your laurels. (April 5-April 19) — Logic serves you well, when it serves you at all, this week. Don't be alarmed should the illogical seem to take over now and again.

TAURUS (April 20-May 5) — Keep to what you know well, especially during the early days of the week when success is an unpredictable outcome of time and effort. (May 6-May 20) — Make your ideas practical ones and you will have little to fear. from higher-ups should a diminishing of the labor force be in the making. Remain alert.

GEMINI (May 21-June 6) — Conservative action must be alternated with progressive action if you are to be able to take advantage of what the week has to offer. (June 7-June 20) — Present profits may not be enough to gain your ultimate ends. Make your way easier by following the advice of an old friend. Remember an old rule.

CANCER (June 21-July 7) — Take care not to plan too much activity this week. This is an excellent time for changing your life-style — but only if loved ones agree. (July 8-July 22) — Be wise in your selection of the week's activities. Otherwise, you may choose with an eye to profits only and, thus, bring failure upon yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 7) — Disruptions on the home front cannot be counted upon to disturb things on the employment scene. The ways and means prescribed may not be sufficient. (Aug. 8-Aug. 22) — A fast-moving week during which difficulties with present business or profession increase in some aspects and decrease in others.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — A tendency to begin immediately to act upon any suggestions others may offer may make this a week of unexpected surprises for all. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Impulsive moves may not be as difficult to deal with as usual this week. Where youngsters are concerned, think over your advice once again.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Delay carrying out intentions. Otherwise, you may find that you have blocked your own changes of heart and mind. Consider new reforms. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Unless you can deal efficiently with lapses of discipline on the home front, you can hardly expect to deal with them on the employment scene. Act!

David Johnston, University Director of Public Safety (l), congratulates newly promoted Captain Robert Joyce (r) in ceremonies held yesterday in Dickinson Hall. Captain Joyce has been a member of the UMass police for over ten years.

Department of Public Safety promotes Joyce to captain

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

In a small ceremony yesterday, Robert Joyce of the UMass Department of Public Safety was promoted to Captain of the force.

Joyce will be in charge of Police and Security Operations as well as some administrative work. In addition, Joyce will have direct command over Patrol-Security Services; Investigative Services; Parking Enforcement; Planning-Training-Research; Records Division; and Community Relations, said Chafin.

During his nine years with the force, Joyce worked in the Patrol Division until February 1972, when he was promoted to Sergeant. His main duty as Sergeant was one of shift supervision.

Joyce is responsible for establishing UMass' first Criminal Justice Training Institute, when he was temporarily assigned to the Training Division here.

During February 1973, as Staff Sergeant in the Planning-Research-Training Division, Joyce was responsible for all recruit training in the Criminal Justice Training Institute, stationed at UMass, and serving the Five College Area.

Joyce's other accomplishment's include research on the Massachusetts General Law, from which he developed a criminal law manual. The manual is currently being used at various colleges.

At present, Joyce is enrolled in courses at Holyoke Community College, where he is seeking an Associate Arts degree in Police Science.

Among the various training programs he has attended are: the New England Command Training Institute at Babson College, Massachusetts State Police Crime Scene Search and Criminalistic School, and Bomb identification and Search Techniques School of ATF Division of the U.S. Treasury Department.

In his spare time, Joyce is a Senior Vice-Commander of the Veteran's of Foreign Wars, and a baseball coach in the Northampton Little League.

Senate to discuss veto power, UMass town meeting tonight

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Discussion of the UMass town meeting, a motion to remove all veto power from the Vice-Chancellor's office, and a motion to amend the SGA constitution by adding the Affirmative Action Guidelines will be on the Student Senate Meeting Agenda tonight at 7 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center.

Cindy McGrath, Speaker of the Senate said, "The motion to remove all veto power from the Vice-Chancellor's office may be controversial. The wording is nebulous and ambiguous." McGrath also said it doesn't mention which veto power it wants to remove.

McGrath is preparing a leaflet about the town meeting that will be passed out tonight to each senator for distribution among their constituencies.

The UMass town meeting will be held Monday, November 11th at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, and the meeting is open to the public.

McGrath also said a list of reforms and system changes will tentatively be presented on a warrant at the town meeting. The warrant will contain issues that will be discussed.

"A clear cut idea of collective bargaining as an agent to changing systems is an issue that will be discussed," McGrath said.

Group urges students to support abortion

By CATHERINE KOZELL
Staff Reporter

Concerned that Catholic groups are gaining support in their fight to overturn the Supreme Court's decision on abortion, a group of pro-abortionists operating from the Campus Center Concourse are urging students to write politicians supporting abortion.

The Supreme Court ruled last year that abortion be left up to the individual's conscience and that states could not legislate against abortion.

"A lot of people felt that the Supreme Court decision was final. This isn't the case at all because of very important 'Right to Life' lobbies supported by the Catholic Church which have been influencing Congress people," said Sherry Flashman, an organizer of the group.

Both men and women on campus have given a "very good" response so far to the campaign's efforts, Flashman said.

Although today is scheduled to be the last day for the display on the concourse, the organizers encourage students to continue to write their congressmen and senators indicating their opposition to the three amendments which have been filed to negate the Supreme Court.

"The issue is not over and it's very important for people to actively organize and write to protect the Supreme Court Ruling," Sherry said.

Senator Edward Kennedy, along with Representative Silvio Conte, have made public their disagreement, or need for review of the Supreme Court decision. The organizers hope the postcards and-or letters will be able to shift their votes as well as others who presently have the same feeling.

Senator Brooke is reportedly in favor of the decision made by the Supreme Court, but letters are also encouraged to support his position.

THERE'S A SOUR LOOK on the face of Falcon coach Norm Van Brocklin as his team loses to the Dolphins Sunday. The Dutchman was canned yesterday after compiling a 2-6 seasonal mark.

Van Brocklin axed as Falcon mentor

ATLANTA [UPI] — The Atlanta Falcons Tuesday fired Norm Van Brocklin as head coach and general manager and named defensive coach Marion Campbell to coach the team for the remainder of the season.

Van Brocklin, former All-Pro quarterback and former coach of the Minnesota Vikings, had been head coach of the Falcons since October 1968. He had been under heavy fire from fans and local news media this season because of the Falcons' poor play.

Atlanta had its best of eight seasons in 1973 with a 9-5 record but is only 2-6 this year and suffered a 42-7 loss this past Sunday at Miami.

Campbell, 45, was brought to Atlanta by Van Brocklin in 1969 and built the Falcons' defensive unit into one of the best in the NFL.

Falcons' owner Rankin Smith, who said Sunday that he had no immediate plans for firing Van Broklin because he didn't know who he would get to replace him, flew into Atlanta from Miami Tuesday afternoon to make the announcement.

Campbell was a tackle for the University of Georgia, located 70 miles northeast of here, and played in the NFL with San Francisco and Philadelphia.

He was defensive coach at Boston in 1962-63, head defensive coach under Van Brocklin at Minnesota in 1964-66, and defensive line coach at Los Angeles in 1966-68 before rejoining Van Brocklin, a teammate at Philadelphia, in 1969.

Van Brocklin antagonized many of his players with his gruff approach to coaching and it was reported that several players quit the squad last week and had to be talked into returning by Falcons President Frank Wall.

Smith hired Van Brocklin to replace Norb Hecker after the Falcons lost their first four games at the start of the '68 season. Atlanta wound up 2-12 that season but improved to 6-8 in 1969.

The Falcons slumped to 4-8-2 in 1970, but have not had a losing season since — going 7-6-1 in 1971, 7-7 in 1972, and 9-5 last year.

The Falcons got off to a 1-3 start last season but then won seven straight and appeared to have a "wildcard" berth in the NFL playoffs before being knocked off by Buffalo and St. Louis.

Van Brocklin blamed the two late-season losses on overconfidence by his players. "They came off that winning streak believing what they were told by the bartenders and whores on Peachtree Street," said Van Brocklin last December.

Van Brocklin blamed the preseason strike and "attitudes fostered by the actions of the players association," for the Falcons poor play this season. Atlanta, with the poorest offensive showing in the NFL, lost its first three games, rebound to nip the New York Giants (14-7) and Chicago Bears (13-10), then lost its next three.

Bowlers sponsor Classic

On Saturday, November 2 the UMass Intercollegiate Bowling Team hosted the second annual Minuteman Classic at the Riverdale Lanes in West Springfield. It was the second meet of the Tri-State League this season.

In the team event the women, led by Captain Nancy Heglin's 562 series captured the title by defeating Southern Connecticut State College 2384 to 2300. The men's team led by Barry Witt's 266 game and 635 series fell just short in its third game rally and lost out to Southern Conn. State 2753 to 2750.

The women's team dominated the rest of the events. In singles Karen James fired a sizzling 623 series for the crown and combined with Nancy Heglin (533) for the doubles title. Karen also captured all-events with a fine 1155 (a 193 average for the day).

Members of the women's team were: Karen James, Nancy Heglin, Barbara Holt, Sue Lindstrom, Maria Collette, and Ilene Dishler. Member's of the men's team were: Barry Witt, Bill Fisher, Brian Elsden, John Cadina, Paul Doherty, and Paul Stutzman.

Ohio State still tops UPI poll

NEW YORK [UPI] — As the college football season draws to a close, fewer teams rate votes by the coaches on the United Press International major college football ratings board, but no one dismisses Ohio State.

Woody Hayes' Buckeyes rolled up seven touchdowns while disposing of Illinois, 49-7, and received 34 of the 35 first place votes and 349 points, one shy of a perfect score. The win was the 200th for Hayes, who is in his 29th season of college coaching, 24 at the helm of the Ohio State gridders.

Below the No. 1 spot, however, only 14 more teams reveived votes as the better teams become more apparent--at least to the coaches board.

Michigan, which has been trailing right behind the Buckeyes for the past three weeks, now has company in second place as Alabama received an equal number of votes with the Wolverines.

On Saturday, Michigan defeated Indiana by the modest score of 21-7, while Alabama shut out previously 15th-ranked Mississippi State, 35-0. Going into the game with the Crimson Tide, The Bulldogs had been the sec leader in total offense, but Alabama permitted them only 167 yeards.

Florida's win over Auburn and Southern California's 15-15 tie with California helped to rearrange the rest of the top 10. Auburn, which lost to the Gators 25-14, dropped from fourth to ninth, while Florida jumped from 10th to seventh. The Trojans, meanwhile, probably feel that a tie is worse than "kissing your sister" as the deadlock dropped them from sixth to 11th.

Notre Dame, which needed two fourth-quarter TDs to get past Navy, 14-6, remained fifth, but Texas A&M, which doubled the score against Arkansas 20-10, climber from seventh to fourth.

Penn State, topping Maryland 24-17, climbed from eighth to sixth, Nebraska, a 31-15 winner over Colorado, moved up one notch to eighth and Texas edged USC for the 10th spot by two points after romping past SMU, 35-15.

Behind Southern Cal were Miami of Ohio, up two positions; Houston, up four places; Pittsburgh, a new entrant into the top 20; and Maryland, which dropped from 12th to 15th.

Tom Landry pulls a funny

DALLAS [UPI] — Dallas Cowboy coach Tom Landry, who has the undeserved reputation of being humorless, pulled out his Norm Van Brocklin invitation Tuesday.

It was a great success with the audience.

Landry had dutiful read his morning newspaper Tuesday and discovered Van Brocklin's confrontation with writers, which took place at the Atlanta coach's weekly press luncheon Monday.

At Landry's luncheon Tuesday, the coach filled his plate with stuffed pepper and assorted vegetables, walked into the dining room and said with his typical straight face:

"Okay, which one of you wants to fight first? We can start stacking chairs over there right now."

Landry's outburst -- virtually a word for word quote of what Van Brocklin had said seriously -- brought the proper amount of guffaws from the gathered writers and broadcasters.

Bowl bid silence broken; Florida, Nebraska in Sugar

United Press International - An agreement by the representatives of several major bowl associations not to announce the participants in their various post-season classics until Nov. 16 was broken yesterday when it became known that Florida and Nebraska had already accepted bids to play in the Sugar Bowl at New Orleans on New Year's Eve.

Two more of the nation's top-ranked clubs — Alabama and Notre Dame — also let it be known that they had been offered "strong feelers" by the Orange Bowl while another of the nation's major college grid powers, Penn State, admitted publicly its team members had voted to accept a Cotton Bowl bid, if and when it was offered.

The early announcements of the expected bowl pairings was in violation of a "gentlemen's agreement" established by the representatives of 10 major bowl associations at a meeting in St. Simon's Island, Ga., last May. At that time the representatives agreed not to announce any pairings until Nov. 16. Those agreeing to the deal were the Astro-Bluebonnet, Cotton, Gator, Fiesta, Liberty, Orange, Peach, Sugar, Sun and Tangerine Bowl representatives.

Prior to this year the NCAA had a regulation in its by-laws which prohibited the contact of prospective bowl participants by bowl associations until the third Saturday in November or the Saturday prior to the institution's final game, whichever was the earlier. The NCAA, however, lifted this restriction at its annual meeting in January.

"Frankly, we intended to abide by the agreement established last May, but we found out that others weren't," said Clifford H. Kern, Jr., President of the Mid-Winter Sports Association, which sponsors the Sugar Bowl. "When one fellow jumps, you've got to jump."

Official announcement of the Florida-Nebraska matchup game came hours after the Orange Bowl announced it had sent "strong feelers" in an effort to get Alabama and Notre Dame for their contest.

Last year's Sugar Bowl featured top-ranked Alabama and unbeaten Notre Dame in a game the Irish won 24-23.

Both Florida, 7-1, and Nebraska, 6-2, will be making their second appearance in the Sugar Bowl. The Gators lost 20-18 to Missouri in 1966 and Nebraska lost to Alabama 34-7 in 1967.

Neither Notre Dame nor Alabama would confirm whether it had accepted bids to play in the Orange Bowl at Miami on New Year's night.

At Penn State, a spokesman for the school said the sixth-ranked Nittany Lions had not received any formal invitation but that the players had voted to accept a Cotton Bowl bid "if offered."

"We've had no formal invitation," the spokesman said, "but the vote has made our intentions clear."

The Nittany Lions would meet the Southwest Conference champion, either Texas or Texas A.M., on New Years' Day.

Seven days in sport

Ali, Buffalo, Colgate

By STEVE SARACENO
Sports Staff

In reference to the three-week absence of this feature, this agent could say he was on a prolonged assignment in Egypt, but that would be wrong (Chief'd fire me, too, for lying). Perhaps the best course is to take the hang-out road and admit, frankly, absolutely nothing happened in sports during those three weeks...

But this past week, lots happened. The big stories: 1) Muhammad Ali made good on his promise and KO'd George Foreman; 2) The Pats lost a heartbuster to Buffalo; and 3) Colgate pasted (pun intended) the Minutemen, 42-34...

FOOTBALL--The Patriots lost a thoroughly watchable game, 29-28, to the Bills as former BC star Jeff Yeates blocked John Smith's attempt at the game-winner. Yeates said he did it by sneaking in between John Hannah (not playing at the time) and Houston Antwine (retired for three years). Strange man...

Elsewhere in the NFL, the Cardinals finally lost (on a Cowboy FG with four seconds left), Craig Morton and the Giants upset Kansas City, and Miami finally crunched someone (Atlanta, 42-7), which is perhaps an omen of things to come...

Monday night, Stormin' Snead came off the 49'er bench and threw an interception to clinch a 17-15 loss to L.A.

And, UMass lost to Colgate in a game that provided a plethora of touchdowns. Late in the game, Gary Mika was ruled out-of-bounds in catching an important pass at the Red Raider 15. Mika reacted to the call by spiking the ball, and the official's response was not, "Oh my, what a card you are!" Rather, the dubious action resulted in a penalty that perhaps cost the Minutemen a tie....

PRO MISCELLANEOUS --Ali's win over Foreman made alot of his talk ("I am an era. I am an epoch. I am so beautiful") almost credible. Definitely lacking in credibility, however, was staffer Bill Edelstein, who, on these pages, picked Foreman to triumph. After the outcome, Edelstein was reassigned from prognosticator to staff correspondent in Tibet...

The Celtics went 3-1 for the week, despite being Cowens-less. Red Auerbach filled in for Tommy Heinsohn agaisst Atlanta, and was promptly ejected for baiting ref Richie Powers. Celts won anyway...

The Bruins went 1-1-1, the win being a 10-1 rout of the North Stars in which no player scored twice...

And Henry Aaron was traded to the Brewers just 24 hours after beating the immortal Sadaharu Oh in a home-run derby...

CAMPUS MISCELLANEOUS--The harriers won their fifth straight Yankee Conference championship, and with that kind of monopoly, it's a wonder anti-trust suits have yet to be filed against the Minutemen...

The varsity soccer squad received a jolt from Vermont, 5-2, as did the JVs from Springfield by the same score...

The JV footballers took on Boston College Sunday, but didn't produce any upset, losing 37-15....

Tau Epsilon Phi (TEP) won their third straight intramural football crown, and their logical next challenger will be the Super Bowl champion. Squad won the woman's title...

The varsity field hockey team beat Smith 4-1 to finish over .500 at 5-4-1, and then registered three shutouts in the Northeast College Tournament...

And finally, the JV sticksters ended up 8-1-1, a statistic which just about every campus sports fan will look back on and smile during the long winter ahead...

Braves' DiGregorio to be out two months

BUFFALO, N.Y. [UPI] - Buffalo Braves guard Ernie Digregorio, the National Basketball Association rookie of the year last season, underwent apparently successful knee surgery Tuesday, a Braves spokesman said.

The spokesman said torn lateral cartilage was removed from Digregorio's left knee. He was expected to remain in Millard Fillmore Hospital five to seven days, then recuperate at home.

He will be lost to the team about six to eight weeks.

The surgery was performed by they Braves' team physician, Dr. Stephen Joyce.

Digregorio injured his knee in the first quarter of the Oct. 29 game at Golden State.

The six-foot, second-year guard averaged 15.2 points per game last season for Buffalo. He led the NBA in assists and free throw percentage.

Minuteman booters in must tilt today

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

With a flickering hope of their playoff chances still alive the UMass soccer Minutemen take on Springfield College this afternoon at 2:30 p.m. in front of Boyden in a must-win situation.

The Minutemen's chances for a playoff berth were sorely hurt by their last weekend loss to Yankee Conference opponent Vermont.

This week's ratings have yet to come out but it is expected that UMass will drop from their last week's position of 4th in New England. The top four teams in the region make the regional playoffs with a chance to continue on to the national playoffs.

Springfield, as of last week was rated third in New England just ahead of the Minutemen. It seems logical to assume that the winner of today's contest will plant themselves fairly firmly in a playoff berth.

In addition to being rated highly in New England, Springfield College is also rated in the top twenty teams in the nation. They have always had a tough squad and this year seems to be no different.

Earlier in the season Springfield tied Westfield State, a team that the Minutemen beat. Springfield did not look impressive in that game but the Minutemen were not too impressive themselves in beating Westfield.

Connecticut, a team that is rated first in New England and fourth in the nation, and had a difficult time edging the Minutemen 1-0 a week and a half ago, beat Springfield 2-1 a week ago. About that game UMass coach Al Rufe said that, "the score did not really indicate the type of game that it was. Connecticut was leading 2-0 at one point in the game and really dominated the play for most of the game." Again tough, Springfield did not look impressive but this time against a team that the Minutemen played superbly against.

But that was before last Friday when the Minutemen were upset, in more ways than one, by the Catamounts of Vermont. UMass did not play well in that game. The field conditions which were slippery and muddy were very much a factor in the game as it seems that they will be today. When the field is in the condition it will probably be in today breaks and luck become a very big part of the game. It tends to make teams of very different ability levels come closer together.

UMass will definitely have to play the type of game they showed they were capable of playing when they lost to UConn if they hope to be in the post season tournament.

QUICK SHOTS — UMass Fullbacks Ken Banda and Dean Lungu are still questionable starters for today. Carl Vercollone will be in goal at the start again. UMass has one more regular season game after today and that game is this Saturday versus New Hampshire in front of Boyden at 1:30 p.m.

Bucyk gains 2-2 deadlock for B's vs sharp Sabres

BOSTON [UPI] - Johnny Bucyk's third goal of the season at 14:42 of the third period enabled the Boston Bruins to gain a 2-2 tie with the Buffalo Sabres Tuesday night.

The tie gave the Sabres their fifth game without a loss and kept them three points ahead of Boston in the NHL Division Four.

The Sabres had led by a goal from the 8:23 mark of the second period when Craig Ramsay steered Don Luce's pass between goalie Gil Gilbert's legs.

Bucyk tallied up the game after taking pass from Greg Sheppard and filing through a screen to beat goalie Gary Bromley.

The teams traded goals in the first period, Gil Perreault scoring on a slapshot from the left wing at 1:24 and Al Sims converting a Ken Hodge pass while both teams remained short at 11:27.

Should go through proper channels-Wood

Trustees dodge SGA demands

By FRED NOBLES
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert Wood indicated at yesterday's Board of Trustees meeting that Trustees will take no action at this time on recent Student Government demands for financial and political autonomy.

In his opening remarks before the assembled Board, Wood said, "I have asked Trustee Savini...if he will function in his campus capacity to pass these matters through the appropriate channels."

There was no further discussion of the issue during the hour-long meeting.

In an interview following the Board meeting, Student Senate President and UMass Trustee Rick Savini said he felt the Board was, "trying to buy off time to see what the issues are. They want to see if this thing will develop into a confrontation."

Savini was not surprised by the Board's inaction. "I had a suspicion when we started out with this thing that that would be the kind of response we would get," he said.

According to Savini, any campus issue requiring administrative action, "has to follow certain established processes," to determine at what level of the University administration the issue can be adequately dealt with.

Trustee George Pumphret, speaking on behalf of the Committee on Finance, presented a motion to accept bids for the establishment of a bank in the Student Union.

Trustee Savini objected to bringing the bank issue before the Board at this time and asked to delay the vote until the next Board meeting.

"There are some questions the student government has concerning the establishment of a bank on campus. These questions have not yet been answered," he said.

Pumphret responded to Savini's remarks by saying he felt there is, "a real desire on the part of students to have a bank, and on the part of the Campus Center."

Pumphret feels the establishment of a bank will relieve the University of certain "financial burdens" and rid it of the "bad checks" problem.

The motion passed unanimously. Chancellor Bromery assured Savini and the Board that the motion meant only that he could accept bids taken without student input.

The board also heard a report from Trustee Frederick Troy on the "contact hour" issue. Acknowledging the General Court's demands for specific guidelines concerning how many hours professors spend in direct instructional contact with students, Troy went on to point out that it is an "easy matter" to establish criteria if a professor is teaching "three sections of a three credit history course," but difficult in more innovative and less structured courses. Troy feels the Board needs more time to "clarify and define" the contact hour issue.

In other action the Board, after some debate, approved the appointment of Dr. Charles Regan as professor of ophthalmology and chairman of the Department of Ophthalmology at the UMass Medical School at Worcester.

The Board also approved a motion to offer Dr. John Collins a position as professor of thoracic and cardiac surgery and chairman of the Department of Thoracic and Cardiac Surgery at UMass Worcester.

Senate votes to return demands, dump Vice-Chancellor's veto power

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Rick Savini, SGA president, last night told the Student Senate that the Board of Trustees sent back the six demands for student autonomy because the SGA failed to go through the proper governance procedure.

The Senate also passed a motion to remove all veto power from the office of the Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs in regard to Senate action, amended the SGA constitution by adding the Affirmative Action Guidelines, and passed a motion to ban the privilege of smoking in classes.

According to Savini, once the six demands, passed October 23, go through the proper channels, the Board of Trustees will respond.

Cindy McGrath, Speaker of the Senate, said the governance procedure form goes to the Faculty Senate, the Graduate Senate, Vice Chancellor Gage, Chancellor Bromery and then to President Wood.

"If the demands were to be challenged by any group, it fails there," McGrath said. She also said there will be discussion of this at the SGA "Town meeting," Monday night.

The motion to remove veto power from the Vice-Chancellor's office of Student Affairs was passed clearly by the Senate. One Senator said this motion was absurd because if Gage has no veto power, then Bromery or the Board of Trustees still do.

During the discussion of this motion, McGrath interjected a memorandum from Dr. Gage. According to the memorandum, Gage said, "It will be appropriate for me to respond to Undergraduate Student Senate Action with reservation that I will not ultimately offer to "reject" any actions taken."

The Affirmative Action Policy that was passed embodies nondiscrimination and Affirmative Action. The nondiscrimination concept requires "the elimination of all existing discriminatory conditions" and also requires "the organization to make additional efforts to recruit, employ and promote qualified members of the groups formally excluded."

The motion to ban smoking privilege in classes by students, faculty or any visiting dignitaries also asks for observers to inform violators that they are acting unlawfully and should cease smoking.

GREENFIELD [AP] - Western Massachusetts residents have voted heavily in favor of letting two existing nuclear power plants continue to operate, and by a narrower margin have endorsed the construction of a third A-plant.

The vote took place Tuesday in the Franklin-Hampshire-Hampden state Senate district where two local questions were added to the ballot.

One question asked whether the state senator should seek the dismantlement of nuclear power plants at Rowe, Mass., and Vernon, Vt. It was defeated by a 2 to 1 margin.

Hamlin residents voice bitterness over administration's relocation actions

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

Residents of Hamlin House, which is scheduled for renovation beginning next semester, are bitter about the administration's handling of their demands regarding relocation of the residents next spring.

"We are frustrated and disappointed with the administration's actions to date. The problem can be reshuffled, but it won't go away," said Ken Somers, president of Hamlin in Northeast.

In a memorandum dated November 1st, sent to Steven Dimock (Area Director of NE). Bruce Cochrace (Director of Housing), Ken Dean (Director of Residential Life), and Robert Gage (Vice Chancellor), the demands of the Hamlin residents were stated and it was requested that immediate action be taken by the administration.

The memo, which was drafted by Somers (who is a member of the Student Senate Rents & Fees Committee) and approved by the committee listed grievances in three points.

The residents want campuswide priority in room choosing after Day 1 of room choosing for next spring, including the identification of all available housing on campus not taken on Day 1, the identification of storage space for the residents of Hamlin (including security measures) over the upcoming intersession, and the adoption of a "systems" approach to the problem.

The reason for this is there is no "swing space" remaining on campus where residents of dorms can be housed during renovations. Previously, Hills House was used for this purpose.

The residents of Hamlin said this is not a new problem, and the administration has been aware of the situation for approximately a year and a half, though no definitive action has been taken yet. The residents have received only verbal reactions from the administration, nothing written or concrete to go on, according to Somers.

Tuesday, on receipt of the memo, Roger Cruff, Assistant Director of Administrative Services, and Dean stated their position on the matter.

According to Cruff, no final decision or course of action has been decided upon by the administration because "we do not know all the details of the situation. This has been a prime topic of discussion in all the residential areas. A decision is expected by Thursday."

"There is no storage space remaining on campus, so perhaps an off-campus facility may be considered to alleviate this problem," continued Cruff.

He also said there is no question about the committment of the administration to the residents of Hamlin, "the students must be living comfortably."

Dean said there may be problems finding space, or at least preferred space for the Hamlin residents because in some dorm there are waiting lists up to a year and a half.

"Would it be fair to give priority to the Hamlin students over students who have been on a waiting list?" said Dean. He added that hopefully plans will be formulated and ready to go by the end of this week.

Another important consideration of the Hamlin residents is that even if their demands are met, the community established among the residents of the dorm will be broken. "We may be moved out of our residential area, maybe to Southwest which some residents may not like," Somers said.

Dorm residents said that a proposal was made to Robert Gage when the issue was discussed with the administration some time ago. The residents requested the possibility of a "staged" renovation, one in which work could be done over intersession and during the summer when students were not there. Gage rejected this as "economically unfeasible," they said.

Town meeting approves tally vote

By JUDY BOUCHER

Town representatives at a special meeting held this week voted 100-79 in favor of a more accountable way to cast their votes.

A tallied voting procedure, placing each town member's vote on record, will be taken when 40 or more members deem it necessary. Previously, a voice vote was taken by members calling 'aye' or 'nay' with no indication of how each individual member voted.

The amended by-law had been voted down twice before. Senator John Olver (D-Amherst) said "citizens have every right to know how their representatives are voting on controversial issues."

With the voice vote "it was difficult for citizens to be aware of how town members voted," said Melanie Smith, a member of the League of Women Voters. The Town Meeting (TM) votes on Amherst's budget as well as all amended or new by-laws.

TM voted on 15 articles, one endorsing an energy survey by the Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering Department of UMass.

Professor Joseph Obyrne, principle investigator of the project, will estimate what a single family residence in Amherst should be using for fuel buring the winter.

The Town Meeting endorsed its support for the project but defeated a proposal to see if the town will raise and appropriate $1,000 to defray a portion of the cost of an energy survey.

Also, a new by-law was added requiring all solicitors to register with the police department and regulating the hours of soliciting between 9 a.m. and 6 p.m.

Chief of Police Donald Maia said there is a need for the by-law "to protect yourself and your property. The intent is not to hold back solicitors but to identify solicitors, who they are and what they're selling." Maia reported that on each day last month there was one burglary.

Town members are elected for terms of three years, one-third of their membership being elected each year. In total there are 240 town members who are assigned in proportion to the voting population in each of the town's seven precints. One TM represents approximately 25 voters.

In town politics students have unintentionally wreaked havoc with town meeting representation. This year, as in 1972, the heaviest concentration of new voters came from UMass students voting in precincts two, three and seven.

The upsurge of new voters in these same precincts in 1972 gave additional town members in the 1973 town elections. Cosequently, slots were taken away from the other four precincts.

By the spring of 1974 registration had dropped from the "student precincts." Thus, precincts two, three and seven suffered a cut in the number of representatives due them. But, the newly proportioned members of 1973 had two more years to serve on their terms so the cuts hit incumbents, some of them long time members.

Again the cycle is expected to occur in the town elections of 1975. Precincts one, four, five and six will lose extra seats which they gained last spring.

The annual Town Meeting is held in March but is called into session when necessary. The session was presided over by Town Moderator William Field.

Student visas not affected

Foreign tenants can join rent strike

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

Foreign students who live in Lincoln and University Apartments may participate in the rent strike without fear of losing their visas.

A memo from Tenant Association lawyer David Sheehan was read Tuesday night at a meeting of the Association. In the memo Sheehan stated: "I have consulted with the office of Immigration and Naturalization in Washington D.C. and they have confirmed that the student visa is in no way affected by participation in a rent strike."

Sheehan recommends that foreign students join the Tenant Association and participate in the strike "without any fear of their participation affecting their visa status."

Presently many of the foreign students residing in married student housing do not dare voice their support of the Tenant Association for fear of losing their visas. Association leaders Patrick Walker and Rosemary Whittaker hope Sheehan's information will encourage more support from foreign students.

According to Whittaker, 75 per cent of University Apartment tenants are actively participating in the strike. About 50 per cent of Lincoln residents who were asked in a door to door survey last week intend to participate.

The Association was voted unanimous support by the Student Senate. The Commuter Assembly also voted to unanimously support the married students.

Tuesday night's meeting was held so that residents of North Village could gain information about the tenant association. Association leaders hope for support from North Village residents to make the association the main representative body for married students living on campus.

"We see ourselves as a permanent organization from now on," said Patrick Walker. "The rent rollback got people together, but its not the major issue." The issue is of student control over the housing, and how funds are used within the housing system.

"Things aren't going to change unless we do something about it," said Walker.

Don Pelkey, director of Married Student Housing, was present at Tuesday's meeting and criticized the tenants for not working through the Married Student Housing Committee.

"The tenants should run the married student housing as they want to," said Pelkey, but the Married Student Housing Committee "just hasn't been used properly."

The Married Student Housing Committee is recognized by the administration and has its own set of by-laws. The tenants on strike feel it is an ineffective committee, but Pelkey said it never worked due to lack of student input.

"The power is in our bank account, not with the Housing Committee," said a member of the tenant association.

"If we get people to not pay rent to the University, then we'll have more bargaining power," said chairperson Whittaker.

The association will continue to work for solidarity with North Village through means of door to door canvassing. An informational meeting is in the planning stages to be held at North Village in the near future.

As yet the Association has not received word from the administration concerning the process of bringing their case before the University Board of Trustees.

Dorm Life Director claims student control is illegal

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

The issue of student control of the residential life system was debated by students and Vice-Chancellor Gage and Ken Dean, Director of Residential Life Tuesday in Hamlin Lounge.

Dean cited Chapter 75 of the bylaws as making student control of residential life illegal during the second in a series of housing hearings.

Dean said he would not support the repeal of Chapter 75.

Student Organizer John Pepi explained Chapter 75 saying: "It allocates all responsibility for spending funds to the board of trustees."

Testimony was also heard from Matt Burns, Chairman of the food services governing board. "The students, because they pay for most of the residence halls and all of the D.C.s should have control of the system," Burns asserted.

"We don't think it's really necessary to have a degree to make decisions about your food;" he added.

Gage said of student control; "Under the present arrangement this is legally impossible."

"Laws have been known to change;" Pepi countered.

As an alternative to student control, Dean proposed joint governance by students and administrators. "I think it's a much better arrangement than a board having a vote and me having to react to it 10 days later."

"One of my prime interests is making residence hall living voluntary;" Gage said. "The problem is how we do this without creating financial insolvency."

GAGE

Gage testified he is looking for "creative suggestions" for making the residential life system voluntary. He mentioned some alternatives being considered for achieving this.

"One of the things I would like to do is propose to the legislature that they appropriate the money to pay for this whole bloody deal (the residential life system)."

"There is a possibility that we will redistribute the money over a large group of people;" he speculated.

Inflation diminishes '74 phonothon revenue

By DONNA A. DIODATI
Staff Reporter

Inflation is costing UMass about ten per cent of its gift income for special projects, according to campus fund raisers.

The $17,350 pledged by UMass alumni in the second annual Springfield phonothon is $1,450 less than was pledged in the same phonothon last year, according to Alumni Office staff assistant Brenda Rau.

"We're beginning to be affected by the economy," she said.

The phonothon was held the nights of October 8-10 and 15-17, involving 108 volunteers who telephoned 1,685 alumni in Hampden County, Rau said. Bill Lane of the Alumni Office was the coordinator.

Rau said the average pledge per alumnus was $20.01-$1.66 less than last year. The number of pledges, though, increased from 872 to 876, she said.

Second Century Club pledges ($100 or more) totaled $4,000, a drop of $1,500 from last year's sum. The club members numbered 55 in 1973. This year, there are 39, Rau said.

The money raised by the alumni phonothons is used by the administration to aid such university programs as scholarships and library acquisitions, she said.

UMass alumni phonothons were started by the Alumni Office three years ago. Held six times each academic year, two of them are at Amherst. The others originate in Springfield, Boston, Washington and Hartford.

The next Amherst area phonothon will be held in Memorial Hall the nights of November 12-14 and 18-21. Alumni in Berkshire, Franklin, and Hampshire counties will be contacted at that time. Rau said students are welcome to volunteer their services, adding that one night — Wednesday, November 20 — has been exclusively designated for student workers. The telephone solicitations will feature free beer and dinner each night beginning at 6:00 p.m., she said.

Chairperson for the Amherst phonothon is William J. Mellen, '49.

Hunt memo called trickery

Three Watergate defendants request new trials

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Three of the Watergate coverup defendants asked yesterday for new trials, claiming their cases have been irreparably damaged by prosecution trickery.

U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica took no immediate action, but was expected to hear oral arguments on the demand within a few days, with the jury absent. The trial is in its sixth week.

Motions for a mistrial were filed by John N. Mitchell and John D. Ehrlichman. Defendant Kenneth W. Parkinson - who already has a mistrial motion pending - asked to be tried separately.

The three claim the Watergate prosecutors deliberately caught them by surprise with crucial and damaging evidence making it impossible to redeem themselves in the jury's eyes.

"We urge the court to rescue Mr. Parkinson from a sea of prejudice which cannot be overcome short of a severance," Parkinson's lawyers said in their brief. "Mr. Parkinson is entitled to a trial under circumstances where his counsel can defend him forewarned of the existence of evidence which the government has termed "a bombshell."

"That bombshell," which surfaced Monday with the jury out, is a memorandum written two years ago by bugging conspirator E. Howard Hunt Jr. that links the administration to pledges of hush money and pardons for the Watergate burglars.

Hunt had denied writing such a memo until a month ago, when he admitted it to the prosecutors. He testified about it at the trial last week - but since no copy had been found, defense attorneys suggested strongly on cross-examination that he was lying.

During the weekend, former Hunt lawyer William O. Bittman - an unindicted co-conspirator in the case - surrendered a copy of the memo to the prosecution after denying under oath he knew anything about it.

Lawyers for Mitchell, Ehrlichman and Parkinson contended that the government was required to tell them in advance of Hunt's new testimony, and since it had not, they had been "seriously prejudiced."

UMW officials see no progress in talks as walkouts start

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Negotiating under pressure of sporadic walkouts and an impending nationwide strike just five days off, officials of the United Mine Workers union said yesterday they anticipated no progress in their contract stalemate with the coal companies.

Both sides said they were bent on preventing a prolonged strike that is to begin officially at 12:01 a.m. Tuesday. But few miners were expected to show up for work after the shift ending at 8 a.m. Saturday.

Because the union's ratification procedure takes about 10 days, there was no way a strike could be avoided without government intervention or a breach in the UMW by-laws. The UMW refuses to work without a fully ratified contract.

About 750 coal miners walked out of Indiana County, Pa., mines and a local union official credited it to discontent over the progress being made in the contract talks. Another walkout in Greene County, Pa., was blamed on concern over excessive noise levels of mine machinery.

Kissinger assured

By NICHOLAS DANILOFF

AMMAN [UPI] - Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger flew to Jordan last night with new support from Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Saudi Arabian King Faisal for his Middle East peace efforts and a Saudi promise to try and lower oil prices.

Kissinger arrived here at 11:10 p.m. on the third leg of his lightning tour of the Middle East after four hours of what he called "good and useful" talks with Faisal and a vote of "fullest confidence" from Sadat in Cairo.

He said he had managed to explain the effects of increased oil prices on the economic and political lives of consumer nations and "We hope Saudi Arabia will maintain its efforts at reducing oil prices."

Siege declared

BUENOS AIRES [UPI] - The Argentine government, plagued by leftist guerrilla attacks and political assassinations, yesterday declared a nationwide state of siege for an indefinite period after even school children were threatened by violence.

The move was announced by Interior Minister Alberto Rocamora five days after the terrorist killing of federal police chief Alberto Villar and his wife and the murders of four leftist activists over the past weekend.

Rocamora said the state of siege was declared for an indefinite period to combat a wave of violence that has threatened even school children.

Mrs. Kennedy fined

FAIRFAX, Va. [AP] — Joan Kennedy, wife of Massachusetts Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, was fined $200 and her driver's license was revoked yesterday after she pleaded guilty to a charge of driving while under the influence of alcohol.

Mrs. Kennedy did not appear in Fairfax General District Court, but her lawyer, Virginia Del. Carrington Williams, said she "wants to accept her responsibility in the matter."

Nixon has pneumonia

LONG BEACH, Calif. [AP] — Former President Richard M. Nixon is suffering from a slight case of pneumonia and a partial collapse of his right lung and he is being treated with antibiotics, his doctor said yesterday.

Nixon has a slightly elevated temperature due to pneumonitis, described as a synonym for pneumonia, centered in a small area of his right lung. He also suffers from irritation caused by a hematoma, or blood mass, in the small of his back.

The doctor said the pneumonitis was determined by tests. Nixon was still in serious condition and "it would be premature to offer a prognosis at this time," the doctor added.

GOP soundly defeated

Democrats to dominate Massachusetts politics

Compiled From Wires

BOSTON — The State House, the legislature and the congressional delegation in Massachusetts are all firmly controlled by Democrats after Tuesday's final unofficial election results revealed a GOP rout.

For the first time in a decade, a Democrat, Michael S. Dukakis, was elected the state's governor, replacing Gov. Francis W. Sargent on a vote of 990,832 to 781,902.

Dukakis has promised no new taxes next year, no patronage for his campaign workers, and a 5 per cent productivity increase from the state government.

Democratic former Lt. Gov. Francis X. Bellotti, also made promises before his 911,259 to 890,542 vote defeat of former GOP State Committee Chairman Josiah A. Spaulding in the race for attorney general.

Bellotti, who had lost three statewide runs since 1964, made a crackdown on food prices one of his pledges.

State Rep. Paul H. Guzzi, a Democratic reformer with a campaign law problem, overwhelmed his opponent 1,149,961 to 638,174 votes for Republican state Sen. John M. Quinlan.

After ousting a 20-year incumbent in the primary, Guzzi faced criticism for an apparent, although ambiguous, election law violation.

Democrats now hold 10 of Massachusetts' 12 congressional seats, picking up one when Middlesex County Commissioner Paul F. Tsongas defeated freshman GOP Rep. Paul W. Cronin in the 5th District north of Boston.

State Rep. Joseph D. Early, a Democrat, won election in the Worcester area to retiring U.S. Rep. Harold D. Donohue's seat. All other winners were incumbents.

"The price of hamburg" and a Watergate tide swept Sargent out of office, he said. Dukakis called his own victory "the dawn of a new era in the politics of this state."

Two other new eras dawned in the state legislature: Democratic state Rep. Bill Owens became the first black state senator, and lesbian Elaine Noble, a Democrat, was elected to a seat in the Massachusetts House.

A yes vote was registered on three major referendum questions.

A proposal to reduce the size of the House from 240 to 160 was endorsed 1,095,283 to 432,210. The vote to authorize use of gas tax monies for mass transit was 792,298 to 572,017. A constitutional amendment to permit state aid to private colleges was endorsed 803,873 to 566,819.

Democratic governors could run in 1976

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Democrats held control of 36 of the nation's governorships yesterday, including giants California and New York, providing a powerful grassroots base for their 1976 race for the White House.

At least five of the Democratic governors elected Tuesday can be expected to play a major role in the selection of their party's 1976 candidates, and some may end up running themselves.

While Democrats gained at least five governorships in the elections, their rout was not as strong as predicted. They had hoped to pick up seven to 10 additional statehouses, but were victims of a stunning upset in Ohio where former Republican Gov. John Rhodes ousted Gov. John Gilligan.

They also failed in their attempt to unseat Republican Gov. William Milliken of Michigan, leaving Democrats with control of eight of the big 10 governorships.

The Democrats two big winners were Rep. Hugh Carey in New York and Secretary of State Edmund "Jerry" Brown in California. The two became almost instant presidential timber as they ended the powerful Republican rule built in the states by Govs. Nelson Rockefeller and Ronald Reagan.

Democratic victories pose threat to Ford

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Armed with the biggest House majority in a decade, Democrats yesterday posed a serious threat to President Ford's legislative program. A GOP leader termed the situation grim and the White House said Ford is willing to compromise on the key issue of solving rampant inflation.

In Tuesday's elections, a nationwide surge of discontent gave Democrats an iron grip on Congress with majorities that could play havoc with administration initiatives for the next two years and, on some issues, render his veto power void.

Ford, who served in the House for a quarter-century, may have to turn to the Senate - where the Democratic gain was smaller - for help in sustaining his vetoes.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen, conceding that Tuesday "wasn't a very good day for Republicans," said Ford intends to meet the overwhelmingly Democratic Congress "more than halfway" in seeking to better the nation's economy. He said Ford is ready to accept a compromise if the Democrats come up "with a better package."

Although Ford barnstormed for a month to salvage GOP condidates, many of whom lost, Nessen said the President did not consider the elections a referendum on himself and it has not affected his decision that he will "probably" seek election in his own right in 1976.

Assessing the worst GOP licking since Barry M. Goldwater's disastrous defeat in the 1964 presidential campaign, Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott said the results "are very grim for the Republican party."

Statistics bore him out. Democrats picked up 44 House seats, with two races still undecided. They also gained three Senate seats and were leading for a fourth.

The indicated lineup for the 94th Congress convening in January showed a Democratic majority 292 to 144 in the House and 62 to 38 in the Senate.

Not since 1965, following Goldwater's defeat, has the GOP had such a small membership in the House. After that debacle, the Democrats held 295 seats.

Ford and three potential candidates for the 1976 Democratic presidential nomination - Sens. Henry M. Jackson, Walter F. Mondale, and Lloyd Bentsen - said that inflation was the key issue in the midterm elections.

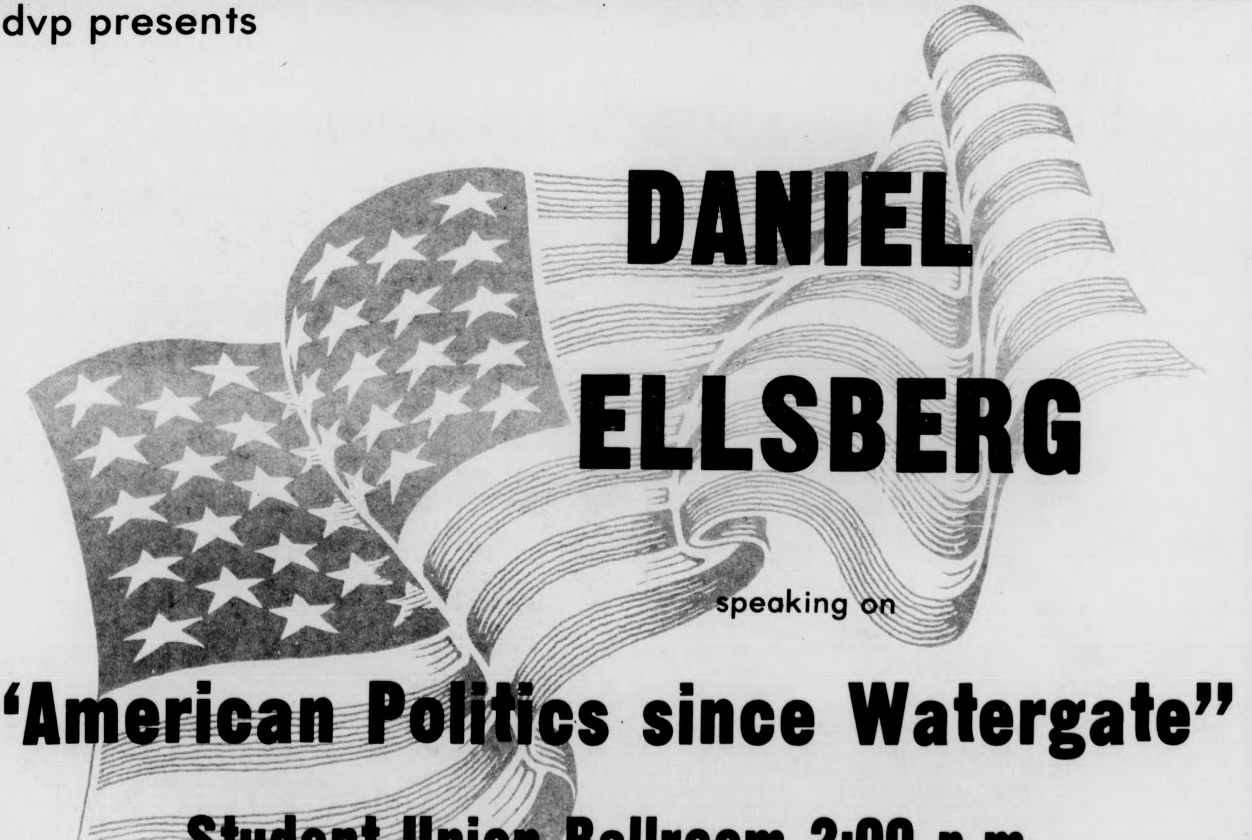
DANIEL ELLSBERG

speaking on

"American Politics since Watergate"

Student Union Ballroom 2:00 p.m.

Nov. 8, 1974 Friday



Ellsberg speaks tomorrow in S.U.B.

DANIEL ELLSBERG, who wrote history wnen he released the Pentagon Papers, will speak tomorrow afternoon in the Student Union Ballroom.

Daniel Ellsberg who converted from a cold-blooded hawk to a committed dove and released the controversial Pentagon Papers will speak tomorrow afternoon at 2:00 in the Student Union Ballroom.

Ellsberg, assisted by Anthony Russo, copied the papers and decided to make them public with the hope that "truths that changed me could help other Americans free themselves and other victims from our longest war."

The papers were a Defense Department study of U. S. policies in Indochina. They revealed facts exposing 20 years of U. S. official deceit in a war which Ellsberg termed a "foreign aggression."

Initially, Ellsberg was indicted on counts of converting government property to personal use and of illegally possessing government documents.

The Ellsberg case was historic, raising issues of freedom of the press, official security and national security. It helped direct public attention to the constitutional powers of the President.

In May 1973 charges were dismissed for reasons of "governmental misconduct."

Watergate Hearings had shown that through illegal wiretapping and a break-in at the office of Ellsberg's psychiatrist, the Nixon Administration had conducted a smear campaign against Ellsberg for his anti-war activity.

The official acts against Ellsberg became a major basis of the impeachment articles drawn up by the House Judiciary Committee in the summer of 1974.

Ellsberg will be brought to campus by the Distinguished Visitors Committee of UMass.

Ellsberg's talk will be broadcast live by WMUA's Public Affairs Department

Mosakowski conducts election post-mortem

Project 10's Political Campaigns Seminar, under the direction of Kenneth Mosakowski, will conduct a post-mortem tonight on the outcome of Tuesday's election. The session will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the main lounge of Pierpont Hall in Southwest.

Students in the seminar worked actively in the campaigns of both Democrats and Republicans in the statewide contests for constitutional offices as well as contests for state senator and state representative.

Mosakowski hopes that tonight's session will enable the campaigners to share their varied experiences in their respective campaigns and provide explanations as to why their candidates won or lost.

Absentee voter turnout falls far short of '72

By DEBBI DIMASSIMO
Staff Reporter

Only 640 students used the absentee voter notary public service last week, according to Randall Dahl, Assistant Director of Commuter Student Affairs and organizer of the service. Two years ago, 4200 absentee ballots were processed.

The service was sponsored by the Commuter Student Affairs office. "I hoped for greater participation and the co-sponsorship of the residential areas," said Dahl. "They didn't seem interested."

About 72 per cent of the students who had their ballots notarized were in fact campus residents and not commuters.

The actual turn-out was low. Only 175 of a potential 2900 voting commuters and 465 of 9,000 campus residents registered at home had their ballots notarized at the Student Union. Dahl attributed the poor showing to a limited amount of advertising of the service and few local appearances by prominent candidates.

"I hope to be able to provide facsimiles of applications for absentee ballots to all students two years from now," said Dahl.

According to the statistics compiled by the notaries, 43.91 per cent of the 640 students voted in a general election for the first time, while 56.09 per cent had voted in previous elections.

SOP's student-run stereo co-op will open on campus next week

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

A student-run stereo cooperative sponsored by the Student Organizing Project and Soung & Music will open at UMass on Nov. 14.

John Fisher, who is co-ordinating the project, said for a five-dollar membership fee, students will be able to choose from a wide variety of components at 40 per cent off list price.

When asked how the co-op will be funded Fisher said, "That's the beauty of the thing. Funds won't be needed because we're plugging into an already existing co-op."

The existing co-op, Sound & Music, is a Springfield-based group specializing in hi-fi components.

Jim Friedman, co-ordinator of Sound & Music, said its goals are "..... to provide good prices and service to our members, to encourage membership participation, and to create seed money to be used to start new co-operatives and further the co-operative idea."

Fisher said: "The Student run co-op is just one aspect of students working together to help each other rather than for the benefit of a few."

"The five-dollar membership fee will be covering any overhead involved," he added.

Delivery of the components will only take 2 or 3 days according to Fisher.

A voluntary 1 per cent tax will be requested he said. "The purpose of the tax is to help develop other co-ops."

The co-op will begin with a table set up on the concourse of the Campus Center once a week, but the co-op organizers hope to expand it to a record and hi-fi store set up somewhere on campus.

Campus Comments

Almost every student here has had to spend some class time in a large lecture hall. But how did they feel about it? Was it a despicable reality or a tolerable necessity? Campus Comments went into the field to obtain information from this campus' many veterans of large lectures.

The question - What are your opinions about large lectures? Do you ever have trouble paying attention?

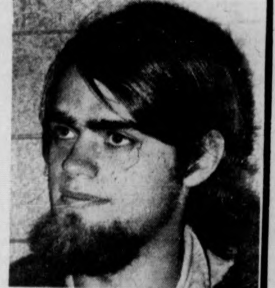
Steve Kirch-Junior from Hingham living in Amherst majoring in Zoology. It mostly depends on the professor; if they speak logically and diagram things well then you can follow it. I only have trouble staying awake in an art lecture where I'm bored silly and it wouldn't make any difference if it were large or small.

Deborah Kearney-Junior from Pittsburg, Pa. living in S. Hadley majoring in Psychology. I like them if they have discussion groups. I think it's fine to take it three hours and then have a discussion group. I don't think size makes a difference. I think you can mass educate if you have discussion groups, and if the people are interested, they are going to find out what they want anyway.

Tony Armelin-Sophomore from Revere living in JFK majoring in Political Science. I think they're necessary...they only work well with certain subjects, subjects that don't change much from semester to semester, like Psychology. When you get into more advanced courses, things should be smaller. I have trouble staying awake during them...I've never fallen asleep, but I've drifted off.

Myoung Lee-Freshman from Korea living in Amherst. I don't have a good ear, so I sometimes can't hear them. Sometimes I like it if they have really good speakers.

Tony Yanosca-Senior from East Boston living in Cance majoring in Marketing. They're all right....for a lot of courses you don't need anything else. It's hard to pay attention sometimes, but for a lot of courses, how else are you going to teach them? Some courses can get to be boring, but again, how else are you going to teach them?



Richard Demallie-Senior from Dedham living in Sunderland majoring in Psychology. Sometimes they're needed because of the large number of students, and sometimes you can do a lot of things on your own in a large course. A lot of times they're annoying because you don't get much contact with the professor. It's easy getting distracted in them.

Eve of destruction has arrived

By DON AUCOIN

The U.S. of A. is shot to hell.

What? You say the whole world is shot to hell, too? Don't remind me, don't remind me.

Anyone who keeps even a furtive eye on the current state of affairs is in the very real danger of becoming a terminal cynic. Being your basic news junkie, I find myself growing increasingly pessimistic about mankind's chances. But then I realize that we are but a tiny speck in the historical eye of the world, and a meaningless, grimy speck at that. And furthermore, that the whole history of the world is trivial with regard to the vast universe, and beyond the universe is the infinite cosmos, and it's there that I stop. My tender ego can only stand just so much insignificance.

Sooo...on to current events. There's some pretty wierd shit going on. Dick Nixon is out in California threatening to pass from his still-born state into that of a corpse, thereby cheating those bloodthirsty souls who would like to wring a few last drops of vengeance out of his slimy body, for heinous crimes against the American people. Meanwhile, the Watergate Wolves, snooping and snarling, are turning on The Boss in an effort for the big "P". Timmy Leary is singing like a canary, and, in an astonishingly cruel gesture, some Democratic god has visited identical tragedies upon two Republican wives, Betty Ford and Happy Rockefeller.

Happy seems to be holding up all right, but her husband's nomination for the vice-presidency is clearly in trouble. It seems Congress has some questions about contributions to a certain defamatory biography of his 1970 gubernatorial opponent. Granted, that's a pretty sleazy move, but what really pisses me off is Rockefeller saying "$100,000 to me is like $10 to other people." Way to rub it in, Nellie. I hope Congress boots your arrogant ass all the way back to New York.

Ah yes, the man at the helm. Gerald Ford is turning out to be a virtual "Mr. Symbolism". Since taking office, the Prez has done a few numbers that would shame Franz Kafka. First, there was the initial press conference with the oh-so-suggestive open door to his rear. This was quickly followed by the amnesty joke, the Economic Summit fiasco, the President testifying before the House Judiciary Committee (an unprecedented move) and then later charging through the streets of Mexico in his shirt-sleeves. The follow-through on these moves has been highly suspect. But let's give the man time. That hairy brute of an American press has already hounded a near-saint out of office, and it better not happen again.

In the good old days, the North could look down it's nose at those "dumb rednecks" from down South, secure in the pompous knowledge that all the land above the Mason-Dixon line was the cradle of liberty and the font of equal justice. The Boston situation should have done a pretty fair job in shattering those illusions, but perhaps all it has really done is widen the scope of the generalizations. Remember, suburbia remains unthreatened, so now, when referring to those "racist hicks down South", the reflective suburbanite can tack on, as an after thought, "Oh yeah, and city people, too. Don't forget those damn city rednecks."

Eventually, these sorts of confrontations will spread until one day we realize that we are a nation packed to the brim with mistrust and fear.

And finally, the local yokels. Sargent and Dukakis were both a pair of ineffective liberals, as my roommate says, but the latter looks enough like Dustin Hoffman to have gotten my vote, anyways.

Continuing in this absurd vein, a brutal bit of news from over the waters: a man in France was sentenced to death for the murder of three prostitutes in three separate incidents. Apparently he strangled them "in arguments over whether they were working conscientiously enough". Ugh. It's back to those Peanuts books for this boy.

Letters to the editor

Reverse discrimination

To the Editor:

I feel that I am being discriminated against on this campus because of my race; I am white.

The blacks on this campus have special privileges on this campus simply because of race. For example:

They have New Africa House, for which there is no white equivalent. If the whites set up a "New Europe" house the blacks would start screaming "discrimination".

They have The Drum, a black-only literary magazine.

They have CCEBS, a program giving blacks preferential treatment getting loans and other aid. There is no white equivalent.

When a gang of blacks calling themselves CORP force their way in the Collegian office, refuse to give their names, and threaten violence unless their "demands" are met, a black affairs editor is put on the staff. If a group of whites demanding more Italian, Polish, or Irish news did the same thing, they would be arrested and thrown out of school.

Last year, CCEBS came to my dorm [Kennedy] to ask for money for a banquet. On close questioning, I found that this banquet was for people who had supported CCEBS, but that we should contribute since there would be seats available for the University community in general. It turned out that there were 500 seats for invited guests, and 100 for the rest of the University community. 100 seats for 25,000 people. In our dorm we had four blacks, two of whom had not paid their dorm dues. Two of these blacks attended the meeting, and said they wouldn't feel like taking part in dorm activities if the money wasn't given. This $50 donation was supported by the Head of Residence [who is black], and the Area Director [who is also black]. Under this combination of "black" mail and pressure, CCEBS got $50, and the dorm got shafted.

I mentioned all this to my Head of Residence [the day after the CORP break-in] and was labeled a racist. I tried to bring this up in the discussion section of a Sociology course [the course deals with racism among other topics] and the TA [who is black] also labeled me a racist [though not in so many words].

I first attended the University in 1962, and I was in area protest marches about the using of police dogs on unarmed blacks in Alabama. I pushed for equal rights in the military to the effect that I found it almost impossible to get promoted [the NCO's who wrote my performance reports were from the south].

I am in favor of racial equality, and to me, that means equal treatment. If I support the blacks when they are being discriminated against, I am a civil rights activist; if I support the whites on this campus, I am a racist. So be it: I am against injustice regardless of who is being discriminated against, and in this case, on this campus, it is the whites.

Bruce Jefferies

A comment on the Collegian

To the Editor:

As co-author of the report mentioned in Bill Parent's article on page three of the November 4th edition of the Collegian, I wish to comment on a few inaccuracies in need of correction.

First, the representative of Everywoman's Center is Kaymarion [one name] and not Kay Marion or Marion Kay.

Second, the statement that the Collegian is "racist, male supremecist and anti-communist" appears in the interview with Theresa Carr and not Isabel Johnson.

Third, Lawrence J. Magid stated that "during the week of October 7 thru 11 the Collegian carried a number of articles which demonstrated the kind of journalism which should dominate the paper."

There are a few statements that I would like to make at this time. Last Thursday evening, representatives from nine of the eleven [not ten] campus organizations interviewed in the report held a meeting in a campus center conference room to discuss these problems concerning the Collegian. All representatives of these organizations were unified in stating that the Collegian shows a considerable need for improvement. Throughout the two-hour meeting, a variety of grievances ranging from lost or misrepresentative articles to discriminatory attitudes were aired, with some in great detail.

Furthermore, significant concern was shown to two items not mentioned in the report. One was the make-up of the Collegian publishing board, which, according to its own constitution, sets procedures for hearing complaints by an individual or an organization concerning the paper. Specifically, eight out of the ten voting members of the publishing board are either members of the Collegian editorial staff or are personnel appointed by the Collegian editorial staff. The second item was the possibility of the Collegian becoming financially independent of student senate funding, and what effects this would bring about.

There were a number of recommendations brought forth by the meeting's participants, ranging from workshops providing analysis of the role of the media to conducting a student body survey about the paper. Although no final recommendations were reached, it was agreed that another meeting be set up for further discussion. The tentative date for this meeting is Monday, November 11. Any individual or organization representative[s] interested in attending this meeting should contact Joseph Cotter in the Veteran's Coalition Office, Room 411, S.U.B. for further details.

I suggest that the report, entitled, "The Collegian: How well is it doing:" be published in its entirety. All those who participated in the report were notified that every attempt would be made to have it published, and each organization has validated its own statements for accuracy. Also, the students have a right to this information because it is their paper. It is funded in part with their money. Therefore they have both an interest and an investment in it.

In closing, I believe that the issues concerning the Collegian are being discussed by more than just a handful of people, and the paper should make every attempt to bring these issues out into the open.

Leo who?

"If I got the same unbiased news coverage as Sargent and Dukakis, there is no question I could win."
-Leo Kahian, American Party candidate for Governor

In case you didn't realize it, there were four, yes four candidates for Governor in last Tuesday's election, and no matter who you supported the fact is that two of those candidates were for all intents and purposes shut out of the democratic process in a most disgraceful fashion. Those two candidates, in case you still haven't heard their names, are Donald Gurewitz of the Socialist Worker's Party and Leo Kahian of the American Party.

The names don't ring a bell? It's really not surprising. Both candidates have been the victims of what amounts to little less than a conspiracy between the media and the two "major party" candidates. Some of the Catch-22 scenarios that they have been caught in between these two groups border on the absurd. For instance, Channel 7 in Boston offered one and a half hours prime time to the candidates, but only on the condition that all four candidates appear. Kahian and Gurewitz accepted, Sargent and Dukakis declined, and the prime time was lost.

"What are they afraid of?" asks Leo Kahian in an interview with the Boston Globe, which is one of the prime media offenders. Indeed, what do they fear? The fact of the matter is that Kahian's campaign contains strong stands on many issues that the voters are genuinely concerned about this year, such as abortion, busing, and compulsory water flouridation. Another fact of the matter is that Kahian's campaign could very likely have had a major effect on the outcome of the election, indeed he could have won, if he had been given equal exposure.

While the same may not apply to Gurewitz, there still was certainly no reason for shutting off people's access to the only viable alternative on the opposite end of the political spectrum. If he hadn't been able to win, Gurewitz could at least have exercised something of a Wallace effect on the outcome of the election, but he too was never given a chance.

How about the newspapers? Both of Boston's major papers practically blacked out both candidates. The Globe did run a feature on both candidates last Sunday, but beyond that how much more than passing mention did either candidate get? The Globe's editorial endorsing Sargent for Governor did not even mention Gurewitz and Kahian, it merely weighed the merits of Sargent vs. Dukakis and ignored everyone else. Newspapers in the rest of the state, and media in general, did no better.

Unfortunately, this treatment of minority candidates is nothing new to the American political scene. Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm's 1972 presidential candidacy was all but ignored, and Chisholm had to do a lot of screaming just to be allowed to sit on a panel of Democratic presidential hopefuls slated for national television exposure. Of course, the network handling the show had only thought to invite Humphrey, Muskie, McGovern and Wallace. Gurewitz has also faced the syndrome prior to this year when he ran as a Socialist Workers candidate for U.S. Senate against Ted Kennedy and Josiah Spaulding in 1970.

A lot of people in this country do a lot of talking about the merits of the two party system and how important it is to the preservation of our democracy. But it has its dangers, too, and the danger of shutting third and fourth parties out of the process is one of the most insidious. Until we recognize and start dealing with this problem we have no right to call ourselves a democracy. The only thing we have a right to is a two party dictatorship.

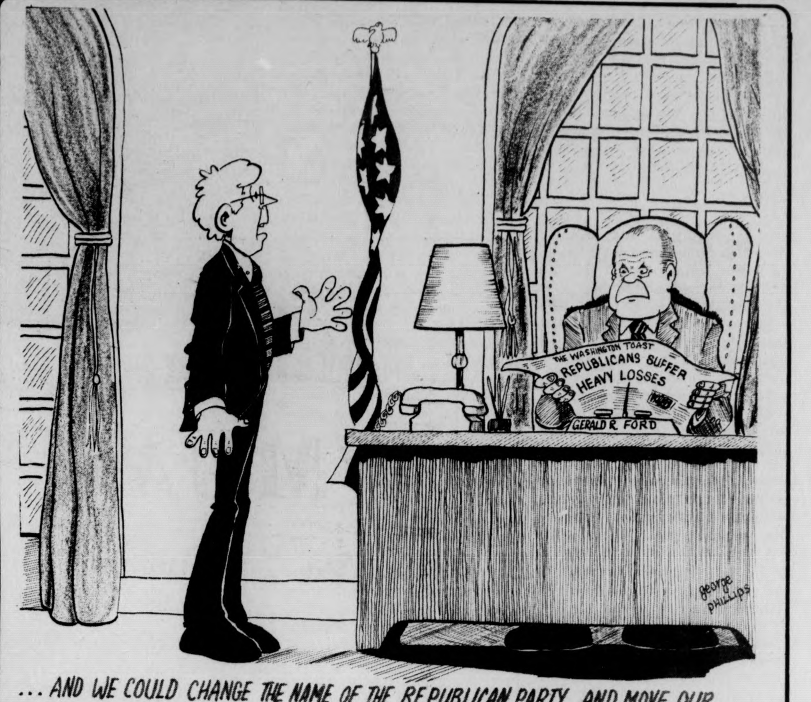
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.



... AND WE COULD CHANGE THE NAME OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, AND MOVE OUR HEADQUATERS TO A SECLUDED PLACE IN SOUTH AMERICA !?

And as the SOP sets slowly in the west

Whatever happened to the National Football League's Player Association strike?

That's a question UMass student government leaders should be asking themselves while their demands for student power increase.

The football players, recall, wanted more of a say in some of the owners' decisions---especially in trades. The players felt they were being treated like pawns in a chess game by computerlike owners. NO FREEDOM, NO FOOTBALL, their automobile bumper stickers read as the group went on strike.

But as the summer training camp wore on, some players broke the picket line fearing non-protesting rookies and free agents were winning their jobs. Compound that with a two-week cooling off period that saw everyone reporting to camp but no one leaving after that period ended.

The strike was over. The players, for all their Doomsday strike promises, didn't get a thing from the owners. The players failed and will, in all probability, never be able to organize themselves seriously again.

And that's what could happen to student power if the ball is not kept rolling by the student government leaders. If they "peter out" with their initiative, then the administration might never again take student demands seriously.

One can envision some future Chancellor saying to his gathered assistants, "Don't worry about this demand for power. Back in 1974 the students went on a power kick. We met with 'em and said how we agreed with them in principle. But it was just a phase and we're seeing it again right now. Like before, we'll ride it out."

For Rick Savini and company, there is no turning back short of full surrender to the administration.

The opinions expressed in this space represent those of a majority of the board of Editors

The title takes its toll

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY

In view of the recent attempt to change certain job titles, i.e. Garbagemen are now Engineers, the Typing Pool is now the Word Power Center, I feel as though we must continue. Titles should indicate exactly what the position implies. With that in mind, I have compiled the following title changes.

Starting off within the restaurant business we now will find Food Distribution Consultants instead of waitresses and waiters. Then we will see Food Preparation Engineers who once were cooks. And finally, the persons now called Ceramic Inventory Controllers were once mere dishwashers.

And what about Consciousness Raising Individuals? Let's see Estrogenous Consciousness Raisers instead of Feminists. Or Consciousness Lowering Technicians for Police officers. Then we can see Counter-culture Insurance Agents in lieu of Dope Dealers. Ambidextrous consciousness raisers are merely two-fisted dope rollers.

Getting into the Lovers and Other Strangers category, we can see Neurosis Distributors instead of Jewish mothers. Child Production Engineers were once more commonly known as parents. Under Child Production Engineers we can see the sub-category of Executive Domestic Affairs Director instead of the Housewife. And next we have the Alternative Youth Advisory Board which used to be called the Babysitting pool. We can easily figure out that Errongenous Zoning Engineers is the new euphemism for lovers. Tea and Sympathy Advisors can be used instead of best friends, while Trans-wardrobe Distributors are roommates.

Population Distributions Transmitters sounds much better than Bus Drivers, in my opinion. I also believe that Verbal Diarhetoric Throwers expresses the true nature of Journalists. I'd like to see Non-committal-but-at-least-we-smile-alot Personnel rather than Liberals. Moss Accumulation Personnel could be used for those persons now referred to as Hatch Rats, Fuck-up Machine Operators instead of Computor Technicians and Computer Technicians instead of Pinball Players.

Out of all the medium in the communications field, television is the most powerful medium. Positive or negative images can be projected and absorbed as soon as one knob is turned. It is important, that is, it is imperative that citizens have access to this medium.

Channel 57, WGBY, in Springfield, is a public service television station which gives access to citizen groups more so than any other station in the Western Massachusetts area. This is of special relevance to minority groups who historically have been "benignly" neglected by television stations. Having access to production time at Channel 57, WGBY, minority and special interest groups help educate and inform citizens not aware of these groups' programs and purpose.

Larry Scott, a minority student, provided technical service as production assistant to minority and special interest groups. Larry was technically involved in 138 hours of programming by minority and special interest groups at Channel 57.

During his semester of service at Channel 57, Larry was also a full-time student at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst. He earned twelve university credits in — his major field because he was participating in the experimental education program, University Year for ACTION. Larry was one of 81 students in agencies from: Worcester to North Adams, from Springfield to Pittsfield, in housing, education, health services, legal aid, community planning and environmental education, developing programs which improved services to the community.

Venceremos Brigade

University Year for ACTION (UYA), an experimental education program has begun its sixth program year working to alleviate problems of low-income communities. Since September of 1971, UYA at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst has placed over 380 students in agencies in western Massachusetts.

If you want to experience a meaningful role through education as Larry has, there are a few part-time or full-time positions available for this semester such as: Psychology Assistants and Sensorimotor Assistant at Belchertown State School; Program Development Assistant at Berkshire Unlimited; Community Organizer and Outreach Worker at the Family Planning Council of Western Mass.; Volunteer Coordinator at Northampton State Hospital; Rehabilitation Facilitator at the Occupational & Vocational Development Center for the Handicapped in Haydenville, Mass.; Legal Pre-professional at Central Mass. Legal Services; Alternative Education Teachers at Friendly House; and Community Worker at the South End Community Center.

The Venceremos Brigade announced today that applications are now being accepted for the 8th contingent of the Brigade to Cuba.

Since 1969 the Venceremos Brigade has sent over 2000 North Americans to Cuba, not just to visit, but to contribute to its development by working in the canefields, the citrus orchards, and in the construction of people's housing.

The 8th contingent will leave in March, 1975 to spend two months in Cuba. For six weeks brigadistas work with Cuban students and workers in helping to build the new town of Los Naranjos, part of a cattle raising and citrus growing plan outside of Havana.

During this work period, the North American brigadistas live with the Cubans in a camp near the work site. In addition to cultural presentations by Cuban music and dance artists and screenings of Cuba's world-renown documentary films, the brigadistas receive talks from representatives of various ministries and mass organizations in Cuba, as well as visits from delegations of other countries.

The 7th contingent, for example, was honored by visits and talks with delegations from Vietnam, Puerto Rico and the Chiean Committee in Solidarity with the Anti-Fascist Resistance.

The two week trip across Cuba that each Brigade takes after its work period serves to fortify the understanding gained by working side by side with the Cuban people.

In every province the brigadistas meet the political leaders of the town, talk with trade union members in the factories, members of the Women's Federation, community members in the local block committees, the Young Pioneers, and even go into homes and talk with families.

Applications for those interested in going to Cuba on the Brigade will be accepted through November by regional committees located in 14 cities across the United States: Amherst-Springfield, Committees will be responsible for applications acceptance.

In selecting Brigade members, Regional Committees look for people who are involved in the many sectors of the progressive movement. These include people who are active in popular movements, such as trade union movements, the fight for decent housing and health care, movements against inflation and to change repressive legislation, to fight for the rights of national minorities, to improve education, etc. An important part of this effort is aimed at insuring participation by Black, Puerto Rican, Chicano, Native American and Asian activists.

In July 1974, the Venceremos Brigade, with the cooperation of other groups, sponsored 'Cuba-Chile '74: Two Faces of Latin America' in 15 different cities of the United States. Audiences totaling 8000 gathered at the numerous concerts, film showings, rallies, and expositions to express their support for the Chilean people and to commemorate July 26, 1953 — the date of the first armed uprising against the Batista tyranny in Cuba.

If you are interested in going on the Brigade or would like more information about it, contact: Venceremos Brigade — Western Mass., P. O. Box 415, Amherst, Mass. 01059.

Jackson State hearings

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

A three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has ruled that the officers on riot duty at Jackson State College over-reacted when they fired into a dormitory on May 14, 1970.

The relatives of victims, two killed and seven students wounded, however, will not be able to collect damages from the State of Mississippi.

The court upheld a jury conclusion that individual members of the Mississippi Highway Patrol and the Jackson Police Dept. who fired were protected by sovereign immunity provisions of the U.S. Constitution and Mississippi law.

But in stinging language Judge John C. Godbold wrote an opinion that concluded the "barrage of gunfire far exceeded the response that was appropriate.

"This conclusion is not judicial second-guessing of officers faced with danger rendered from the quiet and safety of judges' chambers. It is the evidence shows".

Named as defendants were 43 officers from the Mississippi Highway Patrol and 26 Jackson policemen. A jury earlier acquitted them of individual or collective responsibility for the shootings.

Gray Panther

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

The national Gray Panthers will hold a one-day conference in New York on November 9, at the Central Presbyterian Church, 593 Park Avenue. Registration starts at 9:00 a.m.

The theme "Age is Opportunity" sets the tone for the one day Conference. Maggie Kuhn, National Convener and Founder of the Gray Panthers will be the keynote speaker. A panel will focus on "Fixed Income, the Struggle to Live", and will be moderated by Dr. Cameron Hall. Panel members included, among others, a Health-Pac staff analyst and researcher of Federal and National Health Programs.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Tensions and counter-tensions on the celestial scene make a precisely predictable week all but impossible. Ups and downs on all levels of life cause careers to bloom or fade personal relationships to be strengthened or diminished with little warning either way. Occupations and preoccupations are apt to bring material gain one day and little but frustration and disappointment the next. Lovers are inclined to quarrel: enemies may quite suddenly find a pathway to friendship emerging from the unexpected discovery of much in common. There is little to bolster egos on the one hand — and must to instill self-confidence on the other. Success and failure seem at times to vie with each other for the last word, while good moods and bad alternate in swift succession.

Those who are wise in the ways of the world will make no plans that are not flexible. More important than a basis in soundness where plans are concerned this week is an ability to change horses mid-stream — or anywhere else that circumstances demand. This is no week for those who are set in their ways — but it is also no week for those who insist that the new and different are all that are important, all that will insure progress. Rather, this is a week when the new and the old must exist in harmony together, just as the usual and the unusual must be at peace with each other.

SCORPIO (Oct. 22-Nov. 7) — There is no excuse for ignoring the advice of others. Make certain that you know which side your bread is buttered on this week. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — Business affairs are such that there may be much confusion early in the week. Make an effort to cooperate with co-workers — even those you dislike.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec 7) — Though a number of new schemes may present themselves early in the week, you would do well to ignore all but the most flexible. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — If you would add appreciably to your business or professional income, act at once on the suggestion of one who has recently known great success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Investigate any new plans for gain, especially should you be asked for a cash contribution to get the scheme underway. Take your time. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Profits run high where partnership activities are concerned. On the other hand, there is much to indicate that present partnerships may dissolve.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Take no notice of those who are blowing their own horns. There is much to be gained by sharing knowledge about present endeavors. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — Execute your plans quickly — but don't rely on other people's approval of them. Results may not be what you expected — though they may well be good.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 5) — Promises may be kept even though you may have changed your mind about what prompted them. Don't be surprised to be charged with error. (March 6-March 20) — If you would be able to take advantage of present opportunities, take the time and effort needed to inform higher-ups of your abilities.

ARIES (March 21-April 4) — A week when flattery, though it may be easy to apply to another's ego, will gain you very little. Take care not to rest on your laurels. (April 5-April 19) — Logic serves you well, when it serves you at all, this week. Don't be alarmed should the illogical seem to take over now and again.

TAURUS (April 20-May 5) — Keep to what you know well, especially during the early days of the week when success is an unpredictable outcome of time and effort. (May 6-May 20) — Make your ideas practical ones and you will have little to fear from higher-ups should a diminishing of the labor force be in the making. Remain alert.

GEMINI (May 21-June 6) — Conservative action must be alternated with progressive action if you are to be able to take advantage of what the week has to offer. (June 7-June 20) — Present profits may not be enough to gain your ultimate ends. Make your way easier by following the advice of an old friend. Remember an old rule.

CANCER (June 21-July 7) — Take care not to plan too much activity this week. This is an excellent time for changing your life-style — but only if loved ones agree. (July 8-July 22) — Be wise in your selection of the week's activities. Otherwise, you may choose with an eye to profits only and, thus, bring failure upon yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 7) — Disruptions on the home front cannot be counted upon to disturb things on the employment scene. The ways and means prescribed may not be sufficient. (Aug. 8-Aug. 22) — A fast-moving week during which difficulties with present business or profession increase in some aspects and decrease in others.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — A tendency to begin immediately to act upon any suggestions others may offer may make this a week of unexpected surprises for all. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Impulsive moves may not be as difficult to deal with as usual this week. Where youngsters are concerned, think over your advice once again.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Delay carrying out intentions. Otherwise, you may find that you have blocked your own changes of heart and mind. Consider new reforms. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Unless you can deal efficiently with lapses of discipline on the home front, you can hardly expect to deal with them on the employment scene. Act!

US agents blockade Florida; capture drugs and lobsters

MIAMI [UPI] — The first sea blockade of American waters since the Civil War resulted in seizure of an ounce of marijuana and 50 undersize lobsters, informed sources said Wednesday.

The blockade of 275 miles of Florida's east coast by 29 vessels and six aircraft, which began at 5 p.m. Tuesday, ended on schedule at 11 a.m. Wednesday.

Sources said the blockade was aimed generally at curbing drug smuggling into Florida, and specifically at possible interception of a vessel believed to be carrying 5,000 pounds of marijuana. The boat was believed manned by a crew which apparently hijacked other vessels and killed those aboard.

Jazz group salutes "Duke" in free concert this evening

A tribute to the late Edward Kennedy (Duke) Ellington will be presented by the University of Massachusetts Jazz Workshop in a concert today, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The program is open to the public without charge.

The Jazz Workshop will be divided into three ensembles, two large and one chamber size, and these will be under the direction of Jake Epstein, Max Roach and Frederick Tillis.

Internationally known saxophonist Archie Shepp will appear as soloist with the Voices of New Africa in the performance of an Ellington composition arranged and scored by Jake Epstein. Dr. Horace Boyer is the director of the Voices of New Africa Choir.

Included on the program will be several compositions by Ellington arranged or orchestrated by student and faculty members of the Jazz Workshop and the local community.

"Navarac," a fantasy on Duke Ellington's "Caravan," by Frederick Tillis, will be premiered on this concert.

Ellington, who has appeared in concerts all over the world, is best-known for his composition, "Mood Indigo."

THE LATE, GREAT "DUKE" ELLINGTON, shown in a UMass concert last Fall, will be honored tonight in a free concert presented by the UMass Jazz Workshop.

Tony Hefferan, IRA leader speaks tonight about conflict in Ireland

Tony Hefferan, the leader of Sinn Fein (the official Irish Republican Army), will speak tonight at 7:30 in Thompson 106.

Hefferan, 25 years old, will speak on the political activity of the Sinn Fein in its movement of the freedom, civil rights, and unity of the people in Ireland, Northern Ireland in particular. He is from Dublin, and is in this country to work with the Irish Republican Clubs in raising support.

This educational event is being presented by the Orchard Hill Area along with the Irish Cultural Society of UMass and the New America Movement.

Health Services to decide privacy policy

Health Services will meet today to decide what policies it will develop to satisfy the "Protection of the Rights and Privacy" Amendment, a new federal law which gives students the right to inspect confidential records their schools file on them.

The meeting will be held in the Conference Room in the Health Center at 9 a.m.

In the past, students were only occasionally allowed to examine their health records at the UMass Health Center, and only in the presence of a physician.

An important question to be decided is whether it will be necessary for a doctor to be present to interpret medical records for students who wish to evaluate them.

Higgins' 1974-75 hoop preview

Improved Braves to cop title

By BOB HIGGINS
Sports Staff

With most New Englanders caught up in the excitement surrounding the Patriots' surge to prominence, the fact that Boston's only championship team started playing a few weeks ago has gone by unnoticed.

The Celtics have begun their defense of the NBA title, and from all indications it should be an interesting season. So far, injuries and newcomers have played a big role in the standings.

So here is an analysis of the 1974-75 NBA season, with teams in predicted order of finish.

ATLANTIC DIVISION

BOSTON: Even with Cowens out for two months with a broken foot, they have enough to take the division. Havlicek, Silas, Nelson and White can carry them, and rookies Stacom and McDonald will help out.

BUFFALO: Only serious threat to Celtics, possessing an abundance of talent. Besides McAdoo and Ernie D. (after he comes back after his knee injury), they have Jim McMillian, Garfield Heard, Randy Smith, Jack Marin, and newly acquired Bob Weiss. If they put it together they could be unbeatable.

PHILADELPHIA: The 76er's have improved (not exactly a monumental achievement after the past few years), but the question is how much. Billy Cunningham, who does as much jumping between leagues as he does on the court, will be a great asset, as will a healthy Doug Collins. Beyond that, there's trouble.

NEW YORK: DeBusschere, Lucas, Reed, and Meminger are gone. The Knicks still have the best offensive backcourt in the league, and Bill Bradley is more than adequate. But John Gianelli, Phil Jackson, and assorted other clowns up front are cause for alarm.

CENTRAL DIVISION

WASHINGTON: (previously Capital, previously Baltimore): Another extremely talented team, with Elvin Hayes, a healthy Wes Unseld, and a backcourt of Chenier and Porter. Dubious bench strength, but should go far.

ATLANTA: The Hawks unloaded Maravich and Bellamy for a zillion draft choices from the expansion New Orleans Jazz. Three of these choices are potential stars; Hawaii's Tom Henderson, Utah's Mike Sojourner (last year's NIT MVP), and mystery hardship choice John Drew, currently averaging 25 points a game. Add them to Lou Hudson, and newly-acquired Bob Kaufman and Dean Meminger, and the Hawks are a team to be reckoned with.

HOUSTON: Only two noteworthy names, Tomjanovich and Murphy. Some other talent, but not enough.

CLEVELAND: Same situation as the Rockets; who is there after Carr and Cleamons? Will finally escape the cellar thanks to...

NEW ORLEANS: This is expansion at its finest. Winless in their first eight tries, the Jazz are (is?) going nowhere.

MIDWEST DIVISION

DETROIT: Lanier has become one of the best, and Bing always has been. To go along with them, Cuutis Rowe, George Trapp, Don Adams, and Willie Norwood. Should go a long way.

MILWAUKEE: Kareem lost his temper and will be out for another month. Still, Lucius Allen, Jon McGlocklin, Notre Dame rookie Gary Brokaw, and a few others will keep them in range until Jabbar returns.

CHICAGO: One of my favorite teams, but even with the addition of Nate Thurmond, I doubt they can do it. Bob Love and Norm Van Lier are trying to renegotiate, and most of the team is over thirty.

SEATTLE: Yes, folks, he's really 7' 4", but no, Tom Burleson's not Kareem. Still, he's got potential, and he has the best teacher possible in coach Bill Russell. This means the amazing Spencer Haywood can move to forward, and with Archie Clark in the backcourt, they'll be, at the least, interesting.

GOLDEN STATE: They're not the same team as last year. Rick Barry will get his 25-30 per game, and Butch Beard and Jeff Mullins will help him out. No future to speak of, either.

LOS ANGELES: Talent abounds, but little cohesiveness. Gail Goodrich is a premier guard, despite a tendency to gun. Elmore Smith's improving at center, and Cazzie Russell will join Connie Hawkins up front.

PHOENIX: Charlie "Machine Gun" Scott and a few guys named Erickson, Autrey, Van Arsdale, Melchionni, etc. First draft choice John Shumate would have helped, but he's out at least for the season and possibly for his career with a blood clot in his lung.

ROOKIE OF THE YEAR: Portland's Bill Walton.

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER: Buffalo's Bob McAdoo.

WORLD CHAMPIONS: Buffalo Braves.

It took a super effort by the Celts to beat the Braves in last year's playoffs. Buffalo will have another year's experience, and if they get by Boston, they should go all the way.

ERNIE D's knee injury notwithstanding, the Buffalo Braves should go on to bigger things this year. One of the reasons will be Garfield Heard (far right).

WMUA

Saturday afternoon the Minutemen try to regain their winning ways as they travel to Worcester, Mass. to take on the Crusaders of Holy Cross. Join Larry Convoy and Russ Small for all the excitement of NCAA Football. Game time is 1:30, air time is 1:20 on the voice of the Minutemen, WMUA, 91.1 FM.

Volleyballers win

After a slightly disappointing start, the women's intercollegiate volleyball team has produced two wins in the last week, boosting the varsity's record to 3-3, and the JVs to 2-3.

On October 30th, the varsity sunk Mt. Holyoke by a score of 15-12 twice to sweep a best-of-three match. The JVs also swept.

Tuesday night, both squads were victorious again in sweeps over American International College.

The volleyballers enter the second-half of their slate with a tri-meet November 12th at Bridgewater State.

UM Flyers to flour Falls

On Sunday November 10, the UMass Collegiate Flying Club will sponsor a flying meet at Turners Falls Airport.

The meet, open to all licensed pilots on campus will start at 11:00. Pilots are recommended to be there at 10:30 to learn the rules.

There will be two events: the first being a spot landing contest, where a pilot is expected to land as close to a predetermined line as possible.

The second event is the flour bombing contest, where the pilot and crew will drop bags of flour on a predetermined spot on the runway.

Trophies will be awarded to the winner of each event. Refreshments will be served after the meet.

For further information call Les Ball, Vice President of the Collegiate Flying Club at 665-3650.

Booters tie Springfield, 2-2 Tournament chances dimmed

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

Whoever said that a tie is like kissing your sister is wrong. A tie is more like wanting to kiss your grandmother but her saying no.

At least that was the way it seemed from the UMass side of things yesterday as they played to a 2-2 tie with Springfield College.

The game was an exciting, hard-fought, well-played contest that was characterized by players slipping and sliding all over the wet field for most of the afternoon.

Coach Al Rufe's Minutemen started the game in quite different alignment than previous contests. First of all Buddy Butler started his first game in goal and performed quite well after some early trouble with the slickness of the wet ball. Also Mo Othman started at fullback rather than his usual forward position. These changes were made in order to deal with injuries to Ken Banda and Dean Lungu both fullbacks out with knee problems.

Springfield College opened the scoring very early in the game. Forward Dennis Lukens took a pass from just over midfield from Steve Paylor out in front of the UMass net. He faked one Minuteman defender to the left and then fired a shot in on goal. Buddy Butler got his hands on the ball but could not hold onto it and the ball slipped past him and bounced untouched into the net. The score came at 4:48 of the first half.

Springfield was now flying and the Minutemen seemed shook. The Chiefs again brought the ball downfield effectively but this time Butler came out to take a scoring chance away from a Springfield forward with a good diving grab.

Here it seemed that things changed and for the next thirty minutes the play was much more wide open with both teams making some good passes at centerfield but neither being able to complete their plays in front of the net. Both goaltenders made a few nice saves. At one point the Springfield goalkeeper was caught way out of position to the left of his net but the Minutemen could not get control of the ball enough to send it out in front for a good scoring chance.

UMass finally got on the scoreboard at 35:52 of the first half. Tom Coburn was moving with the ball at the left of the net. He faked a Springfield defender to the inside and then went around him to the outside, paused and then fired a shot across out in front. Bob Stanley moved in on the pass and headed it right at the Springfield goalie who made the save. The rebound fell to his left and Bill Belcher was there to pop it by him into the far right of the net and the score was tied. Spyker was credited with an assist on the play.

When the first half ended the score was tied 1-1. Both teams had missed some chances and both goaltenders had saved some tough ones. The crowd, along with the players and coaches, questioned quite a few of the referees calls in the half. More than once it appeared that offsides should have been whistled that were not. Also a few times a referee on one side of the field called one thing while the referee on the other side of the field called something different.

When the second half opened both teams came onto the field flying.

UMass scored first with Tom Coburn getting the score unassisted on a strange play. The ball was up in the air in front of the net. The Springfield goalie moved out to meet it and as he did it came down and Coburn directed it with his chest by the goalie and it dribbled past him and into the net. The score came at 2:02 but the UMass lead was shortlived.

Springfield came back a minute later to tie the game up. After a few good head-balls out in front Pete Chandler headed it by Buddy Butler out of a scramble of players.

The rest of the game was frustration for both teams, but especially UMass as it looked as if SC was going to settle for a tie while the Minutemen really wanted and needed the win.

QUICK SHOTS — Playoffs hopes are dim now. Other teams must lose for UMass to make it. Last game of the regular season is this Saturday versus UNH at 1:30 p.m. across from Boyden.

Havlicek scores 40 points; C's bop Portland, 128-110

BOSTON [UPI] - Celtic Veteran John Havlicek exploded for 40 points Wednesday night and young Paul Westphal provided pinpoint shooting as Boston rolled past the Portland Trailblazers 128-110.

Westphal, the NBA's leader in shooting percentage, hit seven for eight attempts from the floor and added two free throws to notch 18 points. Forward Sidney Wicks paced the Portland attack with 26 points.

Leading 56-49 at halftime, the Celtics mounted two scoring bursts of 12-4 and 10-0, fired by Havlicek's 11 points, but let Portland off the hook each time. Geoff Petrie led the Trailblazers back from 84-72 less than two minutes from the end of the third period to just a four point deficit, 84-80 entering the final stanza.

The Celtics withered Portland's hopes in the fourth period as Havlicek sparked an overwhelming fast break attack with 13 points. Boston fed the fast break with key rebounding as Portland rookie Bill Walton, the league's leading rebounder, tired of the pace.

The first period was a tense, well-balanced contest which left the score knotted at 26-26.

UPI honors Texas' Martin

NEW YORK [UPI] — "Battling" Billy Martin of the Texas Rangers, who took what many labelled "The Worst Team in Baseball" to within five games of the World Champion Oakland Athletics in their division, today was named by United Press International as the 1974 American League Manager of the Year.

Martin, whose Rangers finished with an 84-76 record — five games behind the A's in the AL West, edged Bill Virdon of the New York Yankees by one vote in UPI's cross-country survey of its baseball correspondents.

Prior to taking over the Rangers near the end of the 1973 season, Martin acknowleged his team was considered by many to be "The Worst in Baseball" and that his first priority would be "to change that attitude."

That he did — as was witnessed by the Rangers' remarkable turnaround in '74. The 1973 club had finished last in the AL West with a 57-105 record, 37 games behind the champion A's.

Of course, Martin had some help — via a transfusion of some new players — in making Texas a winner. For one, the Rangers acquired righthander Ferguson Jenkins from the Cubs during the off-season and he proceeded to win 25 games in '74 to tie the A's Jim Hunter as the winningest pitcher in baseball.

Martin also promoted two farmhands — Jim Sundberg and Mike Hargrove — who played big roles in the 1974 Rangers' season. Sundberg gave the Rangers' their first steady catcher in years, batting a respectable (for today's standards) .247, while Hargrove batted .323 and is a shoo-in for American League Rookie of the Year honors.

Martin was also instrumental in the acquisition of Jenkins, who was coming off a subpar season for the Cubs after a string of 20-win seasons. "They told me his arm was sound and that's all I wanted to know," Martin said. "We had to give up a good prospect in (third baseman) Bill Madlock, but I'd say it was worth it."

Heavyweight Muhammad Ali poses with $110,000 Custom Coach he purchased prior to knocking out George Foreman. Ali was named boxer of the year yesterday on the strength of his knockout.

MEXICO CITY [UPI] — Muhammad Ali was named Boxer of the Year Wednesday by the 10th Convention of the World Boxing Council, in its opening session here.

More than 40 WBC officials, managers, and promoters from around the world are attending the conclave. Among the participants are representatives of the British Boxing Board of Control, the European Boxing Union, the African Boxing Union, the American Federation of Boxing, the Central American Federation of Boxing, and the South American Boxing Federation.

On Thursday the convention will study modifications in the Council's rules, and on Friday delegates are scheduled to discuss promotors' problems, a WBC spokesman said.

The convention is expected to end Saturday.

Winning and losing

You win some. You lose some.

Are those words of wisdom? Pieces of pettiness? Dictates of doom? believe that they are all these things and very much more.

What is this thing called winning that envelopes almost all of us so intensely? And what is this thing called losing that does the same to us as winning but with different results?

In sports, as in life, they are the things that we live by. Nations fight wars, who will win or lose? Preachers preach sermons, who will win or lose? People play games, who will win or lose? These things are, in essence, all the same. From the moment we are born we are told that we will strive to win and never to lose. We must compete to survive and the object is to win, to be the best, to reach the top. A loser is just that, a loser. And a winner, well a winner is also just that, a winner, the people's choice and the being to be idolized.

How does this all relate to college athletics? Or more appropriately, does this all relate to college athletics? Is winning the "in" thing and is losing the "out" thing? How much emphasis should be put on the two ideals so that a feasible program can be developed in most sports that will satisfy everyone?

First of all everyone can never be satisfied. If everyone could be satisfied then there would be no problems with winning or losing. Everyone would be a winner and no one would be a loser. It would be a tie and somehow I feel that would certainly be no good.

Winning is definitely the "in" thing. Everyone loves a winner and wants to be one. But what are the costs in college sports? To win is great, but to sacrifice happines, or to be shunned because of failure is not great.

The essence of college sports is that they should be an enjoyable learning experience for everyone involved in them. When the "fun" is taken out of college athletics, for whatever reasons, the programs might as well cease than to breed bad feelings for anyone.

Losing is definitely the "out" thing. Nobody loves a loser and nobody wants to be one. But the lessons that can be gained from losing are just as great if not greater than the ones gained from winning. The fun in athletics can still be there if the people involved will let it be. The object is not to enjoy losing but to accept it as a part of life and "chalk it up to experience" and keep on trying, if that is where you see the worth. If you try your best you can do no more whether or not you win or lose.

I am not sure if college sports is this way nowadays. Have the ethics of program heads and the people involved changed themselves so much that it is no longer possible for sports to be fun? Has the pressure on participants to be winners increased so much that failing to win means shattering of confidence and security?

I hope not. I hope that everyone involved in college athletics can really say that they still love their sport. I hope they can still say that they are enjoying their experiences related to athletics and still think that those experiences are worthwhile.

If they cannot say or believe those things then it is time to ask ourselves where sports in colleges is really headed? If it is still an essential part of the overall college experience? Is it hurting people's growth rather than helping it? And if it is what can be done?

We may not find the answers but we must ask the questions. Do you really win some and lose some, or are we losing them all?

Cheech! it's a la Bode

Into the comic bronze age

by Kris Jackson

Vaughn Bode: "Like...I go to comics conventions, y'know, and I really surprise people when they talk about the "Golden Age of Comics" being EC and all that, and I say, "No, man, that was the Iron Age, and we're in the Bronze Age now, y'know, and the Golden Age will be in another ten years or so, maybe, but it hasn't happened yet".

Don McGilvray: "Yeah... yeah, man!"

Kris Jackson: "Yeah...far out!"

Vaughn Bode can't be distilled into Below the Salt words. He can't even portray himself accurately in his stories, but his own description of himself, a "pot mystic transvestite", comes pretty close. He carries a high-RPM electric field around with him that somehow consists of more than his piercing eyes or his bangled, beaded, blue-nail-polished appearance. His National perch as author of "Cheech Wizard" in National Lampoon has given him a place on the college lecture circuit which accounted for his appearance here October 24.

"There's something about us artists that's very important ...most people, most artists even, don't recognize it...it took me a long time to see it in myself — but we're magicians — we create microcosms, and carry them around with ourselves. That's why I put myself in my stories, and that's the thing about my stage show: I merge right into it and become part of it".

Tne particular occasion was the seminar on the morning before his show. "Seminar" was the official word, but "exhibit" would have done as well. Bode originals spanning his career were tacked on the wall, and Vaughn himself passed around other originals and explained his work, and, to some degree, himself.

"I invented a new cartooning format which I tried to get patented in which the balloons are completely outside the panels. I got all these balloons and panels printed up, and I just pull them out of my big box. First I write out the script, then I write the dialogue in the balloons, then I do the sketches in the panels themselves — and I do them one at a time, so that I don't get distracted by the panel beside the one I'm working on. Then I paste all the balloons and panels down on a light board and lay a sheet of three-ply Strathmore board over it, and the light coming up through casts a shadow which I just trace over with my felt-tips. I've used nothing but felt-tip markers, by the way, since 1966, altho' I use a rapidograph for touching up".

Under the combined confusion of Bode's nonlinear approach to the universe ("I am a non-text oriented person") and McGilvray's black hashish, we meandered over to WMUA for what I thought was to be a recording session for some kind of ad promoting the show that night. We sat around babbling about thats and these for a while until Scott Bacherman, the MC, said, "Well, we're ready to take a phone call".

Jackson: "What? Are we on the air?"

Scott: "Yeah. Have been for fifteen minutes. Okay, go ahead, you're on the air".

"Hello? I just want to say that I think that little story you read on the air a few minutes ago was sexist as hell!" Bode looked confused; McGilvray slid down in his seat laughing.

"Well," Bode faltered, "that's your view, and I have mine. I mean, I'm not really trying to convince anyone of anything!"

"Well, how can you justify that depiction of that woman — 'the soft one' you called her! Isn't that sexist?"

"Well, look, I gotta be me —"

McGilvray and Jackson start singing, in chorus if not in unison: "I've gotta be MEE-E-E"

"Well, you can be you without exploiting people, y'know!"

"But I'm not! I mean, you see me as exploiting women, but I'm actually in awe of them! You see me walking around, and I'm awed —"

Jackson: "I'll say you're odd — " Laughter; Bode doesn't get it. He's staring at us in puzzlement when the caller says, "Don't you feel you have any social responsibilities?"

Bode blinks at the mike in front of him. "No..."

—And he doesn't. He's in such an altered, self-fabricated universe that the petty politics and trends of the world around him have almost no bearing on him — except, occasionally, as grist for the humor mill.

"I used to have arguments with my brother. He's a super kill machine in the Marines, and he's really into killing gooks. We used to have these super arguments, but now we can just get together and enjoy each other. I put up with his trip, and he accepts my drugged-out, transvestite thing."

You could say that Bode is a self-made man. He's certainly an original design, at any rate. His hair, way past shoulder-length, is parted but apparently never groomed; his pants are leather; he wears skin-tight muscle shirts of varying colors, plus multifarous jewelry. Even his blue nail polish is not the shade that you would expect a man's blue nail polish to be, if you can handle that.

"When I first walked into the East Village Other way back when, I looked like I did when I first got out of the Army. And it really freaked them out — they went scurrying around hiding all their dope. And later on, when I was working for them, they had a bet going as to how long it would take to turn me on. 'Cause at first, y'know, I said, 'Well, I don't need that —.'"

Jackson: "I'm high on life".

"Yeah, right, I'm on myself! But you can always use tools too, y'know".

"Yeah? May I offer you one of these?"

"What is it?"

"It's pscylosibin, I think. It's only legal in religious ceremonies, so say a prayer first".

"No, I can't, I'm not even smoking, I got a show to do tonight".

"My GOD! You're being RESPONSIBLE!"

"Yeah, it's horrible..."

As for the show itself...if you didn't see it, tough shit. You don't deserve to have it described to you. Suffice it to say that, to this cartoonist at least, it was an eye-opener. It was a premonition not only of the Golden Age itself, but of what I myself could be doing. Bode's drawing is extremely practiced, but essentially simple. The story is what always carries it, and the thing about the story is the way he has freed himself from all normal constraints and conventions and just does whatever he wants to do.

I recorded the show for him to play for the National Lampoon crowd, and, after the usual post-show rush of admirers saying something to him ("I always half-expect to be kicked in the balls"), I gave him the tape. "Wow, man, you should see what that show looks like on one of these mushrooms!"

"Yeah? What's it look like, Kris?"

"It looks exactly the same!"

"Yeah? Say, could I cop one of those off of you? I'll pay ya for it..."

"Keep it, man. Souvenir of Umieland".

"Thanks! See ya round the Bluewall!"

Naples for your Staples

Understated Continental

by Lori Leiderman

Just like four leaf clovers, it's almost as hard to find an Italian restaurant that's decorated tastefully. Carlos of Naples is one exception. No gilded cupids, plastic flowers or mournful Madonnas to stare down at you while you eat your Manicotti -- just a very understated Continental atmosphere.

Exposed wooden roof beams suspending Venetian chandeliers, look down on straight-backed chairs and antique sideboards. The atmosphere is simple and relaxing and wearing blue jeans is no problem.

Carlos is inexpensive; entrees ranging from 2-5 dollars, and for these prices, don't expect the cuisine to be quite as Continental as the atmosphere. If you stick to certain menu items, your meal will be better than average.

Carlos makes a great red sauce, so anything you order in the pasta group is a safe bet. Beef Braciole ($5.25), the most expensive entree, is beef rolled around ham and seasonings covered in Carlos' red sauce. If you have some extra money, it's worth trying.

Stay away from any of the veal dishes, because Dining Commons quality veal patties are used — that is unless you like Dining Commons veal patties. Scampi Oreganati ($3.95) is much too lemony, and the sauce drowns out the taste of the other spices.

Carlos does make a terrific antipasto, though. He uses three kinds of Italian cold cuts, marinated potatoes, olives, cauliflower and traditional salad greens. The dressing is exceptional, and it's the same dressing that comes on salad side orders. Garlic and Cheese Bread ($1.05) is a bit expensive, but comes out very hot and covered with melted cheese.

Some of the more expensive entrees come with a choice of pasta or potatoe and salad. Otherwise, everything is a la carte. But since most of the best entrees are different pasta dishes with red sauce ranging between $2 and $3.25, you can afford to get some extras.

For desert, try the Cappuccino ($.65) and top it off with a slice of rum cake. All pastries are $.85, including Canolli, an Italian pastry shell stuffed with sweetened ricotta cheese and chocolate chips. If Carlos hasn't refrigerated them for too long, they should be crisp (one of ours was and one wasn't).

The service is very prompt, the food comes hot and dishes are made to order. You can bring your own bottle and make it an evening, and if you order right, you can leave with some money in your pocket and a decent meal in your stomach. Carlos isn't Naples, but it sure beats most of Northampton.

People paged, Letters & Looks

Dear Editor:

This letter is in response to an article entitled "Wine Chariot — Not A Vintage Year," which was written by Lori Leiderman and which appeared in the October 24, 1974, issue of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. I should like to point out that the article is in direct contrast to a similar article that appeared in the Collegian last spring, and which literally contained rave notices about this same restaurant.

I have been a frequent patron at the Wine Chariot Restaurant on Route 9 in Hadley, and would like to briefly express my own impressions concerning this establishment. First, a Saturday night is hardly a good time to judge the quality of any restaurant and then write a highly critical article about it. Certainly a party of ten persons who arrive at 8 p.m. without reservations on a Saturday night (as in Ms. Leiderman's case) could and should expect some delays in any good restaurant, the Wine Chariot included.

Second, a single experience is hardly a fair measure of the quality of any restaurant. I personally have had some "bad experiences" in recent years at some reputedly "famous" restaurants in Boston, New York, etc., based on a single visit. Yet these restaurants overall are probably well worth the high ratings they perennially receive. My own impression of meals served at the Wine Chariot is that they are generally of high quality and quantity. The service varies from adequate to good, depending on the night and the number of customers being served.

Third, Ms. Leiderman commented about the poor decor of the Wine Chariot Restaurant. Both myself and many friends who frequently dine there enjoy the relaxed atmosphere afforded by the travel posters, hanging wine bottles, etc., The Wine Cellar section of the Wine Chariot Restaurant offers equally attractive and atmospheric facilities for smaller groups, and it has been very popular in recent months. For those persons who desire linen table cloths, original oil paintings and gourmet food prepared at the table, the upstairs Gourmet Dining Room affords these amenities as well.

Finally, I find Ms. Leiderman's comments about the management of the Wine Chariot Restaurant to be in poor taste and grossly incorrect. The owner, manager (and presently the chief Chef), Mr. Tony DiNorcia, has put in countless hours in developing a high quality, Italian-style restaurant in the Amherst area. He deserves our support, and he welcomes constructive comments, positive or negative, from his customers on ways he can continually improve his services. I urge you to visit the Wine Chariot Restaurant, and Tony and his staff will do their best to make you a satisfied customer, But please, if you have ten people in your group and it is a Saturday evening, do call ahead for a reservation!

Marvin D. Rausch

Dear Editor;

Several weeks ago an evaluation of The Wine Chariot Restaurant in Hadley was printed in your newspaper. On Nov. 1, 1974 my wife and I decided to dine at this establishment. We were delighted with the excellent service, the courtesy of our waiter, Henry, and the overall attitude of the staff. In addition to the service, we found the food prepared in a very appetizing and tasteful manner. Also, the quantity of food was more than ample for the average person.

It really is a shame that your writer decided to evaluate this establishment under the very awkward conditions she presented them. A large party late on a busy Saturday night can not expect the very best of service in any restaurant as popular as the Wine Chariot without a reservation. I consider your evaluation of the Wine Chariot a rather unfair and slanderous one. It is a fine restaurant and I know that we both shall return there often. We recommend it to all. Bon Appetit.

John S. Bykowski

As author of "Wine Chariot-Not a Vintage Year", I would like to respond to Marv Rausch's comments. It is not my desire or to my liking to write "highly critical" reviews. But as a responsible critic, I must respond to circumstances as I see them. Not only was my article based on my personal experience and that of the nine others that accompanied me, but it was also reafirmed by many other previous Wine Chariot patrons that I have spoken to.

I do agree that a group of ten should not expect to be seated promptly and without reservations on a Saturday night. In fact, our group was told by two other restaurants that there would be a forty minute to an hour wait. If the Wine Chariot had been well managed, it should not have seated us either. Not at least until we could be served and treated properly.

Sincerely,
Lori Leiderman

This is in response to the warped mind that hid behind a fictitious name, and made a total fool of itself in the Oct. 31 edition of the Collegian. Fool,

Your attempt at humor in your anguished moment of indigestion, proved only to be a sheer waste of your energy.

Polish nationality is something beautiful, just as any other nationality. Yet some people rarely treat it with respect. To misguided people like you, who know nothing of Poland's rich culture, history or language, "Polish" only brings out a snicker; it is only something to be laughed at and never taken seriously. For you I feel sorry.

It would have taken only a moment of sober thought to realize the meaninglessness of your letter.

Looking down the barrel of fact

Situation fringed with fear

by Reid Fishman

"A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed."

So reads the second amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and its apparent vagueness and lack of modification have raised perhaps the greatest constitutional question in the nation's history. The ambiguity of the statement makes itself quite obvious. On the one hand, the amendment states that there shall be no infringements on the right to bear firearms, while at the same time, it describes the purpose of this guarantee as being the need for a "well regulated Militia."

When does a regulation become an infringement? Some would consider any regulation an infringement, while others would not be satisfied lest all firearms be banned from possession. But infringements can take many forms.

An infringement that must be taken into account in this situation is the infringement of fear. There are those in our society that would feel unsafe without a gun — naked to the criminal element. The advocates of strong gun control believe that those people are the criminal element.

When Matt Dillon stood up and said, "Don't carry a gun unless you plan to use it," he wasn't just whistling Dixie. Think about it — the only reason the police carry guns is that the criminals carry guns, and vice versa. Matt would probably have taken everybody's gun away while they were in his town.

Of course, Matt never would have dreamed that by 1974, there would be 25,000 deaths by gunfire. If he were around today, the N.R.A. would probably be lobbying his office right now. Yessirree, they would.

It would be impossible to tell all those Sunday hunters to go find another game, but it shouldn't be too much to ask the abolition of handguns, which actually serve no other purpose than that of murder, or suicide as the case may be. It's astonishing that there are about 10,000 suicides using guns each year.

Handguns should be illegal, from the Saturday night specials to the antique six-guns. As in many countries, sentences should be increased if the offender is in possession of a handgun at the time the offense was committed.

In a pamphlet printed by the Massachusetts Council on Crime and Correction, one paragraph read, "In Britain, where you need a certificate from the police to buy or own a gun, there are under 500 handguns per 100,000 people, while in the U. S., there are at least 12,000 per 100,000 and probably more. Thus in 1966, England and Wales, populated by 54½ million people, had 27 gun murders, while Houston, Texas had 150 such homicides among a population of 1½ million. In 1972, there were 2 handgun murders in London, while in Boston, with one twelfth the population, there were 43. In addition, more people are murdered by handguns every 39 hours in our own country than were murdered by all firearms in England throughout the year of 1972."

There are groups that have been working extensively to ban possession of handguns. One of them, People Vs. Handguns, is currently forming itself across Massachusetts with an organization beginning here in Amherst. According to Steven Sacks, a spokesperson for the group, "Our goal is to make the public aware of this very real menace, and then gather support for our cause."

The question still remains whether or not the public will take to being made aware, and, upon achieving this awareness, whether they'll really consider it a menace. People Vs. Handguns will attempt both of those feats, and they're going to need help doing it. So they're having a meeting tonight at 7:30 in the Newman Center Social Hall. They urge all that might be interested in this cause to make themselves known by attending the meeting.

In the very vagueness of the Bill of Rights lies the flexibility of that document. It's not up to the courts to decide this one. Gun regulation and control must come from the legislature, which is unlikely to take any stand that the people don't demand.

So lies the right of life and death, of fear and candor. The Declaration guarantees the rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness above everything else, and those rights are infringed upon by guns. If our nation is truly involved in the quest for peace, then instruments of death have no place within society.

The Saturday night specials will be the first to go, but eventually the nation will find no further use for handguns. But how many will die in the waiting?

"And the rockets' red glare, the bombs bursting in air, Gave proof, through the night, that our flag was still there. O say does that star spangled banner yet wave, O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?"

Further Exploits

by Wol
"the only one in the forest who can spell"

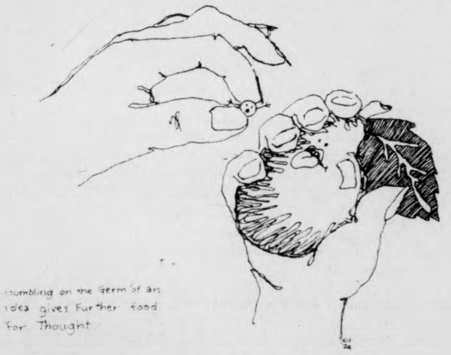
One day, when Further was walking down the shady road kicking up clouds of silver dust and minding his own business (which, by the way, consisted mainly of walking down the shady road kicking up clouds of silver dust and pausing under twinkle trees every now and again for thought), he stopped, pulled his feet out of his mouth ('save meself the trouble' was how he explained it) and studied them. After counting the toes on the only one left (the other being right), he saw that it was only a few minutes until now-and-again and went to look for the nearest twinkle tree. There was one a mere two feet (now that he had put them on the ends of his legs) away and he decided that it would be there that he would pause for thought. As he stepped out of the shade and into the light of the tree he reached up and plucked what looked like a fresh, ripe thought. When he looked at it more closely, however, he found it to be still somewhat green and therefore in need of feeding, but what could he feed it? The question had him in a quandary. While he was wandering around the quandary looking for an answer, he stubbed his toe on something and heard a tiny voice cry, "Ouch!". This discovery made him feel that perhaps he had stumbled on something of interest, so he politely inquired what it was he had tripped over.

"I'm a germ. Please don't bother me when I'm thinking," came the answer.

This puzzled Further and he asked the germ why he was thinking (fortunately he spoke german).

"Because I'm a germ of an idea, that's why."

Well, that gave him food for thought, as you can imagine, so he took the food back to the twinkle tree, fed it to the one he had just picked, ate it, became absorbed by the idea and was lost in thought for the rest of his days.



- stumbling on the Germ of an idea gives Further food for Thought

by B.J. Roche

Though the idea of A Student Union is new to this campus, it has been working at a few other schools. The Stockton Student Union at Stockton State College in Pomonoa, N.J., has been incorporated for three years. Under the school's system, members must pay dues of $1 per course taken at the college. The membership fees support the activities of the union, among which are a Student Union Legal Defense Fund, and the organizing of clothing and book co-ops.

The philosophy of the union is that it "go to bat for the needs of its members collectively and individually," according to William Buckman, Chairman of the Union.

The differences between the union and student government were explained by Buckman. Membership is only open to dues-paying students. The union is not simply de facto representation. At Stockton, a steering committee heads the union, nine members of which are elected, and others who are appointed representatives from the student organizations of the school. This insures representation of all student groups.

A formal constitution guides the union in procedure and objectives. One accomplishment by the union was an unprecedented contract with the faculty union, determining guidelines and conditions in the event that the faculty decides to strike. The contract protects the educational rights of students during a faculty strike, stipulating on credits and overtime hours to help students catch up on time lost by the strike.

The two year old union has worked mainly like a labor union, and represents approximately 50 per cent of the 2500 students at the school.

The reasons for the instituting of a union at Stockton were similar to those of UMass. New Jersey students at State Colleges pay proportionately more for higher education, and education which Chmn. Buckman referred to as "lousy." In addition, there was a dissatisfaction with Student Government, claims that it "ignored the grievances of students." A union, since it is made up of dues-paying students, must answer to the complaints of its members, either by investigation or action.

Buckman summed up his ideas on the union. "Students are also a unique type of consumer. We invest $5,000 to $10,000 on an education that we never get a written guarantee or a contract for..... This is going to be a crucial decade in terms of education and if students are going to have something to say about it, I think they're going to have to unionize.

The problems of rising costs and decreasing quality in education were also the catalysts for a union at Livingston College, a branch of Rutgers U. in New Jersey.

The union's demands deal mainly with opposition to centralization at the University, autonomy over student fees, and the cost of education.

Union membership at the school as of last January was 1100 students, but efforts at administrative responses do not seem to be successful. Demonstrations held last March to halt room and board increases failed. The union is still young however, its formal existence having begun in January 1974.

Kent State University, in Kent, Ohio, is another school which is trying a Student Union, but the efforts of the union have not been too successful. The system at Kent State is a "steward" system, where the students to to the union with complaints. Its main priorities lie with grievances of students rather than autonomy or faculty union cooperation. According to Nancy Protheroe, Director of Student Activities, the problem lies in the fact that the union is not the only vehicle by which students can obtain reactions to complaints. "The school ombudsman has had time and experience, as well as the connections involved to get things done," she said.

At a school of 18,500 students, Kent State has a union membership of about 600. Voting is done at a table set up in the Student Center, and only registered members are allowed to vote on issues. Interest in heading the union and working with it has dwindled down to about 6 people.

Ms. Protheroe went on to attribute the lack of participation to a "lack of broad based interests."

The schools we have looked at have variations in size, needs and student body makeup. A union is intended to be flexible in its responsiveness and actions according to Alwin Schmidt, UMass S.O.P worker. One thing common to every union is a need for student support and feedback, approval or disapproval. How do you feel about a Student Union at UMass?

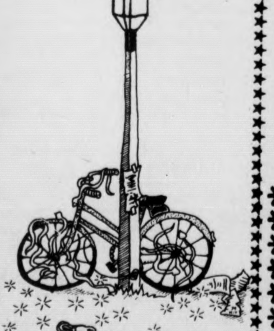
Found memories, B: TRASH

Remember a time you were late for your 8:00 class, and you came speeding out the front door of the dorm, heading for your trusty bike and — blecch! spaghetti all over the frame and twined around among the spokes like lovesick snakes in a honeysuckle vine? It is a crisp November morning and the broken glass is glittering like frost. The lawn looks like the aftermath of an explosion on Wall Street, and the variety of literature is comparable to that once housed in the famed library at Alexandria.



Taking all this wealth of Americana in at one experienced glance you tear the cold Medusa-hair spaghetti from your bicycle just as this dude saunters out. This dude, you're sure you saw him leaning out a window eight floors above the front door taking pot shots at his compatriots with empty beer bottles on Friday night, but he gives you the Evil Eye and says sternly,

"Hey, you, pick up ya ga'bage."

Fond Memories
Installment A

Remember waking up in the morning and either hanging on to the edge of the bed for dear life or being jammed up against the radiator and getting a third degree burn on your arm? Your hair is in one humungous rats nest on top of your head except the few stray strands that are plastered to your forehead which has more oil on it than can be found in the entire Mid-East. All the crud is gathered in the corners of your eyes, your nose feels like you have inhaled the Mojave Desert, Napoleon's troops have definitely found your mouth on their way to Moscow and you smell like a rhinoceros. You roll over and there is a dude looking as rotten as you feel and he says the immortal line:

You look sexy in the morning"

The Way It Was Great Sports Events From the Past
Edited by George Vecsey
Introduction by Curt Gowdy
$14.95 P. 252
McGraw-Hill Book Company, N.Y.

Recently the Mobil Oil Company has sponsored a show for the Public Broadcast System called The Way It Was. Aging participants of past great sporting events are gathered together in television studios to tell you how it all happened. In addition there are film clips relating to the event itself. This book with the same name is about the show and the events; yet while the television series is no doubt a good one, it couldn't be better than this excellent book version.

The Way It Was, edited by George Vecsey deals with some of the greatest moments of sports in America during the twentieth century: From Joe Louis-Billy Conn Heavyweight Championship Fight of 1941 through Bobby Thomson's heroic home run in 1951 to give the Giants a playoff victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers. In addition, there are stories about the Boston Celtics—Los Angeles Lakers NBA Championship Playoff in 1962, won by the Celtics when Frank Selvy's last minute shot rolled off the rim, and the last "Subway World Series" between the Yankees and Dodgers!

The book mixes a very humanistic approach to the sports events with classic journalism. The writers involved in the book are truly among the best sportswriters in the country. Leonard Koppett tells about the aging Joe Louis, with just enough left to knock out Billy Conn. George Vecsey gives the reader an in depth view of the rivalries and trivialities of the St. Louis Cardinals—Boston Red Sox World Series, October 1946. Larry Merchant one of the first "new journalists" to deal with personalities as well as box scores tells about the last Philadelphia Eagles Championship, against the Packers in 1960. Gerry Eskenazi gives a very personal view of the temper and psyche of "Rocket" Richard as well as the emotional fabric of the entire game of hockey in his piece entitled "The Great International Hockey War", about the Detroit—Montreal Stanley Cup Playoff in 1954.

The Way It Was is just a nice book to have around. If you are from a family of armchair jocks or Monday morning quarterbacks, pick it up as a gift. The in depth creative writing of the sports writers, mixed with the present day memoires of the participants makes for truly enjoyable reading. After Joe Louis knocked out Billy Conn, Leonard Koppet writes:

"I guess maybe I had too much guts — and not enough Common sense," Conn said in the dressing room afterwards. First he had cried openly,... Then Conn said a strange thing: 'I shouldn't have got up at 4. I should have taken a 9-count that first time I was knocked down.'

"Evidently," writes Koppet "he thought he had been knocked down twice, and that he had stood up too soon once. None of that had happened. It was a measure of how thoroughly he had been knocked out."

One of the most interesting things that you get from reading The Way It Was is both the appreciation for sports as a part of society, and the sense of perspective you get about the part that sports should play in society. Baseball games are fun to watch, but in the day before T.V. provided instant entertainment many people in the inner city lived for that day "at the ballpark". The ballparks seemed to have more character then, they were used for more than background music "for a business deal" conference in the company box seats.

All this comes through in the book: The character of the crowds, the passion of the participants. Rocky Graziano really wanted to knock out Sugar Ray Robinson with a passion totally independent of money in 1954 (Robinson knocked him out instead). Another element comes through, the humor of the participants in retrospective. Today Robinson and Graziano are best of friends, and Rocky is a very wealthy man for having his punched out face on television doing commercials.

From reading this book you realize that sports should be enjoyed as a part of life, a real part of the American scene; but just as games, and not to be taken too seriously. Commenting on his feelings before hitting the game winning home run in the 1951 playoff, former Giant Bobby Thomson said, "As we went back in the dugout for our last out, I never felt worse in my life...just total dejection...I was the fifth hitter and I thought, see you know, the way New (Don Newcombe, Dodger Star pitcher) was throwing out there, I figured we're dead, I'm dead, I'm not ever gonna get a chance to hit." But Thomson did come up to hit. Ralph Branca came in for Newcombe in relief, and Thomson smashed the pennant winning shot. Today Branca is philosophicabout the whole thing, "I think ultimately it was a blessing in disguise. Had I gotten him out, people would have forgotten me. Subsequently, I hurt my back and didn't pitch much after that. Had I gotten him out, I would have just disappeared and been another guy who played in the big leagues."

If you like sports pick up a copy of The Way We Were. The book combines great writing with fine pictures, and deals with compelling topics. The editor, George Vecsey has done a top job in putting it together in a very enjoyable and readable way. The only bad thing about it is the Curt Gowdy introduction. There should be a law against a guy like Gowdy getting involved in such a fine project. They should leave him doing color on Sunday afternoon football games.

Harold's Trip

Reviewed by Ed Smith

The Story of Harold by Terry Andrews
Holt, Rinehart and Winston
$8.95 388pp.

"Have you been to the wedding of King Valium and Queen Dexadrine?... No?... Oh yes you have! I am it."

So Terry Andrews describes himself halfway through his novel — diary — psychological chronicle of the phantasmagoric mind of New York City.

It is a fantastic journey which Terry Andrews, both the author of the book in fact and "fiction", brings us through. One should be warned though, it is not a pleasant trip by any means. Rather, the author terrifies you, insults you and constantly reprimands the readers for their maudlin sentimentality. If this all sounds crazy, it is. That's what this book inspires.

At the opening of the book which has been suspiciously dubbed a novel, Andrews invents all of us, all the readers of the book. He invites us to share his world for a little while; a world filled with a lot of sex, several cases of scotch and of course, Mr. Andrews himself, a homemade psychotic who bounces between extremes like a tennis ball.

Within the book there is a character equal in importance to Andrews. It is Harold, thus the name of the book. In the novel itself, Mr. Andrews is the author of a best-selling children's book called The Story of Harold. Confusing? You're absolutely right.

Harold & Friend.

Since I included Andrews self-description, it is also necessary to include his description of Harold, one of the bits of humor spotted among the horror.

"Harold is very short; ordinarily twelve or thirteen inches, although when excited he sometimes reaches a foot and a half and naturally, when dejected, sinks down to six or seven —"

Maybe somewhat a fantasy, but still sort of funny.

Other characters in the book include Dr. Whittaker, Andrews' male lover who he is torn to pieces over; Dan Reilly, his male slave who is a fire freak; and Ann Black, his female lover who he seems to think serves as his only touchstone to decency.

But Andrews is basically a very confused man. Throughout the book he assures us that he is already dead inside. The book, he explains, is the chronicle of his path to physical death. His psyche, his conscience, whatever, is made up of two personalities: Harold and Rumpelstilskin. Harold serves as his consul, his urge to go on. Rumpelstilskin intent upon destroying him, pursues him relentlessly along with the Three Legged-Nothing, another one of Andrews' nightmares.

Taking all of these ingredients and mixing them up in what Andrews calls the "magic" of New York City, produces a very strange book. The emotional extremes which Andrews draws from his readers are similar to what Sam Peckinpaugh drew from the viewers of Straw Dogs.

Despite the insane enthusiasm this book has inspired in me, there is a feeling of incompleteness at the end. It's not just that you want to know more, it is more that Andrews does not seem sure how to stop his raging. Everything suddenly goes calm; an embarrassed silence descends on the book. Was it all a sham? Andrews seems to have copped out on his suicide trip. All trust in him slips away. But then it's a strange feeling when you finish a book and feel cheated because the author doesn't commit suicide like he promised.

Suzi's Quatrophobia

— TV Eye

QUATRO

If you don't know who Suzi Quatro is by now, you should. Where have you been? She is everything that she's introduced as in concert: "Five feet, two inches of shitkicking Rock and Roll!" A little background information might help. First of all, she is from Detroit which is the center of the Universe as far as Rock and Roll and Detroit is concerned (with the likes of the Stooges, The MC5, and Mitch Ryder). Unable to make it in this country, (true talent is rarely recognized in the U.S.), she went to England and became an international star, selling millions of singles in Europe.

Most important of all Suzi Quatro is the only woman around who is playing tough, kickass Rock and Roll. She's not singing those 'Love Me Tender — Break My Heart' ballads. She's not singing about the flowers and the blue skies, and she's not one of those female chorus singers who back up what seems to be every group and singer from Linda Ronstadt to Leon Russell, to Dr. John. She is not afraid to step out of the background role women have played in music for eternity and play the music that she loves — Rock and Roll. To see her live show and watch all the male Groupies alternately dancing and drooling in front of the stage is truly a sight to see.

Her first album, Suzi Quatro brought her somewhat of a cult following here in the U.S. but superstardom has eluded her thus far. The arrangements on Quatro, her second album, are more complex than those of the first album. There is also a lot more heavy metal guitar work which is fine, but sometimes the arrangements fail. One of Suzi Quatro's biggest weaknesses is her reliance on the British songwriting team of Chinn and Chapman, who also produce Mud and Sweet. They've provided Suzi with some good material in the past, but their writing ability is uneven at times. It's also reported that they tend to give their best tunes to other groups, leaving poor Suzi with the leftovers. They've got four songs on this album, of varying strengths, "Devil Gate Drive" being the best.

Suzi Quatro's real strength seems to come from redoing Rock and Roll classics and giving them a new vitality that others failed to provide. On Little Richard's "Keep A Knockin'", she gets at the sexuality of Rock and Roll that most groups of the fifties only hinted at. No wonder parents didn't want their kids listening to those records. She does two English classics, "Move It" and "Shot of Rhythm and Blues", and meanwhile, back in the states, she does "Hit the Road, Jack" and the Leiber-Stoller tune "Trouble", which doesn't quite match the success of Elvis' "All Shook Up" on her first album. Suzi also contributes two songs of her own, "Klondyke Kate" and "Cat Size", a ballad about being "one of the crowd." She is really underestimated as a songwriter, as of the best songs on the first album turned out to be her own (with the help of Len Tuckey).

Overall, Quatro is a good complement to the first album. With great rock and roll music and a live show like Suzi Quatro's, it's gotta be uphill all the way.

Beastophilia for you too

In Concert:
Aerosmith & Blue Oyster Cult
Springfield Civic Center
November 3

A high school crowd it was at the Civic Center Sunday night, which was unfortunate in that a lot of junk was flying around. Frisbees, sparklers, and firecrackers were thrown on the stage, making it somewhat hectic for the bands, who, had to dodge all this garbage and still put on a Aerosmith's show. Steve Tyler even had to run over and stomp out a fire on stage caused by a well-aimed sparkler.

Who said that Buck Dharma is one of America's greatest hard rock guitarists? Whoever it was, was right. The Cult were great, but went somewhat unappreciated by the high school audience. However, before the night was over, the Cult made believers of the youngsters with such tunes as, "Cities On Flame with Rock and Roll" and "ME 262"; where their smoke generator went wild, and there were five guitars playing at once. Called back for more, the Cult reached into their bag of tricks, and came out with THE definitive version of "Born to be Wild", complete with crashing guitars, synthesizer, and Buck Dharma's calmly frenzied lead guitar. Blue Oyster Cult for Spring Concert?

Aerosmith was damn good, playing their standard tunes from their first two albums, as well as one from their upcoming new release. This was "Think About It", featuring a strong solo from Joe Perry on lead. As musicians, Aerosmith has improved, notably with Brad Whitford on guitar, who has come a long ways since the first album. A power amp failure during "Train Kept A 'Rollin'" made it difficult for the band to finish the set, but Joey Kramer's solo work on drums gave the roadies plenty of time to by-pass the failure.

The Civic Center is not the best place to see a concert, what with the lousy general admission policy, and a light crew who should stick to doing Halloween parties, but with two hard rock bands, these obstacles are easily overcome.

—Bob MacKenzie

ILLUSION SUITE — STANLEY COWELL TRIO (ECM 1026) Playing Time: 40:05

This is an album full of surprises. When I see an album by a group with a name like the 'Stanley Cowell Trio', and the personnel list says that Stanley plays piano, Jimmy Hopps plays drums, and Stanley Clarke plays bass, I tend to expect the traditional trio of acoustic instruments. And that's what I heard at first, until about twenty or thirty seconds into the first cut, when I noticed that I was enjoying both the exchange between the bass and piano, and the beautiful bowed bass line over in the left channel. Hmm, says I.

Everything proceeds otherwise normally until part-way through the second cut where, without so much as a turn-signal, and practically in the middle of a bar, Cowell switches over to the electric piano, and a little later, to kalimba, the African thump piano. Hmmm, says I. Not to mention such eccentricities as an electric piano with wah-wah overdubbed onto the acoustic piano track in almost note-for-note synchronization on side two.

However, once an instinctive annoyance at not getting what I thought I should expect was overcome, I decided that the use of such gimmickry was not, in this case, an attempt to cover up a lack of musical imagination but rather to allow it room to expand. However, I don't think it expands nearly enough to justify fully all of the electric and eclectic here. Otherwise, 's awright. B.

— Your Sacred Cowboy

THE BACK DOOR WOLF — HOWLIN' WOLF (Chess CH 50045) Time 34:59

Here's Howlin' Wolf's latest with Howlin' and band. It's just 'and band' because the record company failed to give us a single line of credits (I thought Chess had it a little more together). Does Chess assume that unknowns' names won't help the record sell so they leave them off altogether? Or does Chess think they're not good enough to mention? The songwriters on the album are un or little known, yet they turned out some fine new blues tunes (Chess was swell enough to print the writer's names, but, of course, only on the disc itself. Good for a combo of both strained neck and eyes.) And these new songwriters are needed too. After all, Willie Dixon can't last forever; he'll either die or be sucked dry. One of these new names, Eddie Shaw, wrote half of the songs on the LP (there are only two Burnett ones — Wolf's real handle) and all, except maybe one, held together, with the best being "Watergate Blues".

MUDDY UNK IN FUNK WATERS

Howlin's voice is as good as ever (and he hasn't stopped howlin') though he doesn't seem to dominate musically (there's not a lot of his harp). And, unfortunately, what does dominate is, yes folks, a synthesizer. Otis Spann is turning in his grave and my stomach tends to react in that same rotational pattern. I mean, tinkling away on the synthesizer? I don't hate a synthesizer as a bastard musical creation, but the blues and it just don't mix. It does give the album a distinct sound, but it grates on my ears. Therefore, the few songs that actually do have piano on them are a great joy, especially after having experienced an exercise in audio stamina.

So this is not a standout Howlin' album, and the lack of credits is partially to blame. Without them the album is hard to identify with. But, keep an eye out for Eddie Shaw, and buy Wolf's London Sessions and A.K.A. Chester Burnett in the cut-outs for half the price.

—John Wassell

"UNK" IN FUNK-MUDDY WATERS (Chess CH 60031)

Some men are conceited and some men are merely aware and unashamed of there relative greatness. This man was alive and funkin' before Elvis was outa diapers. This is the man that, together with Chuck Berry and Little Richard, introduced real music to the white audience. This man can more than get away with saying that he put the unk in the funk or that women call him electric man, 'cuz that man is all he says he is.

"Rollin' and Tumbling" and "Just To Be With You" start the album off slowly and not very consistent, (the band is fine, Muddy ok, but they're not in the same place) though neither song is disappointing unless you've seen how outstanding he can be live and on the rest of the album. After the first bars of "Electric Man", it is obvious that Muddy is cooking, so is his band and so is everybody passing by the turntable. He knows that hs voice and those blue, blue lyrics are gettin' right down to it, where gut feeling begins. "Trouble No More" continues to build this album's momentum. It's hard to sit still when this song fills the room.

The second side is consistently good and constantly moving. The breaks are great and manage to be unique from song to song in a medium that has become too imitated, diluted, and cliched. The side proves that Muddy will be forever several cuts above simple boogie. Unk in Funk is a perfect example of progress not always being something new, just something better.

"Ummmm."

"Let's see, I got the newest Rare Bird today. Let's hear it."

(A little while later)

"Baby. Hon-ney. Luv-v-ver ... Darling???"

"Zzzzzzz."

("I think I just got a headache")

Born Again is an album which is so lackadaisical and disappointing as far as Rare Bird's ability and talent that I do believe Rare Bird (and especially Steve Gould) should be in Woody Allen's next movie as the ultimate "pill."

SERENADE — NEIL DIAMOND (Columbia PC 32919)

Neil Diamond has been around the music business for a long time (long enough to survive two generations of music.) During this time, Neil has been inconsistent in the art of songwriting to go along with his 'diamond' voice. Many critics have stated that Diamond has been weaker on the songwriting part because he has a tendency to be too repetitious with previous successes. The old "plug in and cash out" formula.

Serenade clearly displays Diamond's dual talent of composing and performing his own music. One of the best things Diamond has done in Serenade is to eliminate most of the excessive martyr music that used to make him a little undigestable.

In Serenade, Neil Diamond has written 'precise' compositions that are to the point, yet have the famous Diamond soothing rhythm which either puts people in a daze or in a sleep. As always, Armin Steiner does a great job of recording Diamond and his gallery musicians with producer Tom Catalano.

Serenade is, however, still like the basic Diamond. Perhaps dressed up a little different — for Christmas.

HATFIELD AND THE NORTH
Playing Time: 46+59

A funny thing I've noticed about records on the Virgin label: All of them, from Tubular Bells and Henry Cow, to the one we're dealing with here, seem to be produced and engineered for headphone listening (as opposed to speakers). The arrangements and instrumentation are always multi-leveled and complexly subtle, but each track, no matter how softly played in the final mix, is recorded with such clarity as to make it distinct from even another track of the same instrument playing the same thing at the same volume. This is very important to music which is often written for several instruments playing entirely different things with none meant to 'lead' or dominate. Way to go, Virgin. You're the Deutche Grammophon of contemporary rock or whatever.

'Contemporary' is actually the more important word of the phrase — I stretched my other musical labels past the snapping point long ago — music is now often totally unique to the person(s) involved in its creation (see above mentioned names and watch for reviews of Magma, Gary Burton-Michael Gibbs, and I wish Atlantic would release the second Henry Cow album, and God only knows who else will surface in the next five minutes; it does my heart good just to think about it).

which brings us to our case in point. Comparisons can be made to Zappa (Hot Rats phase), Cow and early Soft Machine, particularly the latter for the batty (when was the last time you heard that adjective?) humor which pervades (invades?) their work. (In fact, this group was originally brought together to back up ex-Softs drummer Robert Wyatt's solo efforts Maching Mole and Matching Mole's Little Red Record). For example, during the instrumental portion of one song, a telephone rings insistently for about ten seconds; someone picks it up and says 'hello?' and we hear the chorus of the song coming over the receiver. Madness.

However, Hatfield really has no one and nothing (Ma) to live up to, unless it's the titles of their works. Any group which persists in giving its music names like "Shaving Is Boring", "Bossa Nochance", "Gigantic Land-Crabs in Earth Take-Over Bid", or "Going Up to People and Tinkling" (reads a lot like a Monty Python cover, don't it?), is, if nothing else, going to have trouble deciding on a single.

Some of their music is fast, some of it is slow; some of it has vocals, most of it is instrumental, using the standard "rock" instruments and very little else, but none of it is rock 'n' roll with delusions of grandeur (Are you listening, EL&P) and none of it sounds like anything you've heard before. This is an album of humor, creativity and innovation without gimmickiness, and hopefully, this group is one representation of where music in general and "rock" in particular are headed.

A 'This review has a lot of (unnecessary) parentheses in it.' A.

The gentle power & the giant glory

by David Sokol and Andrew MacKenzie

CHATTING WITH THE GIANT

After 4½ years, six albums, and several major tours, Britain's Gentle Giant is only now beginning to receive the accolades and recognition in America which they've been winning throughout Europe over the past couple of years. Makers of a sophisticated, yet fairly accessible music, Gentle Giant creates a sound which hints at the diverse and varying influences of the five individual members. Although their records are occasionally reminiscent of Genesis or even Emerson, Lake and Palmer, there's an aesthetic and esoteric dimension to Gentle Giant's music which isn't found elsewhere. This is achieved in part through their unconventional use of horns, subtle musical structures, and intricately arranged vocal harmonies.

Three-fifths of Gentle Giant (keyboardist and cellist Kerry Minnear, guitarist Gary Green, and drummer John Weathers) visited Amherst and Below The Salt last week, prior to their successful venue at Springfield's Sanderson Theater. During our hour long conversation, they expressed a great deal of optimism over their current tour and at the success of their latest album, The Power and The Glory (106 with a bullet in Billboard). Most significantly though, they came across as musicians, living almost in a vacuum created out of their music, their touring and their basic dedication to Gentle Giant.

We asked about the musical roots, preferences and musical influences of Gentle Giant and Kerry Minnear responded, "I don't think we have any conscious outside influences because there are so many people in the band and we're all totally different. What we listen to and how we each play is completely different. As we construct music, we're busy catering to each others differences and compromising where necessary, so that outside influences are usually left out. As far as listening is concerned, we've all got completely different tastes. John likes soul and rock and roll, Gary likes 'jazz' ("Chick Corea, Larry Coryell, and Herbie Hancock") and I like classical.

When asked whether Power and The Glory (their first record since moving from Columbia to Capitol Records) was attempting, through an increased commercial sound, to reach a wider audience, drummer Weathers attributed the "commerciality" to a whole newly found self confidence which the group had gained. "Everyone in the group was relaxed. Perhaps the commerciality lies in the fact that we found the record easy to make. We had enough time to make it and we all felt that it was our best album to date. To be honest, we were a little disappointed with In A Glass House". (House hasn't been released in the States because of the label change but was successful in England.) The Power and The Glory was recorded last December during the "three day week, power trouble that we had. They were running the studio off generators and all of London was deserted. Black streets. Nothing there, just us."

Though dealing with the themes of power and corruption, neither England's political problems nor Nixon were the specific focus of the album's concept. Said Minnear: "It's not really a political album. It's just about the corruption of any power or individual. We tried to make it a group of separate songs as well as a concept album".

Gentle Giant's stage and concert philosophy is to make their live performances different from their albums, to take the music which best adapted to the concert setting and add to it. "We take the bones, the main parts of a song and work from there. There's a lot of music which we play on stage which isn't on record. Anyone who goes on stage to reproduce the sound of their albums is kidding themselves. We can put more energy into a piece if we design it especially for the stage. The live show must be immediately more accessible that a record".

Up until now, Gentle Giant has toured America as a supporting act to bigger names like Jethro Tull ("We enjoyed playing with them. The audience came with open ears.") Black Sabbath ("the audiences were worse than nine or ten years olds — always shouting 'boogie'") and Black Oak Arkansas ("they're one of the funniest bands we've ever seen..."). Due to their newly found acclaim, the Giant will be top billed on their next tour. Green commented that "we'd prefer to play by ourselves in a smaller theatre and have the people who like us get their money's worth." Their next tour should correspond with a live album, assuming that the enthusiasm continues. No doubt it will, and right now 1975 looks like an important year for Gentle Giant.

IN CONCERT:
What's-their-name
and GENTLE GIANT

The music of Focus filled the Sanderson Theater Halloween night, and all but the numb, dumb, and dedicated were seen leaving to make room for it. Never in my life have I seen a head-line band clear out a house so thoroughly, especially at $6.50 a head; it restored my faith in the musical taste of the masses, somewhat. There are perhaps two explanations for this phenomenon: 1) The obvious — most everyone was seeing Focus for the first time and were, shall we say, deeply moved, or at least quickly, by the droning sameness and overt sloppiness which characterized the band's activities, or 2) The more desired — a great many of the people came, as we did, to see the number two spot on the bill: Gentle Giant.

I don't believe I've ever seen a relatively unheard group take possession of stage and audience as effortlessly as did Giant. Their music has the sort of built-in energy that doesn't require excessive volume, relying as it does on subtle but lively interplay within a framework of rapidly changing texture; they never stay at any one level of 'intensity' for long. Commendably, they have expanded a lot of their recorded works in order to showcase the apparently limitless variety of talents among them; almost everyone can play at least three different kinds of instruments well. It was a joy to watch the entire band, with the exception of the drummer, drop whatever they were doing in the middle of a number to perform as a splendid recorder quartet; it was also interesting to watch three men solo on one drum kit. But the crowning glory of their live performance is the fact that they have amongst them A Real Character by the name of Ray Shulman (bass, violin, vocals and assorted). Add a liberal dose of Charlie Chaplin to the personality and what I will swear is the face of Harpo Marx, and you'll have a fair idea of Ray. The man is a menace; I thought we were all going to have puddles in our shoes.

It is also worth noting that when they left the stage the emcee was nearly lynched when he announced that Giant couldn't do an encore because the show was running late and they had to leave time for Focus — people started leaving right about then. Rumor has it that they (Giant) are coming back to the Sanderson in February as the head-line group, so keep your dial tuned to this paper for further developments.

THE POWER AND THE GLORY
GENTLE GIANT
(Capitol ST-11337)
Playing Time: 36:41

Gentle Giant's approach to music reminds me a lot of their alphabetical next-door neighbor Genesis, to a certain extent Giant's lead vocalist sounds like Genesis' Peter Gabriel, but the more important similarity is their mutual emphasis on ensemble playing, as opposed to the usual alternating of verse and solo. And while Giant doesn't have the aura of mystic power that gives Genesis distinction, they have a wider variety of musical color available, as well as a talent for fairly intricate group interaction. This is their main strength and also the source of their present weakness: They get so caught up in keeping the complexities of their often beautiful arrangements smooth and tight that it becomes rather sterile-sounding and fails to communicate its actual depth. It's mostly excusable here because the theme of the album is a basically intellectual one, but in future works this could become an important flaw. However, that particular quirk aside, this is as good a place as any for the newcomer to acquaint himself with this hopefully up-and-coming group ('up-and-coming'? Tch-tch). An extra large B.

DREAMS & ALL THAT STUFF — LEO KOTTKE (Capitol ST-11335) time 30:03

In which Leo sings not, plays mostly alone and has crafted a recording similar to his Very Influential Leo Kottke album on Takoma Records. Dreams & All That Stuff! features Leo exploring mostly the light-hearted side of this golden good existance of ours, special emphasis placed on subjects like vertical trees, twilight property and taking a sandwich to a feast.

This is not the breakthrough that the Takoma disc was because Leo sufficiently mapped out most of these feelings before. This time he does it better than ever before, but there is still enough prime Kottke missing (30:03 is real short), especially after the multi-musiced Ice Water, to make this offering seem curiously limited. WMUA fans will recognize the riff in "Vertical Trees" he played for the station I.D. when he was here in the summer of '72.

One tune in particular manages to dig beyond the mere lightness of most of the others, and get into some feelings best classified as transcendent. "When Shrimps Learn To Whistle" manages to combine the swirl of feelings ranging from the loveliness of shrimps in the Bosporus Sea, the wonderful absurdity of the thought of their learning to whistle that turns black when Krushchev at the U.N. says Russia will not do this or that 'until shrimps learn to whistle'...warships on the Bosporus, death in the nuclear family...

MARVIN GAYE LIVE — MARVIN GAYE
Total playing time: 43:41

Before Marvin Gaye Live was recorded earlier this year at Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum in Oakland, California, Gaye had been away from the stage and bright lights for five years. The material on Live represents a very selected cross section of Gaye's musical past. Abetted by a wildly enthusiastic audience (which applauds, howls, screams, and generally loves every minute), Marvin goes through a twelve minute "Fossil Medley" (which he jively introduces by singing "I want to sing a medley of my hit songs for you, I want to see if you remember the old songs...") and then time warps into "Let's Get It On" and "What's Going On". Although the ecastitic audience verges on drowning Marvin out on "Let's Get It On" and "Distant Lover", the result is added sound excitement with a shot more substance than on the more produced but consequently more sterile studio versions.

The musical climax during "What's Going On" aptly serves as the concert and album finale. It's here where the crowd just can't control itself any longer and goes into orgasmic shouts which intermingle with their singing along. Redefinitions of audience participation.

Though not consistantly up to the outstanding levels of "Let's Get It On" and "What's Going On", Marvin Gaye and his hard working rhythm and horn sections maintain a consistantly high energy level through, failing only on "Jan", a recent Gaye composition which is too trite and cliched. While not being another anthology, Marvin Gaye Live is a fine concert document which captures Marvin as he looks back and as he sees the present.

Hocus Pocus: A hit song by Focus; also, an ancient axiom, which, upon being chanted, would render forth great feats of magic. And that was just what would have been necessary to transform Focus' performance Thursday night into one for which a few kind words could be said. Playing with all the gusto of a sixpack of Mexican beer, the group instantly sent the audience into a state of frenzied boredom. Even "Hocus Pocus," the song with which the band mercifully ended their set, was all but ruined by a drummer who probably couldn't tell a drumstick from a turkey-leg. Throughout the set, Jan Akkerman, a supposed genius on guitar, seemed to have a case of apathy. Maybe he caught it from the crowd. As for what he contributed on bass, Bert Ruiter's place could've been taken by an under-developed amoeba. Thijs Van Leer, on volcals and keyboards, couldn't do it alone, as he tried to compensate for his mates' ineptness. He was mediocre, but the way the group played as a whole, mediocrity is something he can take pride in. Suffice it to say, Focus was no Dutch treat.

LADIES LOVE OUTLAWS
TOM RUSH
(Columbia KC 33054)

I was very apprehensive about this album at first. I have followed Tom Rush since 1968, in his shifts of style and what not, but I did not see how he could have changed again. This is his first album without Trevor Veitch, his "old fixed address", co-writer and all-round back-up person. I was prepared to thoroughly hate this album. But, we must keep an open mind and realize that this is really a good album. Really.

The style-shift that was so heralded is a slight, almost imperceptable shift to western folk. The songs for the most part have lyrics that insinuate cowboys and Indians. The background has much more than the accoustic guitar of Harvard Square boys; too many electric guitars for my liking, some well done keyboards, and (are you ready for this?), a brass and string section. The orchestra sounds nice, but just a bit elaborate for a guy who can sing well enough to get away with just a simple background.

There is one error on this album: a remake of 'No Regrets." I suppose if this was the first time you heard the song it would be great. Unfortunately, he took away the "Rockport Sunday" part (oh, remember, twisting your ankle on the rocks at Bearskin Neck) and added all sorts of guitars, percussion and Carly Simon. It's not bad, but it's also not necessary. The song does not follow the western mood of the album. It does not have the sad simplicity of the original. It just sounds as if Andy Williams decided to record it.

The rest of the album is a nice mixture of slow and fast, humorous stuff. I particularly like "Maggie", an 'old person looking back' song. It suits Tom Rush's deep, Yankee voice perfectly. Not up there with "Child's Song", but really fine. He gets help on "Jenny Lynn" from James Taylor, and the song strikes me more as a Taylor vehicle.

Over all, if you like Tom Rush, you'll really love this album. If you don't, give the album a chance anyway. It can be really good to hear a pleasant voice again.

Near as I can tell, these three had never laid eyes on each other before the night this was recorded and didn't have a word of mutual language (other than the obvious, but let's not get poetic) between them. Yet, that communication was clearly and firmly established is beyond doubt — I don't claim to completely understand the concept of 'free jazz', but it doesn't take a music critic to be moved by the give and take of energies here, anymore than it takes an art critic to enjoy the subjectivities of an abstract painting: If it reaches you, it reaches you. 'Nuff said.

film . . . Harry and Tonto

reviewed by Stuart Sojcher

Harry and Tonto-starring Art Carney, Chief Dan George and a cat named Tonto directed by Paul Mazursky

Films today are pretty much dominated by the subjects of either sex or violence. Consequently, a film which lacks these elements is considered an oddity by most standards. One has to wonder whether a film like Harry and Tonto which deals with real issues, old age, and is devoid of any spectacular killings or rape scenes will attract enough people to make it a commercial success despite its excellent reviews. Paul Mazursky, who directed the film, remarked in an interview that "Perhaps I should have had a violent ending with Harry's bullet-ridden body falling to the ground in slow-motion. That would have attracted the crowds." Mazursky is rightly concerned, but his film doesn't need that ending nor such redundant subject matter. Harry and Tonto is a well directed film composed of many warm and funny moments especially characterized by some fine acting by Art Carney and a strong supporting cast.

The film opens with a nice montage of elderly people in different situations: taking a late afternoon snooze, couples strolling hand in hand and small groups of people sitting around the park.

Harry, played by Art Carney of "Ed Norton" and The Honeymooners fame, is also a member of this elderly congregation. Though widowed and retired from teaching, Harry is still sharp and active at seventy-two. Whether reminiscening about first encounters of love with his good friend Rivetowski who blames all problems on "the capitalist pigs," discussing 'who dun it' on Ironside with various neighbors or doing imitations of old songs for his cat Tonto-his best friend and constant companion — Harry is relatively happy. Progress, however, in the form of the ball and chain forces Harry to leave his apartment in Manhattan but not before being carried out in his favorite chair by two policeman.

Reluctantly, Harry must take up residence with his son Burt and his family in the suburbs. Sububria as depicted by Mazursky is not terribly relaxed, as on his first night staying with the family Harry decides to go to the bathroom and Burt rushes from his bedroom with a gun, explaining later that many robberies had recently taken place in the neighborhood. One evening the family has one of Harry's friends, Leroy over for dinner. Burt's wife Elaine tries to show her liberalism by telling Leroy, who is black, how much she enjoyed 'soul food' at a restaurant run by an Afro-American woman. Leroy quietly replies, "I didn't know they served soul food in Africa."

Harry decides to look for an apartment in the city. In a funny yet sad scene, Harry and the landlady of an apartment building discuss their age and loneliness while looking over a room, but upon hearing that Harry has a cat, she coldly informs him that pets are not allowed.

After deciding to go to Chicago to visit his daughter, Harry must first identify the dead body of Rivetowski in the morgue. Trying hard not to break down, he comments to a sympathetic city employee about their last conversation concerning Rivetowski's first affair. The tragedy of the scene is further accentuated by the haunting spectre of death emenating from the morgue's atmosphere and cold, dark walls.

It is here that the film becomes a series of Harry's meeting and becoming involved with a number of different people. Character development is sacrificed to either play a scene for laughs or illicit an emotional response from the audience. Unfortunately, a character like Harry's daughter (Ellen Burstyn), who has been married four times and seems very interesting, is forsaken in order to continue the story. Mazursky sets up a scene, runs through it and then quickly cuts to another.

Harry eventually ends up driving across the country to California, his license having expired ten years ago nonwithstanding. In his travels he visits his first love, Jessie (Geraldine Fitzgerald), a dancer with the Isadora Duncan troupe-a liberated woman far before it had become in vogue. In one of the most moving and beautiful scenes that I have ever seen on film, Harry greets Jessie, who still retains her past beauty, in an old age home. He gives her a bouquet of roses, but being senile, she mistakes him for an old Parisian lover. Though he is clearly disappointed, he does not reveal it and politely listens to her idle chatter. She speaks about her dancing career, how much she wants to go to the shore and then asks Harry to dance with her. The camera carefully watches them from afar, capturing the grace and sensitivity of two people reliving past memories. It's very difficult to restrain one's tears.

In Arizona, Harry meets up with an old cowboy who sells vitamins and likes cats. "Cats are smarter than we are," he says. "Simple diet, no clothes, lots of exercise and they can clean themselves."

Outside Las Vegas, Harry is picked up by a high priced hooker and she seduces him while the background music is a rendition of "Love Is A Many Splendored Thing."

While in Las Vegas, Harry drinks a bit too much and is arrested for relieving himself in public. In jail he meets an old Indian, Chief Two Feathers (Chief Dan George), in the most humorous scene in the movie. Two Feathers is in jail for practicing medicine without a license. He put a spell on someone who died soon after. "Sorry," Harry says. Two Feathers answers, "He was supposed to die. That's why I put the spell on him."

Though Harry is supposed to look seventy-two, his make-up makes him appear about ten years younger, enhancing viewer identification. This identification will be even more evident to younger people as Harry's qualities make him quite appealing. He is open minded, intelligent, self-aware and above all human. He wants to make the most out of life and his trip across country is a good example as Harry explains earlier in the fim how much he always wanted to travel when he was younger, but marriage and responsibilities prevented him from doing so. His children still look up to him for advice and approval; he is certainly a much stronger character though he shouldn't be, according to society's standards because of his age.

Mazursky wanted to portray the elderly in an admirable manner and in Harry and Tonto he succeeded. It is a very warm and moving picture which some may claim to be too maudlin but the subject itself is a sentimental one, and is welcome after the senseless killings that never seem to end on the screen.

Perhaps most importantly, Harry and Tonto says something about the human spirit bridges the age gap — the refusal to lay down and die. Harry wants to live life to its fullest and he does that. When his other son in California asks Harry to live with him, Harry explains that he wants to live his own life and that his son should do the same but on his own. At seventy-two Harry is still making discoveries about life and enjoying every minute of it.

Harry and Tonto is at the W. Springfield Showcase Cinemas.

"Perhaps I should have had a violent ending with Harry's bullet-ridden body falling to the ground in slow motion . . ."

Why trade in your old mattress for another "old" mattress?

If your old mattress is in bad shape — sure, go ahead and junk it. It's probably obsolete anyway. But don't just replace it with another obsolete mattress. Examine, test and compare Neptune Waterbed. It's a decision you'll have to sleep with.

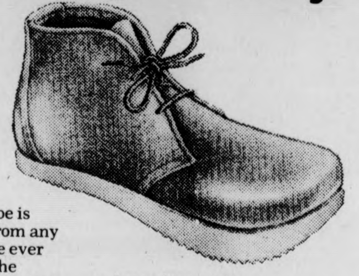
The shoe that works with your body.



This shoe is different from any shoe you've ever worn. It's the EARTH* negative heel shoe. The shoe designed to work in harmony with your entire body.

The heel of the Earth® shoe is actually lower than the toe. This allows you to walk naturally. Like when you walk barefoot in sand or soft earth and your heel sinks down lower than your toes.

The entire sole of the Earth shoe is molded in a very special way. This allows you to walk in a gentle rolling motion. And to walk easily and comfortably on the hard jarring cement of our cities.

But remember, just because a shoe looks like ours doesn't mean it works like ours. So to be sure you're getting the Earth brand shoe, look on the sole for our Earth trademark and U.S. Patent #3305947.

Your body will thank you.

Shoes, sandals, sabots and boots for men and women. From $23.50 to $42.50.

ROCK AND ROLL MUSIC
By David Miller and the UMass Computer System
Directed by David Miller
Theatre Barn
31 October, 1 and 2 Nobember 1974

It's very difficult for me to get my head together to write about this play for two reasons: a) it is very difficult to write about something that you really liked without getting soppy; and b) this play is inherently difficult to write about (thanks, David). The reactions from the audience ran the whole gamut from bringing me out of a depression to sending someone into one. It is just that kind of play, the reaction came more within the individual than from the material presented. This was carefully planned, the material was presented as randomly as possible (ie. following the plan made by a computer). Each performance was unique as to the actual things said and reactions between the audience and players. I found a flow to the play and, if I may be so presumptious, I would like to present my flow theory.

In the beginning the audience is faced with three separate action groups, having nothing to do with one another. An offer was made to polish anyone's shoes. Many of the audience members shrank back into the anonimity that audiences give you. As the play progressed, actors came out into the audience area offering fruit salad (which was, by the by, quite good if you didn't eat the jello), a non-threatening act. The audience is drawn a little closer. A bit later the actors hand a few audience members playing cards with instructions to jump up and read them off. A few audience members are drawn further into the action. The last bit of business is a group sing of Christmas carols through which everyone gets into the act.

There is much more to it than that. At every turn one is faced with a new, sometimes absurd action set. It was a lot of fun, with not knowing what to expect certainly part of it.

Thank you, David. Thank you, cast. And thank you, UMASS computer System wherever you are.

Discourse on the Method of Rightly Conducting the Customer to His Seat and Seeking Truth in the Field of Old Farmer Brown While Avoiding Meadow Muffins

Of God: That He Exists But Votes Republican

Once upon a time when I just finished underlining the funny parts of Descartes's Meditations, a friend suddenly burst into my room. Seeing that he was quite excited, I asked him what he wanted.

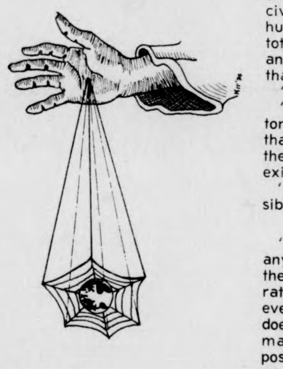
"Nothing really, it's just that I've discovered something so fantastic and significant that I have to talk to somebody. After reading what I've just read, my whole life is changed."

"For instance?"

"Well, there was this one book that basically said that the stuff about logic and order in the universe along with the idea of man's rational make-up is just so much sheep dip. The author just wiped-out the whole idea of God or of any intelligence behind the universe. And he said that even if there was a God why should He care what happens to us.

"There was this other book of essays that took apart the idea that this is the real world. It's just a lie. All the crap about progress, equality, democracy are just lies. This is not the real world, or our real selves, because the lies stop us by making us believe them.

"But what really wiped me out was the book I had to read for Wyknott's class. Right there in the poetry the same things were being said. The poets are telling us that this world is one big rip-off. No logic, no order, no God; the self has been destroyed and the poets are trying to rebuild the self, and the lies, and find the real world. It's just so fantastic, everything is changed now; my whole life will be different from now on."



"That it, cobber?"

"No, I mean yes. Well, you know. I just wanted to tell you that and ask what you think about it. Kinda rap on it."

"About what you just said?"

"Yeah. What do you think about it?"

"Not much at all."

"I must admit that I've always suspected that such was true. And after listening to you I'm positive."

"How can you be so unserious, so unmoved when the possibility exists that the foundation of world civilization is based upon the lie of human rationality! The world is totally illogical; we are living a lie and you don't even want to change that?"

"Who, me?"

"OK then, what about this: tomorrow it is proven conclusively that the universe is unordered, there is no logic, and God does NOT exist! What about that!"

"Hey, it's not my responsibility."

"You mean it doesn't do anything to you? The fact, or even the possibility, that there is no rational order to the universe, that everything is just an accident doesn't bother you? It doesn't make you think about the possibilities that stem from such an assumption? Do you agree that man is basically irrational?"

With that he left, and I was able to continue my studies. That afternoon I had three old Spider-Man comic books, and I was determined to finish them.

WEEKENDS IN FILM

Compiled by Paul Kontrimas

AIRPORT '75. No better, no worse than Airport '72. Starts this weekend at the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. ++

BLUME IN LOVE. Poor George Segal is still in love with his estranged wife. After a legal separation, hopelessly in love, George chases a wife that wants her independence from the stereotyped existence as a professional man's wife. A comedy with tragedy burning up the edges. At the SUB tonight. 7 and 9:00. +++

CALIF. SPLIT. Elliot Gould and George Segal in a romp through some of Nevadas flashiest gambling casinos. In this, Robert Altman's first comedy since M-A-S-H, two characters get nowhere in the plastic entertainment capitol, and in view of all the finer efforts these two have produced, let's hope this one was just a small mistake. At the Calvin Cinema. +

CITIZEN KANE. Rosebud. SUB, Nov. 10. (7 and 10:45). ++++

COOL HAND LUKE. Incomplete, but committed view of Southern life. Happy-go-lucky Paul Newman drinks too much, commits a felony and is incarcerated. One of his fellow workers on the chain gang is George Kennedy, noted for his line in the movie; "What We have here is a failure to communicate." At the CCA, Sunday, at 7 and 9. ++

COMPULSION. SUB., Nov. 10 (9 p.m.) ++

EASY RIDER. No matter how hard Peter Fonda tries to direct his worthless, sketchy films, they still smell in a stiff wind. The great majority of his films have been poorly received, and justifiable condemned by film people and audiences. However, this film was an exception, only because of the timeliness of his ego-nooglings: with Easy Rider Fonda hit upon the incipient psychedelic pop culture before other film-makers had even discovered all the special effects they could use in the acid trip scenes. A good slice of the life from Henry Fonda's son. At the Amherst Cinema. +

EVERYTHING YOU WANTED TO KNOW ABOUT SEX BUT WERE AFRAID TO ASK. Double feature with Sleeper at MF 4. An uproarious, hilarious spoof on the book which was the educational alternative to the bathroom wall. Consists of seven skits — four of which are riotous and three of which are downright sickening. Woody plays the role of a court jester attempting to penetrate a royal chastity belt with a male sperm, and various other perverts. At the Mt. Farms +++

GROOVE TUBE. This video-vision is relatively unchanged from its origin as a video tape excursion done by a couple of people from the Mass. Communication Department at Boston University. When it was deemed to have commercial potential by Hollywood film companies, and only after it received an underground popularity by playing at such small houses as the Video Theatre in Cambridge, it was slightly altered and lengthened for release as a full-length film. Reports are that it's still worth a look! And that the short vignettes that compose the bulk of this film are still quite humorous. At the Mt. Farms +++

HARRY AND TONTO. Art Carney masterfully portrays the old man looking for that American Paul Simon and Art Garfunkel were looking for. For a more in-depth review, see page 9. At the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. ++++

THE LONGEST YARD. A fleeting macho action flick where Burt Reynolds shows his cell block how much fun it is to be in prison. Eddie Albert acts as a warden, for all you Eddie Albert fans. Robert Aldrich directed. At The Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. ++

THE MAD ADVENTURES OF "RABBI" JACOBS. The comedy in this film is as rapid as machine gun fire. Pointed at its own head, it could blow its own brains out and still the audience would laugh. See, at the Showcase Cinemas in W. Springfield. ++++

ODESSA FILE. John Voight leads in this video adaptation of Frederick Forsyth's spy novel. The director of this and of The Poseidon Adventure is one and the same — Ronald Neame. Chilling and mysterious, at the Showcase. +++

SLEEPER. Now playing at MF 4. Woody Allen wakes up from a long sleep in a suspended animation capsule and finds himself in a futuristic world dominated by the stainless steel and formica. Woody has difficulty fitting into this sterile society and infects it with disrespectful antics, knee slapping, chase scenes and characteristic Woody Allen disorder. (At the Mt. Farms). +++

THAT'S ENTERTAINMENT. A collection of musical moments from nearly 100 great MGM films produced between 1928-1959. The singing of Liza Minelli, Frank Sinatra, Judy Garland and "more stars than there are in heaven". Also the offstate music of Cole Porter, the Gershwins, etc. as Frank Sinatra says, "You can wait around and hope...but you won't see the likes of this again." Playing at the Mountain Farms 4. ++++

COMEDY SPECIAL. Chaplain, W. C. Fields and Pink Panther. Chaplin in The Tramp and Gold Rush. W. C. Fields in The Barber Shop and The Pink Panther in Kitten On the Keys. Sat. Night At the SUB, at 7, 8:30, 10 and 11:30.

Lovejoy buys land near proposed NUKE site

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

Samuel Lovejoy, the acquitted saboteur of Northeast Utilities (NU) 500-foot tower last February, has recently bought land on the same hill where NU proposes to build a twin nuclear power station.

Lovejoy has obtained 1-13th piece of an acre in Montague and an informed source told the Springfield Union the price included $1 for purchase and $19 for processing.

A referendum was defeated that would have seriously affected the $1.52 billion nuclear power plant to be built in 1976

The partial share of land was transferred from Carol Thompson of Petersham, administrator of the estate of Sanford H. Sawyer of Hampden County.

Lovejoy's trial lasted eight days and he was acquitted on a directed verdict because, the Judge Kent Smith, the prosecution had not proven its case.

According to figures released this week the trial cost county taxpayers $3100.

The cost covers the court sessions, salaries of two assistant district attorneys who tried the case, investigating police officers and a bus for viewing the site where the alleged crime took place. In addition, the cost covers jurors fees, witness fees, transcripts and photographs.

Yet to be authorized is a $750 bill presented to the county commissioners to attorneys for representing "indigent" persons.

Comissioners have declined payment on the bill taking the position that at no time was Lovejoy declared indigent.

Labor costs exceed budget

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

At a meeting held Wednesday night for all fast foods student employees in the Campus Center (those working in the Coffee Shop, Blue Wall, and Hatch Cafeteria), students were told that Campus Center labor costs this year far exceed what they were budgeted last fall.

The employees were told the administrators will look at all the alternatives to solve the problem and do everything they can to avoid lay-offs of workers.

F. Craig Stuart, Campus Center Business Manager, told the Collegian yesterday a meeting will be held Monday afternoon to discuss the problem, and the alternatives, with no decision being reached then.

Stuart said he, John Corker, Director of the Campus Center, Phil Amico, Campus Center Director of Food Services, Mike Curran, President, Campus Center Board of Governors, and Milton Kerstein, employee in the Coffee Shop and member Student Employee Committee will attend this meeting.

Stuart said most of the other areas except labor costs are in line with last Spring's budget at this point. He said the biggest concentration of labor in the building is in Food Services, about 30-35 per cent of the total.

Stuart said the first quarter of the Campus Center fiscal year comprises July and August, two slow months in terms of business. He said with soles down, labor costs rise.

Stuart also attributed the budgetary deficit to renovations in the Hatch this past summer and the fact the administrators brought some people back to campus early this fall to clean.

"I don't think any drastic things will happen at this point in time. We'll do everything in our power to prevent lay-offs," Stuart said. "Lay-offs are just one alternative of many."

Yesterday several Student Food Service workers set up a table on the Campus Center concourse for students to sign petitions objecting to any hourly cut-backs or lay-offs of the student work force in the Campus Center.

Kerstein told the Collegian, "Management has projected lay-offs and cut-backs in hours as a solution to the budgetary deficit. We feel we want to make up that money too, but that that is not a valid solution."

"We feel there are much more creative solutions and are trying to get support from students to get the management to implement more creative solutions," Kerstein said.

A meeting will be held Monday

to discuss

and its alternatives.

He emphasized, "Lay-offs have not been implemented and we are not saying they have been. We just want to make sure there aren't any."

The petitions being signed yesterday read, "As students we are not eligible for unemployment insurance and-or welfare; and as other job opportunities in the university community and Amherst area are virtually non-existent for the remainder of the semester, we the undersigned object to any hourly cut-backs or lay-offs of the student work force in the Campus Center."

Also at the petition table was a sheet listing five alternatives that the student employees are suggesting to the idea of lay-offs.

1. "There is evidence of mismanagement, waste, and inefficiency. Clean up the policy end of the operation and you will save money. Use that money to counterbalance the payroll deficit."

2. "Cut back on your labor force through attrition; that being do not replace those student workers who give up their hours unless it is absolutely necessary."

3. "When a student calls in sick, have other students who are already working cover him or her area in lieu of replacing him."

4. "Raise the quality of food and entertaanment thereby attracting more business and a greater profit. Then use that profit to counterbalance the payroll deficit."

5. "Use the facilities of the building in a creative way as a solution to the problem. ie. A beneift dance with a band which donates its services, staffed by student employee volunteers, in an area of the building which has been donated. Use the profit from this to counterbalance the payroll deficit.

UMass budget hearing open to public today

Joseph Cronin, State Secretary of Educational Affairs will hold an open hearing on the UMass budget this afternoon at 2 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The purpose of the hearing is to find out what public opinion is of the budget, which was passed last month by the UMass Board of Trustees and is scheduled to go before the legislature in the near future.

The budget, primarily a maintenance one, currently stands at $118 million. The money, comprised entirely of state funds, is used in the maintenance of University services.

The maintenance budget is not the same as the operating budget, which is twice as big and is supplemented by student fees, as well as grants.

The hearing is open to all members of the University community.

LSO power uncertain

By HUGH OWEN
Staff Reporter

The Legal Services Office (LSO) is currently in a political limbo over what its powers are as a legal service.

Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage said the LSO may advise students and accompany them to court on civil matters, but may under no circumstances pursue any criminal cases in court or litigate against the University.

The LSO, however, says if a case comes up involving either criminal action in court or litigation against the University, they should have the power to pursue these cases as legal counsel to the students.

Martha Creegan, chairperson of the Legal Services Board, said the board is researching whether or not it can litigate against UMass. Creegan said there are no cases of this type against UMass as yet, but that at the time such a case does arise the board will decide what to do.

"UMass claims the SGA cannot use the University funds to litigate against UMass. The LSO will not do anything illegal, but right now we don't know what is illegal or legal," Dorsch said on the position of the LSO in handling litigation against the University.

The crux of this question rests upon the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF) which the Student Government distributes to the various campus organizations with the Trustees approval.

This is student money, but since the trustees collect it, they also have the power to distribute it as they wish, Gage maintains.

Rick Savini, Student Government Association (SGA) president, claims student money should be allocated only by students. He added if students were to have any say over how the monies are allocated, the Trustees would probably stop collecting the SATF and leave the collection process to the students. This action by the Trustees could result in a halt in the operations of the bus system, the student senate, and the Collegian, he said.

Dorm residence legalities questioned

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

Members of the Student Organizing Project (SOP) met with administrators Wednesday night in the Hampden Student Center in Southwest to discuss the Legality of Mandatory Dorm Residence. This was the third in a five-day series of hearings sponsored by the SOP.

Speaking for the administration were Peter D'Erricco of the Legal Studies Department, and Mike West, Assistant Dean of Students. Sid Meyers, the University Lawyer was scheduled to speak also but cancelled out at the last minute.

Representing the SOP were Doug Phelps, John Pepi, and Bill Dorsch, Director of Student Legal Services.

The main point of discussion was the question of what the Administration's plans are for deciding the issue of student housing for the upcoming semesters. The Administration is in violation of the student's rights according to the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, Phelps said.

D'Erricco began by citing previous cases relevant to the topic of discussion, such as the Tinker Case in Iowa (Decision '68), which has brought the issue to light making the students aware that their rights are being violated by requiring them to live on-campus in dorms. D'Erricco said he was personally in favor of allowing students to choose their own housing.

West also cited cases on the issue and went on to say "the law is changing in time and place and the Courts are becoming more and more involved in student's rights."

West added that as far as financial concerns were involved, the University is facing some very difficult problems. "Revenue is necessary to keep the residence halls going, and the costs should be borne equally by all students," he said.

When asked if he felt that the Administration would have some plan or have the problem resolved soon, West said the earliest a decision might be forthcoming would be the Fall semester, 1975.

The only way that the dorms on campus could compete with off-campus housing to a substantial degree would be for the rents off-campus to be raised significantly, thus making dorm living cheaper.

Another way might be to try and make improvements in dorms with materials already available to the Physical Plant which would not cost the University more money and might be incentive for students to remain on campus, according to West.

Socialist future for Irish Republic was theme of IRA leader's presentation

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Reporter

Tony Hefferan, Joint General Secretary of Sinn Fein, the official Irish Republican Army (IRA) said that hopes for a better Irish future lie in the organization of Catholic and Protestant working class into a socialistic republic.

Speaking before a medium-sized audience in Thompson Hall last night, brought to UMass by the Irish Cultural Committee, he said one of his prime intentions was to reveal the truth which he claims has been clouded by media distortions.

"My principle goal is to counteract false and misleading data, Hefferan said. The Northern Ireland situation has been misconstrued by the media to be conflict that is based entirely on religious differences, when really it is a rebellion against British imperialism, he claimed.

He emphasized that the Sinn Fein is not responsible for the bombing campaign that has been waged in Northern Ireland. The bombing was attributed to the Provisional IRA, a group which is declining, due to fading public support.

Speaking on the history of the Irish idependance movement, he said there have been nationalistic and military organizations since the 18th century, but it wasn't until the early sixties that any sort of political and economic goals were formulated.

The Provisional IRA did not accept the changes however, and split away and continued specializing in violence.

The Civil Rights Movement in the United States was mentioned as a source of inspiration for the young Sinn Fein. Commenting on Northern Ireland and the troubles in South Boston, Hefferan said the lines separating working class people in Northern Ireland are religious while in Boston they are racial.

Condemning South Boston racism, he said, it's hypocritical for Irish people to decry British repression who are guilty of repression themselves.

From his Socialistic point of view, The Irish Republic is not free of problems either.

He said The Irish Republic is controlled by the bourgeois Catholic Church which is sympathetic to British Imperialism. He accused the church of meddling in secular affairs. While not being anti-religious, he says he believes in the separation of church and state.

Janitor makes charge: Students are problem

By PAUL LOGUE JR
Staff Reporter

A janitor in Webster House says students are the real problem in upkeeping that dormitory, not the janitors.

Saying janitors have been playing mother to the students there, Randy Boivin said the students have to start learning to take care of themselves.

"We come in here on Monday morning and find the place in shambles," he complained.

Boivin said janitors are getting in trouble with their bosses through students who willfully wreck the place.

He said students don't seem to have enough pride to try and keep the dormitory clean themselves.

Boivin said it takes longer to clean Webster House than some other dormitories because "there is so much crap left behind."

The janitor also says students might be expecting too much from the custodians.

"One kid came up to me the other day and asked why he didn't get his paper yesterday. Now I'm a paperboy too. Others don't know where the barrel is. I find things all over the place."

Hearing is scheduled on housing problems

The last of the Student Organizing Project's open hearings on Housing and Food Services will deal with Off-Campus Housing Problems. It will be held this afternoon from 4:00 to 6:00 in the Commuter Lounge, which is located in the basement of the Student Union Building.

Among those who will testify are: Helen Hills, Director, Office of Commuter Affairs; Randy Dahl, Staff Assistant for Commuter Affairs; Don Pelke, Director of Married Student Housing; John O'Keefe, Tenant's Association; Rosemarie Whittaker, University Apartments; Ralph Lopez, University Apartments; Karen Mangen, North Village; Nina Reich, Brittany Manor; and a representative from the Springfield Legal Service Office.

News writing seminar set

Collegian news adviser Chris Kertesz will hold another in a series of seminars on news writing Monday at 7 p.m. at the collegian offices in the Student Union.

Topic will vary according to the needs of those who attend. Collegian staffers with writing in progress or story ideas -- news or feature -- are urged to attend.

Correction

The meaning of one section of a story on the front page of Thursday's Collegian was inadvertently altered due to a typographical error.

The eleventh paragraph of a story about the Trustees meeting should have read:

"Chancellor Bromery assured Savini and the board that the motion meant only that he could negotiate for bids with prospective banks. No final action will be taken without student input", he said.

Areas asked to rate dorm occupancies

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
Staff Reporter

The office of Residential Life has asked the five residential areas to recommend to them rated occupancies for each of their dorms.

These figures and requests for structural changes will be considered by Ken Dean, Director of Residential Life, and a committee of Office staff, who will reach a final decision based on the total funds available and the resulting benefits to the dorm residents.

"We need some sort of 'closure'," Roger Cruff, Assistant Director of Administrative Services said, "If there was only one list of occupancies, we could eliminate the discrepancies and overcrowding that accompanied the opening of the dorms this semester," he said.

According to Cruff, there have been three separate occupancy lists: an official rated occupancy list based on a survey conducted two years ago by the University; an occupancy list which the dorm had compiled designating rooms as singles, sewing, study rooms, etc. and an occupancy list on which the Trustees forecasted the amount of rent money that the University would receive, so they could pay off the bonds.

Cruff said he had no idea of the magnitude of the discrepancies between the lists until July 1, when the reorganization took effect.

According to Dean, this semester was the first time since 1970 that so many students have requested to live on campus. A lack of beds, combined with special requests for dorms, created the overcrowding situation in the dorms.

"Students opted to live in the crowded conditions," Dean said, "rather than out of their suitcases in the Campus Center."

Presently the occupancy rate is 97 per cent according to Dean. The open spacec are in Southwest.

Area committees, made up of students, area staffs and Environmental Standards committees are in the process of compiling recommendations that will be submitted to Residential Life.

Requests are being made for reduction of revenue-producing space in order to accommodate more singles, study rooms, to enlarge Head of Residence apartments, etc.

Residents of Johnson House, a co-ed dorm in Northeast have been asking that their 14 triples be eliminated for the past three years. A committee of interested students in the dorm have done research in educational journals to gather evidence to support their request.

Among other articles, they came across a 1960 report to Presidents and Chancellors of the then four colleges "implying" that triples should never again be built in any area, according to Paul Goslin, a member of the committee.

There are also 16 triples in SW.

Bill Taylor, an Environmental Specialist with Residential Life, supports the residents of Johnson, saying "triples represent living circumstances that are extremely difficult to deal with, even for mature students with experience of group living situations."

"These rooms weren't designed to allow a person to define public and private space," Taylor said.

Gerry Hallaren, a student on the committee, who lives in one of the triples, finds trouble dealing with the acoustic problem.

"If I want to study, and my two roommates are in the room having a conversation, they will talk to me because they don't want me to feel left out."

In the Past, the residents' requests have not been followed through, according to Cruff and Steve Dimock, NE Area Director.

"It was not possible to solve all of the problems presented to the Office when it had to deal with Food Services and Resiiential Areas," Cruff said. "Now, after the reorganization, our office can reach a decision on what to do with the triples."

A meeting between the committee and Dean, Taylor and Cruff produced several alternatives that will be decided on at another meeting later this month. Some or all of the rooms in question can either be classified as official doubles, be filled with people who want to live in a triple, or the Physical Plant can knock down the walls and repartition the rooms as doubles.

According to Dean, decisions on matters such as these will be made based on time, money involved and effects on the students.

"We must set priorities as to how to spend the money, whether or not it's worth it to make long-range expenditures of substantial amounts of money when faced with the possibility of voluntary dorm residency in the near future," Dean said.

According to Dean, the University must also meet a 95 per cent occupancy requirement set by the Trustees to meet the official budget.

Former mental patient serves on commission

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
Staff Reporter

For 20 years Richard Hanlon of Northampton lived as an in-patient of Belchertown state school for the Mentally retarded. Seven years and two months later Governor Sargent officially swore him in as a member of the Governor's commission on Legal and Civil Rights of the Disabled.

"They look to me for ideas, for my experience of the past. For more than 20 years the conditions were really bad. All institutions are alike with overcrowding and poor training. And don't let them give you a story."

Hanlon works as a janitor for Hamdon Warehouse but he hasn't worked in eleven weeks since he hurt his back on the job.

You can hear him shuffling cards and the television dialogue in the background. "It's been hell here living alone without anyone to talk to — living alone, you know."

When Hanlon was transferred to Northampton State school from Belchertown he said, "I wasn't like there. I knew too much. The state was supposed to get me a job. But if I'd waited for the state I would have rotted there. In those days you had to get a pass to do downtown. You had to get a pass just to go outside to the grounds. Of course, it's all different now."

Until the Federal Government put pressure on the state schools in 1963 Hanlon says changes were non-existent.

"The federal rehabilitation program was four years in the making and then it was turned over to the states."

He credits Dr. Ben Ricci and the Friends of Belchertown for the court-ordered changes there. But says Hanlon, "There is still room for change down around Boston in Wrentham and Waverly."

Student found not guilty

By BILL GONET
Staff Report

David Tally, a 24 year old Roxbury student at UMass-Boston, who was charged earlier this year with the armed robbery of 1½ pounds of marijuana and assault and battery of four UMass-Amherst students, was acquitted on both counts in Hampshire County Superior Court in Northampton.

The jury returned its verdict following two hours of deliberation.

"It was just a case of mistaken identity," said Tally afterwards.

Between 2:30 and 3:00 on the afternoon of October 1, 1973. Three black men entered the dormitory room of James Mayher and James Passburg in James House, pointed a gun at them and told them to lie on the floor. Surprised by the arrival of Michael Moran and Allan Steinman, both UMass students, the three robbers fled, punching Moran in the face and knocking Steinman to the floor.

The crux of the prosecution's case against Tally was the discovery of his UMass I.D. in the victim's room after the robbery, and the identification of Tally as one of the robbers by Mayher and Moran.

Tally's lawyer, Salim Shakur of Boston, brought forth Tally's drama teacher at UMass-Boston, who testified that Tally had been with him in Boston from 11:30 to 12:30 and had attended his class at 3:30 on the afternoon of the robbery.

Moreover, Shakur established that Moran had only one second to observe the robber.

"Do you know how long a second is?" Shakur asked the jury. Clapping his hands, he said, "That's how long one second is."

Shakur pointed out that when Moran and Mayher identified Tally as one of the robbers there were only two black men present in the court room, "the defendant and his attorney."

The complainants during the preliminary investigation did not identify Tally from a lineup but from photographs.

Hampshire County District Attorney, Ed Ryan, concentrated on discrediting Tally's story that he had lost his I.D. before the robbery.

Tally was arrested in January and bound over for trial to Superior Court after a probable cause hearing in Hampshire County District Court.

Tally, a junior majoring in political science, is married and has two children.

Sorority celebrates anniversary tomorrow

By TONY BATTISTA
Staff Reporter

Sigma Kappa Sorority will celebrate here tomorrow the 100th anniversary of its founding at Colby College in Waterville, Maine.

Sigma Kappa was the first sorority in New England and is one of the largest sororities nationwide.

What began as a dream of the first five sorority women at Colby College, now includes over 130 alumnae chapters and 100 college chapters representing over 50,000 women coast to coast.

Service to others is the main theme of the centennial celebration. So far this year, members of the sorority have given over 20,000 hours of service to others. Since 1972, the collegiate chapters have set aside a week in November as a week of giving. They have been especially active in working with the elderly.

The sorority has given $1,000 grants to five universities to be used in projects dealing with the elderly. On November 9th, each college and alumnae chapter will deliver a violet plant to a nursing home or an elderly individual as a symbol of Sigma Kappa's dedication in that field.

In conjunction with all the chapters of Sigma Kappa throughout the nation, the Beta Eta chapter at UMass will observe this centennial celebration. Some of their activities include making a donation to Muscular Dystrophy, giving violets to a nursing home for an elderly person in the area, and helping to sponsor a Halloween party for neighborhood children.

Other events that will take place nationally during November are gravesite memorials for each of the five founders; memorials for the founders given by each chapter; and scholarships to colleges where Sigma Kappa has recently established new chapters.

During its second century, Sigma Kappa hopes to continue its emphasis on scholorship, service, cultural development and fine spiritual standards.

Bill Dorsch, one of two attorneys for the LSO, said the LSO is operating under a Mass. statute which says legal services can be funded for students.

"This statute allows Trustees to use student funds to fund student services. There are no stipulations in this statute," he said.

Gage said, "You wouldn't expect the LSO to represent you in a case against another student, so why should you expect an organization to be able to take legal action against the school which is funding them? It's a professional ethical problem."

The contract the LSO will operate under was drawn up this summer and submitted to Gage for approval. He changed it to read that the LSO could pursue only civil action in court, not criminal action or litigate against the University as the LSO wanted.

The contract is currently being reviewed by William Searson, an attorney in UMass President Robert Wood's office, according to Susan Reilly of the Public Affairs office. Searson refused to comment saying, "I don't speak to reporters."

Savini said Searson is purposely delaying his approval of the contract, but that there is little chance the office will not be established.

Gage said he had no reason to believe that either Searson or Wood would not approve the contract.

The attorneys in the LSO are currently on a temporary contract which must be extended every two weeks.

Say U.S. taxpayers will object

Farmers caution conference on feeding world

ROME [UPI] — American Midwestern farm representaives warned the World Food Conference yesterday that they were not about to feed the rest of the world out of their own pockets.

"With all the fine words and brave talk going on around here, in the end it will be the American taxpayer who pays for it," said Dale Butz, a conference observer from the Illinois Farm Bureau and brother of U.S. agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz.

Cuba's representative used the world food forum to blame the world's economic ills on the United States, while China called for the expulsion of Cambodia and South Vietnam from the conference and said the food shortage was caused by the "superpowers."

There was also some plain, tough talk from the Midwest at a news conference called by Harold B. Steele, president of the Illinois Farm Bureau, and J. Merrill Anderson of the Iowa Farm Bureau.

The representatives from the biggest U.S. farm exporting states said they backed the idea of an international system to control food reserves, as proposed by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, but the warned the American taxpayer should not have to foot the bill.

"We would respond to the challenge of producing more," Steele said. "We are not stating that we expect starving people to pay for food before they are fed. But we are saying that neither farmers nor American taxpayers should be expected to carry the burden alone."

Steele questioned whether there would be adequate arrangements for distribution of the foods.

"Will they be used to feed hungry human beings or will they end up lost on some docking point as they have done in the past?" he asked.

In other news, American National Cattlemen's Association called on President Ford yesterday to help find out why beef prices remain high in supermarkets despite a strong supply in stockyards and on ranches.

In a letter to Ford, ANCA President Gordon Van Vleck said the President should help determine if retailers have increased profit margins on beef to an unwarranted degree.

The letter said conflicting statements by government, beef industry and consumer spokesmen on the question of meat prices and profits have caused confusion among both cattlemen and consumers and have increased public distrust of the entire food production and marketing system.

Sirica rules tapes admissible evidence

WASHINGTON [UPI] — U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica yesterday declared Richard M. Nixon's secret tapes to be proper evidence in the Watergate cover-up trial, overriding defense objections that they were illegal wiretaps and thus inadmissible.

In a brief courtroom statement, Sirica ruled that the prosecutors had laid "sufficient foundation" to admit the 26 tapes, which include Nixon's White House conversations between June 23, 1972, six days after the Watergate bugging arrests, through April 26, 1973, as the alleged cover-up began to unravel.

They are expected to be introduced beginning Monday in the trial of five men charged with attempting to cover up high level involvement in the break-in and bugging of Democratic national headquarters June 17, 1972.

In a last-ditch effort to keep the tapes away from the jury, attorneys for defendant H. R. Haldeman tried the surprise tactic of arguing that federal law prohibits fruits of illegal wiretaps as evidence.

Since the prosecution has offered no evidence that any of the participants in the conversations gave their consent to being taped, Haldeman lawyer Frank J. Stricker argued, the tapes thus are illegal interceptions of wire and oral communications and must be ruled inadmissible.

It was an argument never before raised in the case and lawyers for the four other defendants — John N. Mitchell, John D. Ehrlichman, Robert C. Mardian and Kenneth W. Parkinson — immediately endorsed it.

"I think you have a different situation," he said. "These tapes that are being offered...were made at the direction of the President and kept in the general course of business...

"My ruling is very simple. I don't think Congress intended that statute to apply in a situation such as we have this case."

The prosecution has already played six White House tapes as evidence, but these all involved former White House counsel John W. Dean III as a participant and were played when he was on the stand and could vouch for them.

Negotiations attempt to limit length of certain coal strike

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Negotiators hammered away yesterday in an effort to agree on a new coal industry contact and cut as short as possible a nationwide miners' strike due to begin at a minute after midnight Tuesday.

Administration officials, noting that some progress had been reported in the talks, called off a scheduled meeting with governors of 13 coal states to discuss how to deal with a protracted walkout.

Behind a door guarded by a union security official, representatives of the UMW and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association went over line-by-line the contract language proposed by both sides.

The two sides separated to study their bargaining positions before resuming negotiations in the evening.

"We should be able to make an agreement by Sunday, the end of the day Sunday," Guy Farmer, the chief industry negotiator, told reporters during the afternoon break.

During a midday break in the negotiations at the Hay Adams hotel, a union spokesman said, "We've got some knotty problems but we're making progress."

A short time later, union President Arnold Miller told reporters: "I think we're proceeding right along."

Asked if a strike is unavoidable, he said: "That's a foregone conclusion. We simply ran out of time."

The old contract expires at 12:01 a.m. Tuesday. A full-scale walkout appears inevitable, even if an agreement is reached before then, because the union has a "no contract, no work" clause in its constitution and UMW officials say it would take about 10 days to conduct a ratification vote by the 120,000 members.

Kent shots ordered

CLEVELAND [UPI] — An Ohio Highway Patrol investigator testified yesterday that an Ohio National Guard sergeant told him he gave an order for Guard troops to fire during student demonstrations at Kent State University but the order came after some shots had already been fired.

Sgt. Douglas C. Wells said Sgt. Mathew McManus, one of eight guardsmen being tried in U. S. District Court here on charges stemming from the May 4, 1970 shootings, told him of the order in an interview following the shooting.

Bolivian coup ended

LA PAZ, Bolivia [UPI] — President Hugo Banzer personally took command of loyalist troops yesterday and crushed an army rebellion in the city of Santa Cruz de la Sierra in southeastern Bolivia, the state radio said.

Rebel broadcasts said the insurgents had seized control of Santa Cruz in a morning rebellion.

There were no immediate details on the fighting to regain the captured city, 540 miles southeast of La Paz.

Henry leaves Arabs

JERUSALEM [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger rounded off his talks with Arab leaders and flew to Israel yesterday apparently convinced that the door remains open for his step-by-step Middle East settlement formula which he believes to be "the only possible one."

Kissinger met King Hussein in the Jordanian capital of Amman yesterday then flew to Damascus for talks with Syrian President Hafez Assad, most likely the toughest Arab stop.

In Jerusalem, Kissinger was informing Israeli leaders of the conclusions he had reached from talks in Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Syria.

Nixon improves

LONG BEACH, Calif. [AP] — Former President Richard M. Nixon's slight pneumonia in his partially collapsed right lung is clearing up and his overall condition continues to improve, his doctor said yesterday.

X-rays showed that the pneumonitis in Nixon's right lung is "responding well to antibiotic therapy and resolving," Dr. John C. Lungren said in his written daily report on Nixon.

Low voter turnouts helped decide close races

By The Associated Press

If a bare handful of the near-record number of Americans who stayed away from the polls had voted, many who lost cliff-hanger elections Tuesday might have been elected to high government office.

Five races for state governorships will go on record as being decided by less than 5,000 votes. One of the five squeakers still is undecided.

There were cliff-hangers in five U.S. Senate races. In one, the final unofficial returns had the candidates less than 100 votes apart, too close for the outcome to be decided before an official canvass.

In another one, the spread was less than 300 and in a third it was about 600. The two others were decided by fewer than 5,000 votes.

Voter turnout for Tuesday's election — estimated at 38 per cent — was at its lowest level since 1946, when 37.1 per cent of the voting age population went to the polls. The lowest figure on record is 32.5 per cent for 1942, when millions of men were away at war.

Republican Paul Laxalt, the former governor of Nevada, narrowly won his U.S. Senate race by some 600 votes out of about 158,000 cast in the race. The same for U.S. Rep. Louis C. Wyman, another Republican, who won by less than 300 votes in a New Hampshire race where 220,000 ballots were cast.

Incumbent Oklahoma Republican Henry Bellmon got by a little more easily. Even though some 777,000 persons voted in the race, Bellmon won by a little more than a 3,000 vote margin.

Democrat Patrick J. Leahy, a county prosecutor in Vermont, is going to the Senate by virtue of a 4,042 margin of victory. That race attracted 136,000 voters.

Then there's North Dakota, where the results of that Senate race are still uncertain. As canvassing boards began going over election returns yesterday, GOP Sen. Milton R. Young was leading his challenger, former Democratic Gov. William L. Guy, by less than 100 votes out of more than 236,000 cast.

The winning margins were somewhat wider in four of the cliff-hanger races for governorships. Had 5,000 persons voted the other way, Arizona Democrat Raul Castro, Republican Robert Bennett of Kansas, incumbent Republican Meldrim Thompson of New Hampshire and Democrat Jerry Apodaca of New Mexico would be looking for other work. Their winning margins really aren't as wide as they look since hundreds of thousands of votes were cast in these races.

In Alaska, with 75 per cent of the vote in Thursday, incumbent Democrat William Egan was virtually deadlocked with his Republican challenger. That race, too, likely will be decided by a relatively few votes.

Strauss says Democrats to act quickly on tax reform, health

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Congressional Democrats, bolstered by Tuesday's election victories, will act quickly to deal with the nation's economic ills, party chief Robert S. Strauss predicted yesterday.

He said his conversations with Democratic House and Senate leaders had convinced him they will move early in the next congressional session with new legislation on tax reform, housing, national health insurance and possibly public service employment.

"I've been talking to the Democratic congressional leadership, and they're ready," the Democratic National Committee chairman told reporters in a review of the election results.

Strauss also:

—Credited the Democratic victories to economic issues rather than the Watergate scandal.

—Predicted the 1974 gubernatorial and congressional triumphs would likely lead to a Democratic presidential victory in 1976.

Lacking results from Alaska and North Dakota, the lineup of governors was 36 Democrats, 12 Republicans and one Independant, while Congress lined up with 61 Democrats and 38 Republicans in the Senate, and 291 Democrats and 144 Republicans in the House.

Strauss pinned the reason for huge Democratic gains Tuesday directly on rejection of Ford administration economic policies and negated the explanation that a Watergate backlash was the reason for the Republican loss of three or four governors and senators and 44 House seats.

Dukakis still hopeful new taxes not needed

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. elect Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday he still is hopeful the state can avoid new taxes next year. But he said there may be difficulty in following through on what had been regarded as a no-new-tax campaign pledge.

Dukakis said, "I wish people would stop putting words in my mouth" when asked by a reporter if he still felt he could follow through on a no-tax "pledge" next year.

Dukakis said what he had said during the campaign was that he felt "confident we could do it" — avoid new taxes.

Yesterday he said he had felt confident because his information during the campaign was that the current state budget deficit was running between $50 million and $75 million.

"If discussions three months from now estimate the deficit at $300 million instead of $75 million, then obviously we've got problems."

Dukakis spoke to reporters before and after meeting with Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent, whom he defeated in Tuesday's election.

Asked if he believed Dukakis could avoid new state taxes next year, Sargent said, "I believe so, but I think it will be difficult."

Others were less confident than either Dukakis or Sargent.

Edward Moscovitz, deputy state secretary for fiscal affairs, said pending departmental requests for the fiscal year 1976 budget cannot be honored "without a huge increase in taxes."

The fiscal 1976 budget will be submitted to the legislature by the governor in January.

American Party wins

BOSTON [AP] — The major political parties in Massachusetts are now the Democratic, the Republican, and the American.

Until and unless its support dips under the 3 per cent level it passed Tuesday, the American Party is now entitled to the same rights as the other major parties, including the right to hold a primary election, the right to register voters, and the right to put candidates on the ballot with fewer signatures than minor parties need.

American Party gubernatorial candidate Leo F. Kahian polled 61,994 of the 1,849,124 votes cast for governor, with 31.3 per cent of those votes coming from Boston and Springfield. Those two cities are undergoing court-ordered busing, which Kahian said was the "primary" issue of his campaign.

State turnout drops

BOSTON [AP] — Massachusetts voter turnout for the election, 63.1 per cent, was lower than in recent non-presidential years, according to complete unofficial returns.

In 1970, 76.1 per cent of the registered voters went to the polls, with 78.7 per cent turning out in 1966. This year, 1,849,124 of the state's 2,928,910 voters cast ballots in the gubernatorial race, won by Democrat Michael S. Dukais.

In the attorney general's race, won by Democrat Francis X. Bellotti, 62.5 per cent of the voters participated, while the secretary of state race drew 61 per cent of the voters.

UMass coed elected

BOSTON [AP] — Come January, a pretty UMass-Boston coed from Brockton will be the youngest legislator in the commonwealth's history.

Karen Swanson, who won't be 21 until mid-January, upset Rep. Carl R. Ohlson Tuesday by 327 votes.

The campaign was decided mainly on issues, Miss Swanson reported, with the challenger going after Ohlson's conservative-Republican voting record on gun control (she favors it) and a variety of economic issues.

Miss Swanson got help from some local Democrats who had opposed her in the primary contest and a $300 boost from House Speaker David M. Bartley's committee to re-elect a Democratic House.

In accepting this contribution, Miss Swanson contended, she was required to sign a pledge card to support Bartley's re-election in January. She said she hesitated at first and was reluctant to sign the pledge but decided she might as well because no speakership fight was anticipated.

The young and energetic Miss Swanson is already a veteran of the political wars. She said she has worked in several area campaigns and had a role in Sen. George McGovern's 1972 presidential campaign here.

AIM demonstrates against 'double standard'

By GAIL SULLIVAN
Progressive News Service

The American Indian Movement (AIM) held a demonstration in Pierre, South Dakota, in support of Sarah Bad Heart Bull, Robert High Eagle, and Kenneth Dahl last week. The three were imprisoned in July after having been convicted for their participation in the Custer protest of February 6, 1973.

Three hundred people gathered Friday on the steps of the State Capitol Building to hear AIM leaders, national Church leaders, and Wounded Knee trial attorneys demand the immediate release of the three imprisoned people. Most of those present were Indian people from the seven reservations in South Dakota, many of whom had also been at the protest in Custer for which the three defendants were convicted. One such person was Ellen Moves Camp of the Pine Ridge Reservation, a leader of the siege of Wounded Knee, who spoke tearfully:

"It's very hard for Indians in South Dakota, more so now than before Wounded Knee. The very things which brought us to Custer in 1973 and caused Wounded Knee, bring us here today. There is no justice for us Indians in South Dakota."

Ted Means, on behalf of the Indians present, turned over to Ted Meunster, a representative of the Governor, petitions signed by thousands of people around the country demanding the immediate release of Sarah Bad Heart Bull and her co-defendants, based on the prejudice of the South Dakota courts. The petitions further supported the dismissal of all charges against Indian activists stemming from the Custer demonstration.

Sarah, Bob and Ken are the first of 19 defendants charged for the Custer demonstration. They were convicted of riot where arson was committed after a seven week trial in the middle of which violence erupted in the courtroom, between the South Dakota tactical squad and Indian spectators who refused to stand for the Judge. That incident resulted in one of the Custer defendants, David Hill, being blinded in one eye, and many other people being injured. A Lutheran Bishop, who witnessed the courtroom fight said of the Tactical Squad's action, "it was like using a shotgun to kill a flea."

Sarah was sentenced to 1-5 years in prison and given 24 hours in which to find living quarters and a guardian for her six children, five of whom are minors. Bob High Eagle and Kenneth Dahl were taken to prison immediately after receiving sentences of 5-7 years in jail. Judge Bottum further refused to grant the defendants bond pending their appeal, without stating a reason. Mark Lane, an attorney for the Wounded Knee Legal Defense-Offense Committee (WKLDOC), upon hearing the sentences, said to Bottum, "What I have seen today is a sham of the legal system. I am ashamed to be in the same profession as you. The decision in this case only goes to prove the righteousness of the protest in Custer, for which these people have been convicted."

The Custer demonstration had been called by AIM as a protest against the dual system of justice in South Dakota. Sarah's son, Wesley Bad Heart Bull had been stabbed to death by a white man and although there were five witnesses to the murder, the white man was charged with second degree manslaughter, and released immediately on bond. Dennis Banks, AIM leader and an organizer of the Custer protest said, "We called the demonstration because the charge showed how little value an Indian life has in South Dakota. There are two systems of justice, one for Indians and one for whites. It is this same double standard which keeps Sarah Bad Heart Bull in prison for the crime of demanding justice for her son's death."

Movement songwriter on campus

By ELLEN GAVIN
Progressive News Service

Holly Near, known among political activists as a movement songwriter, made somewhat of a surprise visit to Amherst this week. Taking a break from an East Coast tour which will be finishing up tonight at 8:00 at a rally at Tufts University with Jane Fonda and Daniel Ellsburg, Holly gave a delightful concert on Orchard Hill last Sunday night.

Over the last three years Holly has taken her extraordinary songs all over this country, as well as the world. She went on the 1971 Free the Army tour of U. S. bases in Asia with Jane Fonda, Donald Sutherland and others. In 1972 and 1973 she did a national tour with the Indochina Peace Campaign, along with Tom Hayden and Jane Fonda.

Many of her songs were inspired by the struggle of the Vietnamese people: songs about the involvement of the U.S. military, the culture of the Vietnamese, the G.I. Movement and the strength of the Vietnamese women.

Although her political activism came specifically out of the anti-war movement, Holly's songs reflect her interest in the liberation struggles of all people. Her concert was interspersed with anecdotes and points of information: stories from her high school days, recollections of reactions from different audiences, as well as simple insights coming out of her experiences as a woman. Holly's songs emphasize to a great degree the liberation of women in this country, in Viet Nam and countries throughout the world. Singing to an appreciative crowd in Field House Lounge, many of her songs express her notion of "sisterhood" as well as "community".

Holly has an album out on Redwood Records called "Hang in There". In order to avoid the exploitative commercial aspects of standard recording companies, Holly produced her album through Redwood Records, Inc. "Hang in There", along with a new album coming out soon, is available only by writing: Redwood Records, Inc. 565 Doolin Canyon, Ukiah, CA 95482.

See next week's Below the Salt for an exclusive interview with Holly Near.

Awareness of "Jazz"—Black art form

By JOHN WALKER
Black News Service

John Walker Quartet will be reappearing at the Hatch, Wed., Nov. 13, from 9 p.m.-1 a.m. Everyone is asked to come and bring your instrument.

The obligation to prepare the student for his future is sidestepped by most of our colleges today. As we look back over the past quarter century, we shall notice a very obvious change in the course of Black Music, Jazz, Afro-American Music or whatever monogram you prefer.

This music has a documented tradition of more than 70 years. With over fifty years of literature, this music — America's native culture — demands respect. This Black Art form has become more sophisticated, and it is up to the educational systems to enlighten the uninformed public and to nourish the many talented young people interested in America's native music.

Jazz has not been held in high regard by schools of music because of ignorance and lack of communication. Many music educators have not kept up on current musical styles enough to appreciate the tremendous artistry to today's Jazz musician. They have failed to investigate the full potential this music has to offer in the development of our young musicians.

A very important aspect of Jazz which lends itself well to the development of young musicians is improvisation. As noted by Gary Burton, a well-known Jazz educator, clinician and judicator, "Improvisation is now present to some degree in virtually every area of music." For this reason, students who plan professional careers will need to know how to improvise."

Unfortunately, many administrators and educators consider improvisation a special secret to be reserved for the end of the learning process. But a more practical and academic way of viewing the matter is that basic principles of improvisation should be taught. Improvisation provides the student with an in-depth look at his craft which is not available in any other way.

At this point, I feel we should be purely academic about the matter and ask ourselves WHY NOT? Why not approach music from the one direction that gives validity and vitality to the entire music education process? With an eye on developing musicianship, technique, stability and poise through jazz, the jazz educator provides his students with the impetus to be self-motivating and self-fulfulling. Also, as the process takes place, the student becomes self-reliant and musically independent.

The Jazz approach is one that can allow almost infinite personal freedom of expression. All one has to do is listen to Archie Shepp playing his composition "The Chased" or Miles Davis doing "Jack Johnson" to hear the great range of rhythmic, harmonic and structural possibilities being explored. The Jazz approach is one that can allow almost unlimited interchange with others. In addition, since improvisation depends on a thorough knowledge of the way music fits together, it has great value for all musicians.

Henry Pleasant refers to the present as the "Afro-American" period in Music History. As music educators, we often talk about broadening the students' interest in music when we are really narrowing his taste by excluding any discussion of what might be considered popular music. I suppose it is based on the premise that this music is often pleasurable and therefore not worthy of intellectual pursuit. But actually this could be the ultimate in musical communication.

The future music educator will find a growing need to understand this new catalyst that helps many students achieve to their fullest potential. One last point must be made: music is music regardless of the label attached to it. To think otherwise is to perpetuate a provincial attitude. A truly great music department is one that presents a musical "smorgasbord" from which all students whether Black, White or Yellow can taste and choose for themselves that musical food which the student feels is nourishing.

Black Revolution of 60's conference planned

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

The New Africa House Steering Committee is sponsoring, on Tuesday, a symposium entitled, "Black Revolution in the 1960's, An Overview", November 12th at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Panelist will include invited guests: Robert Williams, Askia Muhammad Toure, Joe Gonzales; as well as, the following participants from the Five College areas: Sonia Sanchez, Muhammad Ahmad, Ernie Mkalimote, and John Bracey.

The purpose of the conference is to review the struggle of Black people in the 1960's to attempt to correct the many distortions and omissions that currently exist. Archie Shepp and his Jazz Workshop along with the Voices of New Africa will provide music reflecting the mood of the 60's. The entire university Community is urged to attend an exciting and controversial discussion.

Robert F. Williams, was president of the Monroe, North Carolina NAACP chapter, 1957-61 organized self defense, community patrols to protect community from Klu Klux Klan (KKK), ran for Mayor of Monroe, spent eight years in exile, five years in Cuba, three years in People's Republic of China, met with Fidel Castro, Che Guverra, Muhammad Babu (Zambarian revolutionary), Mae Tse Tung, Chou En Li and was the first Black man from United States to speak in mass rally to Chinese people. Ex-president of the Republic of New Afrika, he now faces extradition back to North Carolina and kidnapping charges dating back to 1961.

Askia Muhammad Toure, noted poet, author of "Songhay", a book of spiritual essays, Co-editor of "Black America Magazine," was active in the first Black Studies Dept. at San Francisco State with Dr. Nathan Hare.

Sister Sonia Sanchez, poetess, author, playwrighter, chairperson of Amherst Black Studies Dept., was active in Black Arts Movement, on the East and West Coast. Served a major role in developing Black awareness and Black Studies Movement.

Accounts of the 60's, as a historical movement will be highlighted by John Bracey, chairman of the Afro-American Studies Dept., UMass, active in early sixties in Chicago C.O.R.E. and N.O.W. organizations, noted historian, and co-author of "Nationalism," a major research on the Black working class in the Black Liberation Struggle.

Muhammad Ahmad (Max Standford), ex-ambassador of the Republic of New Afrika, political community worker, worked with street gangs forces in 1960's. Author of "Al-Jihad" and "Towards Pan-Afrikan Liberation."

The entire community is invited to attend this historical review of the 1960's, by studying and analyzing our past, we are able to make accurate projections in the future.

Facing up to racism in Chinatown

By MARGARET CORNELL

In 1885, a "Special Committee of San Francisco Supervisors" investigated their city's Chinatown. They were a compassionate group of Christian people, only wanting the best for their country and their people.

Their report on Chinatown was full of horror and sympathy: "All great cities have their slums where diseases, crime, and misery abound; but the very best aspect which "Chinatown" can be made to present, it must stand apart, conspicuous, and beyond them all in the extreme degree of all those horrible attributes, the rankest outgrowth of human degradation that can be found on the continent. Here it may be truly said that human beings exist under conditions (as regards their mode of life and the air they breathe) scarcely one degree above those under which the rats of the waterfront and other vermin live, breathe, and have their being." All of which went to say that the Chinese were living under lousy conditions.

Of course these brave Christians felt a righteous anger and stingingly reprimanded those responsible for forcing the Chinese to live under such conditions. While the Chinese Exclusion Act had been passed in 1882, these Christian people would say that that was no cause to force the Chinese living there to live so. Of course they would encourage the government to pass laws allowing the Chinese men to marry Whites, so they could have homes and not turn to gambling and opium for lack of anything else to do. Of course they would demand better housing, less heavy taxing directed only at Chinese and less discrimination by the law against Chinese.

I wish I could say it went that way, for I'm a Christian and would like to speak well of my old brothers and sisters in Christ. It would be very easy to say they were not truly Christians. It's very easy to say. Too easy. I believe they thought they were good Christians. But like many Christians today, they remained silent on matters of racism, sexism, and imperialism, unless their lives were directly touched by it or -- worse still -- they blamed the victims for being victims. That, of course, allowed them to stay on the mountain with their God; they forgot that Jesus Christ came down from the mountain to stay among prostitutes, thieves, and sinners: pawns of the Roman Empire.

Instead they were blatant racists and said: "But the instinct of the race remains unchanged; and when the Chinese servant leaves employment in an American household he joyfully hastens back to his slum and his burrow, to the grateful luxury of his normal surroundings, vice, filth, and an atmosphere of horror..." They never asked themselves (good folk) who allowed the exploitation and forced the Chinese to live under such conditions. They did, and we Christians still allow racism to go on by refusing to face that it is still an everyday reality for millions of nonWhite people in America. Jesus attacked the Scribes and Pharisees for pious hypocrisy, but we practice it. Hear, speak, and see no evil; it will go away. Boston, anyone?

Letters to the editor

Weiss caught on Camelot

To the Editor:

I feel for Fred Weiss — just as he feels for Ted Kennedy. I feel for him because he is seduced by "that Kennedy grin; wide and bright, it could light up a room". I can see Fred drooling. What absolute devotion. Frankly, I find it disgusting.

There is nothing wrong with showing your bias Fred, but couldn't you have been a little more subtle? Fred is surely not the first to be captivated by the "easy Kennedy charm", nor will he be the last, but do you think, Fred, that you could control your run-away emotions long enough to write a decent column?

Fred says Ted has had a painful life. Don't we know it. And that it makes him sick to see people rejoice at his downfall. Aren't you anticipating things a bit, Fred? Kennedy has his problems, but he's not exactly down yet, nor does he show signs of being in that position soon. You see Fred, too many people are devoted to "that Kennedy grin". Couldn't live without it.

Fred says that he is."sick to see them smirk. Sick to see them laugh". I wonder how many people who feel as Fred does were doing on the night of Nixon's downfall. [By the way Fred, that was a downfall.] I wonder if they felt sick at the vulgar and malicious cheering and jeering outside the White House that night.

No matter what one's biases, a man's problems or outright downfall are no cause for rejoicing. It was just a sickening to have watched the vulgar display at the White House as to have read the ugly remarks shouted at Kennedy when he attempted to speak on busing in Boston recently. To have rejoiced in the one event and been sickened at the other is nothing but dishonesty, hypocrisy, and malice.

Boycott Gallo

To the Editor:

From April 17, 1967 to April 18, 1973 workers employed by Ernest and Julio Gallo were represented by the United Farmworkers Union [AFL-CIO]. During this time workers enjoyed such benefits as wages from $1.80 to $2.00, job security, pesticide controls, prohibitions on child labor, bathrooms and drinking water in the fields and the first health care plan in Gallo's history.

On March 22 of 1973 negotiations between the UFW and Gallo began. Two days after the union president Cesar Chavez called for an immediate election, workers for the Gallo Brothers received letters informing them that they were in the midst of a jurisdictional dispute between two unions. On June 20 negotiations between Chavez's union and Gallo were broken off and 130 out of the total 150 workers went out on strike.

A short time later [July 9] the Teamsters signed a four year contract with Gallo, including in its provisions Gallo's position on all of the issues over which negotiations broke off with the UFW. [Sweetheart contracts such as these were denounced and labeled as grossly unjust by the California Supreme Court].

As is usual practice in California at this time, farm labor strikes are severely repressed and scabs are allowed to enter the fields where strikers are attempting to fight for their rights. What is unusual is that in the Gallo fields on September 6, 1974 a large number of workers, under Teamster contract, picked up UFW strike flags and walked out of the Livingston Ranch [Gallo owned].

The reasons for such a walkout lie in the inferior contracts offered by the Teamsters which call for the restoration of the exploitive labor contractor system, elimination of job security and mechanisms for grievance procedures, on the job health and safety protection and worker participation in contract enforcement.

The Juan de la Cruz Committee, a subcommittee of the Committee on Poverty calls for the support of all students, faculty and staff at the University in bringing free elections to workers who have long been denied even a glimpse at justice. To convince Ernest and Julio Gallo that we support the right of workers to organize into a bargaining power of their own choice, BOYCOTT ALL WINES MADE IN MODESTO, BECAUSE ALL WINES MADE IN MODESTO ARE MADE BY GALLO, AND GALLO EXPLOITS FARM WORKERS!

Students are responsible

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to the 10-30-74 editorial by Nat [the rat] Clark. It seems that he doubts the intellectual capacity of his fellow students. I am in no position, nor do I desire, to judge Mr. Clark's mental competence, although it appears to be deficient; but I do feel qualified to comment on the competence of the general student body.

Yes! Mr. Clark, this university does exist to meet the needs of its students, but no one, or any institution is infallible. Constructive criticism and the acknowledgement of it, is the basis for a progressive society. It must reject conservatism [the retainment of the status quo, at all costs], and accept the innovation that is essential to progress in a fashion which is, at least, willing to accept needed change. I will not condemn the conservative policies of this university for merely existing, but I do expect that they be receptive to change, and not lie in a state of constant stagnation. For stagnation will result in the vanquishment of any institution.

Mr. Clark, you challenge the capacity of students to make responsible academic decisions. I do agree that some students are incapable, namely yourself, but not I. I do feel qualified, along with most of my fellow brethren, to successfully participate in decisions relating to the academic aspects of this university. I, along with most of the highly respected and distinguished members of this student body, am capable of making competent and viable decisions, as well as realistically evaluating my capabilities and liabilities. We have insight into our purpose of ubiety in an ecumenic aspect, as well as in terms of this isolated university. If you are incapable of forming competent judgements for yourself, please do not transcend your condescending self-deficiencies upon others. Your failures are not ours.

You become insulted by the claim that the university does not exist purely for the purpose of meeting student needs, and that it does not always treat students as people. How foolish and ignorant of you to be insulted. You live in a delusion where you are blinded to the de-humanizing aspects of this university. You must have little self-respect to be insulted by it. i am proud to be part of the administration of this university, but I deplore many of its policies. I do not deny their existence, or become insulted by them, I attempt to change them. I, as a member of the administration, am part of the deficiency. I am not insulted by my shortcomings, I can only try to improve them.

Mr. Clark! You state that "students are not capable of being impowered to govern any major aspect of this university". There do exist student-run dorms, successful, which are totally run and administrated by students. Please come and view our operation before you pass judgement on our incapabilities. Students have manifested their capacity to govern themselves, as evident by the successful existence of the few student-run dorms.

I do expect more from my college experience than academic enrichment. I disagree that the classroom is "our primary responsibility". I do not intend to spend four years of my life in quest for intellectuality. I view this period as being an experience in learning about people and life, and broadening my horizons in all possible fields. Reading your columns, has enriched my insight into the close-mindedness idiocy of some people. Mr. Clark! I doubt if your feeblemindedness will impress those university administrators, that you so desperately try to inculcate.

Prejudice gone underground

To the Editor:

In a recent letter to the Collegian, Mr. Bruce Jefferies wrote that he was tired of sitting at the back of the bus, a victim of reverse discrimination. Such a typical attitude cannot be let go unchallenged.

Mr. Jefferies would like to turn his back on the socio-economic inequalities of our system and say "yea let everyone be equal; why not?" Why not? Because equality doesn't respond to voice command. It is this very apathetic philosophy that is the root of inequality today.

The undereducated, poverty stricken blacks of our urban ghettos aren't going to achieve equality just because you think it sounds like a good idea. Equality is going to take a conscious effort on your part.

The New Africa House, The Drum, and the CCEBS that you label as "special privilege" were formed to give blacks the tools to compete for equality in our capitalist, bigoted society.

Many people, like Mr. Jefferies, say "sure, right man. brotherhood", but I don't buy it. Your prejudices have just gone underground where they have become more difficult to deal with because you are unaware of them yourself.

Press pressure

When the great big Editor in the sky was passing out journalistic ethics and common sense, the staff of the Boston Globe must've been out to lunch. If there were ever an election day when the Globe and some other major newspapers were out of tune with the voters of Massachusetts, then last Tuesday was a prime example. I can still see those advertisements for Sargent's re-election, listing the endorsements of newspapers from across the state. That the papers didn't call the election correctly is not the issue here. The concern is the role the press attempted to play, particularly the Boston Globe, throughout the election campaign, to sway the voter's minds.

It became more and more obvious, throughout the months preceding the election, which candidates the Globe would finally endorse for election. For instance, the news coverage and opinion columns concerning Paul Guzzi were consistently lopsided in his favor. A couple of opinion columns could surely have been used as political advertisements, and to be sure, some bordered on being just that. A columnist has his right to his opinion, that after all, is what it's all about. But when opinions border on fostering the ambitions of certain candidates, or products, or organizations, then I believe it is reasonable to question such tactics, especially if they are used over an extended period of time. If there existed a more forceful advocate of Paul Guzzi's candidacy than the Globe, I'd like to know about it.

The Gubernatorial campaign was covered, in the beginning, in a fairly responsible manner, all sides given equal treatment. It was in the closing weeks that the Globe began to make its preference clear, and the news coverage as well as political columns reflected the bias. It was no surprise to the faithful reader of the newspaper that Sargent would receive the official endorsement. It was appalling in the closing days of the campaign to read columnists gradually changing their emphasis to seemingly comply with the attitude of the editors of the paper.

The coverage of Frank Bellotti's campaign was a lesson in how not to report on a candidate. The biases were obvious from the very beginning, and it got worse as time wore on. From reporters to columnists to cartoonist, the Globe was dead set against Bellotti becoming Attorney General. And because of this attitude, we were treated to uneven coverage of the campaign. It was no surprise, once again, who the Globe would endorse. If anyone has a right to scorn the Globe, Frank Bellotti has.

Now let's talk about the pre-election polls. I read today in the Globe that a complete review of its polling procedure is underway, and it's no damn wonder. They mislead the candidates and the public, and thank God no one was affected by it. But in my opinion, the day before election day poll was more than a simple pollster's error. As anyone who has done polling knows, a polltaker compiles several different types of figures, and it is in the selection of categories and numbers that problems arise. For instance, it is known that the Globe had conducted polls all the week before the election, and had several sets of figures available for their use. It seems that they chose the figures most representative of their own editorial endorsements. How else can one explain the glaring discrepancies between Monday's poll, and the actual vote on Tuesday? Especially when previously done polls were more consistent with the actual vote. The Globe chose their figures very carefully, too carefully, and they just coincidentally favored the campaigns of the candidates the paper had endorsed.

Besides the "coincidences", it is debatable whether a newspaper should publish pre-election polls, after having endorsed candidates. And it is also debatable whether a newspaper should publish a poll the day before an election. The Globe was obviously not performing a public service by their actions, it was simply attempting to influence the outcome of the elections. And if that doesn't make the Globe's journalistic ethics questionable at the very least, then I don't know what does.

Which brings me to another point. Last week, on this page, a column appeared which suggested several things about Frank Bellotti. While I'm sure it drew hearty guffaws from the more light-headed of us, it was a prime example of the type of journalism of which I referred to above. This may be a college newspaper, but it is still the Press. To use a space on these pages to promote the personal irrationalities of a columnist, bordering on defamation of character, is to have a deep disregard for journalism in general, and for the people who pick up this paper every day. I believe that a person must have a certain respect for the space where his opinions or reporting is printed. That respect is for the power of the printed word; not so much for the good it can do, but for the potential harm it can cause. A misused freedom is an affront to all of us, and a grave danger. Perhaps if we all sat down and really thought about what we are responsible for on these pages, some of us would think twice about what we write. A column such as the one about Bellotti flies in the face of ethical behavior. Opinions are one thing, defamation is quite another. We can do without it. We must.

Sharing the wealth

News from the papal city is not good. Members of the World Food Conference tell us that 10,000 people die from starvation daily, and that the only significant exporters of food in the world are the U.S. and Canada — especially of course the former.

This, quite naturally, can mean only one thing: the United States must, in all moral truth, cough up more food than ever before. Any fair-minded observer would have to agree with this.

But what is America's answer to the starving? This year America plans to offer less food than in the past. Under easy credit programs, the U.S. two years ago sent abroad nine million tons of grain; this year we will send three and a half million — an amount far from adequate.

The average American might contend that conditions here are bad enough without handing vasts amounts of our food to unappreciative moochers on the other side of the globe. To be sure, one could expect prices to rise to new, previously unimagined heights, were we to respond in the manner which the Conference members tell us that we must. This, added to the fact that people die in our own country from starvation every day, compels one to feel that more compassionate acts are not warranted.

But it must be realized that we, five percent of the world's population, consume over half the world's food supply. That is blatantly unfair. And painful though the realization is, nothing will be done about it. As the writers of that recently pointed out in the Boston Globe, Americans are simply not willing to part with their hamburgers, chickens, and eggs.

There is no easy answer, and it would appear that the state of affairs stand only to seriously worsen.

Wages and students

Inflation has risen 12 per cent in one year, tuition and expenses are up to $2,400, and student workers on this university are working at the minimum wage. Students are not removed from the rest of the country. They too are affected by the huge increases in the cost of living. Their wages, however, do not at all correspond with those increases. Financial aid is getting harder and harder to come by, everyday living expenses are skyrocketing, and UMass students working at the dining commons are still only getting $2.00 an hour. The full time employees working there deservingly get an annual cost of living wage — the students get none. Out of their total budget, which exclusively comes from student funds, 44 per cent goes to labor. Only 3 per cent goes to student labor. 10.2 per cent goes to the likes of Rockefeller, via the Chase Manhattan Bank and the First National Bank of Boston, in the form of interest on bond payments. Each year as food prices increase, as interest rates increase and as wages increase for some, the meal ticket holding students pay more. That's a reality. The dining commons must also keep up with inflation. They must not, however, be allowed to do this by exploiting students — that is — using them as a cheap and complaisant work force. There is a real need on this university for a student labor committee, as obviously student's interests and needs are not being represented. There will be a meeting tonight at 8:00 in room 113 of the campus center in order to discuss the formation of a student representative body. All dining common student workers are urged to attend.

The opinions expressed in this space represent those of a majority of the Board of Editors.

The Pub

Friendship and warmth must exist in any university community and we as students need places where we can relax and fully enjoy ourselves. The Pub in Amherst center is and has always been such a place.

For many the Pub is its own little world, a subsociety in this very large community. It is a place where one can go regularly, see the same people and have a really great time. I will grant that for many of its patrons "the hangover has become a part of the day as well allowed for as the Spanish siesta", as F. Scott Fitzgerald put it, but for others it exists simply as a very friendly place where one can go and meet the many wonderful people who go and work there. Most of the workers there are students or past students and so a bond exists between them and those whom they serve.

The spirit of "Homecoming" was very great there two weeks ago and in many ways it turned many of my ideas around. I was struck by an enormous feeling of spirit for this university. There I was standing in front of the Pub and as the Homecoming parade passed by I found myself proud to be a UMass student, proud to be a part of a massive, thriving university which was doing its damndest to cope with the problems of so many people. I began to realize that even in a community as big as this people did find their own group of friends with which to be. At the Pub people were gathering to enjoy good drink, good music, and most of all to enjoy each other.

The Pub exists for students. It allows its patrons to thoroughly enjoy themselves without being hassled. The Management demands that people be treated humanly even if they are being offensive. They simply want people to enjoy themselves. This is reflected in the entertainment that they hire. The "Great Pretenders", Doc Sullivan and D.J. have grown with this university and share in its future along with the rest of us. They enjoy us as much as we enjoy them.

The Pub is simply the place which brought Homecoming "home" to me. Under that roof, for all the noise and complaints about overcrowding, there exists a world of friendship and good times for many of us. The bartenders, waitresses and doormen are some of the most wonderful people I have met. They enjoy the Pub and its customers and it shows. They are a dedicated group. The Pub has the warmth and personal friendship that we all need so badly. It is a credit to the town of Amherst, UMass and most of all to Gerald Jolly and his staff. For me it's home.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

EWC offers weekend to explore creativity

A weekend of creativity exploration, sponsored by Everywoman's Center of the University of Massachusetts, will take place November 15-17 at the Smith College field house. This is a chance for women who don't think of themselves as creative as well as for those who do, to express their experience as women through various forms of art media, guided imagery, improvisation, and play, organizers say.

The workshop will be facilitated by four staff members from Everywoman's Center who have had experience in the arts and in working with women. Annette Townley is a poet, on the staff of Chromo-Uri, and has been involved in all facets of theater. A graphic artist, Kaymarion has a degree in Art Education and is doing work on creativity and self-concept. Midge Miles is a group facilitator with a background in Gestalt Therapy and is a graduate student in psychology and religion. Sally Allen, journalist and writer, is also on the staff of Chomo-Uri, and is currently exploring self-expression through clay.

The facilitators believe everyone has the potential for creative living. This weekend will focus on not only creativity in the usual sense, that is, writing, drawing, acting, but also on living creatively, learning self-expression through daily activities.

The goals of the weekend reflect these ideas. Increased use of the senses, experiments with spontaneity, identification of new ways to express creativity are all highlighted, as well as increased self-awareness and self-appreciation, support and validation.

The purpose of this weekend is interestingly stated in the following comment made by Midge Miles: "One of the major emphases of the Human Potential Movement is helping ourselves and others 'wake up' to the energy and power which we have locked up in one of the rooms in our mansions. I also believe that there are a lot of zombies walking around. Maybe during this weekend we can learn to grow a third eye, or ear.."

The cost for this weekend is $30, which includes all meals on Saturday, breakfast Sunday, and coffee, tea, and snacks in-between. For more information phone or drop by Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell Hall at 545-0883.

Alternative education center emphasizes personal growth

By MARA KLEIN
Staff Reporter

The New England Center, a non-profit, education center dealing in new dimensions of learning and alternative ways in education, is located off Route 63 at the foot of Mount Toby.

Consisting of a house and two cabins, the center is emphasizing personal growth and professional training, through experience oriented learning; that is learning by doing.

The center is a residential center, where the residents participate in the workshops that the center offers. Some of the areas which the center concentrates in are: humanistic education, group dynamics, gestalt, psychisynthesis, biofeedback, feldenkrais movement, massage, bio-energetics, tai chi chuan, yoga, meditation, and sensory awakening.

The programs are presented in extended workshops, seminars, and training sessions. There are ongoing workshops, which occur weekly. These workshops attempt to look at the whole human being. They are open to UMass students, for a fee, however no credit is presently given for courses taken there.

According to Joseph Della Grotte, director of the center, they are in the process of gaining accredidation, so that in the future UMass students can get academic credit for seminars and workshops taken at the center.

Other programs are extended workshops, which last for ten days during Christmas and the introductory series offered on Wednesday nights. They approach topics such as: gestalt art, feldenkrais movement, tai chi chuan, meditation and chanting.

The center will be presenting programs at the Education Marathon next week. Gestalt awareness will be approached Monday from 9 to 11 and self awareness through body and movement, will be presented Wednesday evening from 7 to 9.

Those interested in the program can contact the center c-o P.O. Box 575, Amherst for more information.

Ski club plans trips and special activities

By PETER McDONNELL
Staff Correspondent

Special week-long trips, Saturday Wine and Cheeses, Express Ski Parties, and Bargain Nights were planned at the season's first Ski Club meeting, recently.

President Philip Saluter also announced that Wednesday and Thursday evenings buses will be leaving for either Berkshire East or Mt. Tom for Ski Club members who are entitled to a lift ticket, transportation and a wine and cheese party on the rides, for a $2.00 fee. Berkshire East if offering the same deal on Fridays from 3:30 to 10:30 P.M. for $1.00.

Student Ski Association and UMass Ski Club discounts were also available, Saluter said.

Details of these ski trips and discounts are available at the Ski Club Office located in Room 309 of the Student Union Building.

WMUA program will examine topical news

On Nov. 10, the Sunday News Collective will be discussing Tenents, the Kent State Trials and Martin Sostre. Other topics to be discussed are the United Mine Workers, Abortion, Chile, I.R.A. food famines, Holly Near, Vietnamese uprising and an anti inflation rally as well as community notes.

The show runs from 6:00 p.m. until 7:00 p.m. every Sunday on WMUA.

Polish Highlanders set here for Saturday

By MARIAN PROKOP
Staff Reporter

Final arrangements for the Saturday night performance of music and dance by the Polish Highlanders featuring folksinger Adrzej Bachleda were made at last Wednesday's meeting of the Polish-American Cultural Association, a recently formed club here.

Wes Kulig, an undergrad and president of the association, also announced to the 20 members present, an invitation to display Polish culture at the International Fair sponsored by the School of Education on December 6 in the Newman Center.

Kulig also said that the interest in Polish culture resulting from their display in the Campus Center Concourse this week could lead to selling Polish imports, costumes, and other items to finance future activities.

According to Stanley Radosh, a Slavic bibliographer at the library who also teaches elementary Polish here, the Polish Cultural Association is an opportunity for the general public to learn about and understand Polish culture.

"Lots of people tell Polish jokes," Radosh said "But they have no knowledge of Polish people or people history."

Last year, the association attempted to organize outside the university so as to attract members from local communities. Since becomeing a Recognized Student Organization this semester, they have raised their membership so far, from 20 to 50 members, Radosh said.

Radosh said he would like to set up displays, have speakers, and show films, but would need money to do these projects. Plans were also being made for a group to learn Polish Christmas carols to sing at old age homes.

The performance by folksinger Andrzej Bachleda and the seven members of Jan Gomada's "muzyka goralska" on Saturday will be the first time anything significantly representing Polish culture has been done on campus, Radosh said.

Radosh calls Bachleda a "connoisseur of folk art" who is very well known in Poland and is currently performing at the Lincoln center in New York under the auspices of the Kozsciousko Foundation.

Bachleda will sing classical songs by 20th century composers Karlowicz and Szymanowski, that are based on folk songs as well as singing authentic highland folk songs.

A slide show styled like a "village wedding" and explained in English will be shown to familiarize the audience with the land and people of the highlands.

The performance will be held on Saturday, November 9, at 7:30 in the Campus Center Auditorium. Tickets are $2 for students and $2.50 for the public and may be purchased Friday on the CC Concourse or at the door.

notes & quotes

Music series continues

The trumpeter Maurice Andre, a classical music sensation in Europe, together with the Wuerttemberg Chamber Orchestra under the baton of Jorg Fazrber. will appear in concert Monday in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. This event is the second initpe Universitq's Arts Council's Chamber Music Series.

For the UMass concert, the program will include Five Pieces for String Orchestra, Opus 44, No. 4, by Hindemith; Concerto for Two Violins and Orchestra, by Bach; Concerto for Trumpet and Orchestra in B Flat Major, by Albiononi; Quartet for String Orchestra in C Major, by Stamitz; Rumanian Folk Dances, by Bartok; and Concert for Trumpet and Orchestra in D Major, by Tartini.

Tickets are now on sale at the UMass Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall. (Tel. 545-0202), at $4 for the general public and $2 for UMass students. Special group rates may be arranged by calling the above number.

Blood donors still needed

The Red Cross will be on campus Monday through Thursday and walk-in donors will be welcomed.

Blood collection will be in the Campus Center Auditorium from 10 a.m. to 3:45 p.m. Monday; and from 9:30 a.m. to 3:15 p.m. the remaining days. Closest parking is the Campus Center Garage.

Donors must be healthy, at least 110 pounds, and between the ages of 18 and 66. Seventeen-year-olds may donate if they have parental permission.

Election file needs papers

Help!! The UMass Library would appreciate receiving any "after election" Massachusetts newspapers. Clippings from them will be included in its "Election Statistics File" in the Government Documents Dept. on the 21st floor. Newspapers should be left at the Reference Desks on the main floor.

Jewish social group to meet

Does this sound familiar?

You're Jewish and between the ages of 22 and 30. You enjoy meeting people with whom you have something in common. Perhaps an occasional party, or from time to time an occasional bull session would turn you on. The problem is there's no group to shoot the bull with, or even worse, there's no common ground to draw such a group together.

You probably feel that the existing Jewish groups on campus are either too young or too culturally oriented for you.

Anyone who shares the above characteristics is invited to an informal get-together on Sunday November 10 at 8:00 p.m. at the Top of the Campus, room 1101 to discuss the possibility of future get-togethers.

Contact Joel Hatch or call 545-2526 for further information. The emphasis is entirely social.

Choir concert set at Smith

The Smith College Choir, conducted by Melissa Cox, and the M.I.T. Glee Club, under the direction of John Oliver, will give a concert Sunday afternoon at 4 at the Helen Hills Chapel.

The groups will perform works by Charles Ives and Handel.

The public is invited to attend.

Film series features farm workers

A film series concerned with the plight of farm workers will begin tonight at 9:00. The series is being sponsored by the UMass United Farm Workers boycott committee in an effort to attract more student support for La Causa.

Each film deals with some aspect of the struggle farm workers face as they try to earn a decent wage for themselves and their families.

The films will be shown as follows:

Friday, Nov. 8 - Birth of a Union, Decision at Delano at 9:00 p.m. in Room 165-9, Campus Center.

Tuesday, Nov. 12 - Yo Soy Chicano at 9:00 p.m. in Room 174-6, Campus Center.

Friday, Nov. 15 - Harvest of Shame at 9:00 p.m., Room to be announced.

Thursday, Nov. 21 - Huelga! at 9:00 p.m., Room to be announced.

There is no charge for the films, and everyone is welcome to attend.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Tensions and counter-tensions on the celestial scene make a precisely predictable week all but impossible. Ups and downs on all levels of life cause careers to bloom or fade personal relationships to be strengthened or diminished with little warning either way. Occupations and preoccupations are apt to bring material gain one day and little but frustration and disappointment the next. Lovers are inclined to quarrel; enemies may quite suddenly find a pathway to friendship emerging from the unexpected discovery of much in common. There is little to bolster egos on the one hand — and must to instill self-confidence on the other. Success and failure seem at times to vie with each other for the last word, while good moods and bad alternate in swift succession.

Those who are wise in the ways of the world will make no plans that are not flexible. More important than a basis in soundness where plans are concerned this week is an ability to change horses mid-stream — or anywhere else that circumstances demand. This is no week for those who are set in their ways — but it is also no week for those who insist that the new and different are all that are important, all that will insure progress. Rather, this is a week when the new and the old must exist in harmony together, just as the usual and the unusual must be at peace with each other.

SCORPIO (Oct. 22-Nov. 7) — There is no excuse for ignoring the advice of others. Make certain that you know which side your bread is buttered on this week. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — Business affairs are such that there may be much confusion early in the week. Make an effort to cooperate with co-workers — even those you dislike.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — Though a number of new schemes may present themselves early in the week, you would do well to ignore all but the most flexible. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — If you would add appreciably to your business or professional income, act at once on the suggestion of one who has recently known great success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Investigate any new plans for gain, especially should you be asked for a cash contribution to get the scheme underway. Take your time. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Profits run high where partnership activities are concerned. On the other hand, there is much to indicate that present partnerships may dissolve.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Take no notice of those who are blowing their own horns. There is much to be gained by sharing knowledge about present endeavors. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — Execute your plans quickly — but don't rely on other people's approval of them. Results may not be what you expected — though they may well be good.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 5) — Promises may be kept even though you may have changed your mind about what prompted them. Don't be surprised to be charged with error. (March 6-March 20) — If you would be able to take advantage of present opportunities, take the time and effort needed to inform higher-ups of your abilities.

ARIES (March 21-April 4) — A week when flattery, though it may be easy to apply to another's ego, will gain you very little. Take care not to rest on your laurels. (April 5-April 19) — Logic serves you well, when it serves you at all, this week. Don't be alarmed should the illogical seem to take over now and again.

TAURUS (April 20-May 5) — Keep to what you know well, especially during the early days of the week when success is an unpredictable outcome of time and effort. (May 6-May 20) — Make your ideas practical ones and you will have little to fear from higher-ups should a diminishing of the labor force be in the making. Remain alert.

GEMINI (May 21-June 6) — Conservative action must be alternated with progressive action if you are to be able to take advantage of what the week has to offer. (June 7-June 20) — Present profits may not be enough to gain your ultimate ends. Make your way easier by following the advice of an old friend. Remember an old rule.

CANCER (June 21-July 7) — Take care not to plan too much activity this week. This is an excellent time for changing your life-style — but only if loved ones agree. (July 8-July 22) — Be wise in your selection of the week's activities. Otherwise, you may choose with an eye to profits only and, thus, bring failure upon yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 7) — Disruptions on the home front cannot be counted upon to disturb things on the employment scene. The ways and means prescribed may not be sufficient. (Aug. 8-Aug. 22) — A fast-moving week during which difficulties with present business or profession increase in some aspects and decrease in others.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — A tendency to begin immediately to act upon any suggestions others may offer may make this a week of unexpected surprises for all. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Impulsive moves may not be as difficult to deal with as usual this week. Where youngsters are concerned, think over your advice once again.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Delay carrying out intentions. Otherwise, you may find that you have blocked your own changes of heart and mind. Consider new reforms. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Unless you can deal efficiently with lapses of discipline on the home front, you can hardly expect to deal with them on the employment scene. Act!

Peer sex ed program has colloq, positions

PSE is the Peer Sex Education Program sponsored by the Division of Health Education of the University Health Services. Peer Sex Educators have been in the residence halls for several years, however, it was only a year and a half ago that the Greek Area Peer Sex Education Team began.

Under the direction of Ron Mazur, Jane Zapka and Marilyn Edington from the University Health Services, each PSE person goes through one academic semester of pre-service training and one year of supervised inservice training and experience.

The roles and responsibilities of peer sex educators are varied. They are knowledgeable and can find the best available answers to your questions; they have supportive counseling skills; and are familiar with all competent resources for referral (e.g., contraception clinic, VD or pregnancy testing, problem pregnancy counseling, etc.). Pamphlets and articles are also generally available from PSE people.

This semester the Greek Area PSE Team is sponsoring a one-credit colloquium entitled "A Basic Exploration into Human Sexuality." The colloquium meets Monday nights at Lambda Delta Phi from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. There are still openings available for members of the Greek Area. Those interested should contact Cindy Waldron or Pam Lees.

The Team is also conducting informal discussion programs. Contact Judy Wescott if your sorority would like to have a discussion on Women's Health Concerns. This includes a discussion of the pelvic exam and breast self-exam.

Fraternity discussion programs can be arranged by contacting Mike Cappellano. Programs and films can also be jointly sponsored by two or more houses by contacting any Greek Team number.

The Greek PSE Team is made up of six members of the Greek Area: Mike Cappellano, Zeta Nu; Cindy Gorham, Sigma Kappa; Susan Keefe, Iota Gamma Upsilon; Pam Lees, Sigma Delta Tau; Cindy Waldron and Judy Wescott, both from Lambda Delta Phi. Information is also available from the Health Services Health Education Office (549-2671).

Boyden haven for hoopsters

By ART SESNOVICH
Sports Staff

Some people think that the Cage is the exciting place to watch basketball on campus. Visions of Skinner, Endicott, and Murphy run through the mind of the UMass student when that venerated cow-barn is mentioned. There is not one self-respecting Minuteman basketball fan who didn't scream his ass off at the cremation of Maine last year. Pity, though. These people have probably never been over to Boyden Gymnasium.

For those of you who have been languishing in a catatonic coma the past few years and don't know, Boyden gym is open every afternoon for free time. This gives all the frustrated jocks on campus a chance to play John Havlicek for an afternoon, entertain thoughts of skipping their senior year to turn pro, and still be over to the dining commons by 7:00. Think of the prospects! A scholar by morning, a pro athlete in the afternoon.

The players? There are as many different kinds as there are holes in the Houston Oiler's defense. The variety ranges from the 250 pound food science major who has to lose 50 pounds just to increase his chances for survival, to the Southwest resident who is trying to clear out enough hash from his lungs to start again the next weekend, to the pseudo-superstar whose chances at a procareer ended in junior high school, but refuses to believe it. They all sound quite different, but they're all down there for the same thing: basketball.

As the now fascinated reader can imagine, the games involving such diverse characters as these must be fairly interesting. Well, if your idea of interesting means seeing a guy 5'1 trying to block a layup by some 6'5 gorilla, or watching a grown faculty member cry after missing a two-footer, or observing two Boyden stars stepping on each other's heads diving for a loose ball, then it's certainly interesting. Not to say that the games are violent; heavens, no. Sometimes they simply tend to be "overaggressive".

What is it that brings the UMass student down to Boyden in throngs so large that sometimes you have to wait an hour just to even see a basket? Some come for the exercise; some simply want to avoid their last class and feel that they're doing something worthwhile instead. But most of them love the game they're playing. To these people, you're not down there just to play the game, though; you've come to prove to the people down there that you can play ball. Who can say that they have gone down there that you can play ball. take that 6'5" gorilla to the hoop and jam it over him a la Kareem Jabbar? Who hasn't tried to break the assist record for one hour of playing? As the much-overworked phrase goes, it's survival of the fittest; and there ain't none who's going to say he isn't the "fittest". You go down there and get eaten up, what do you do? Go back to the dorm and get stoned? Probably. But you also get psyched for the next trip down to Boyden, when that poor, picked-on 6'5" gorilla is going to be your lunch.

So if you're ever in the vicinity of one Frank L. Boyden Gymnasium, take a trip over to the b-ball courts and shoot a few. If you're not much better than a lame ostrich, don't worry; there are plenty of other lame ostriches at Boyden.

The Cage? Forget it. Boyden's got the real stars.

Notice

The fall lacrosse team plays a very important game vs. Brown this Sunday. Game time is 1:00 at the lower Boyden Field.

Cosell taken in LONDON, Ont. [AP] — Michael Banks, the University of Western Ontario student who this week said he conned sports broadcaster Howard Cossell into thinking he was Muhammad Ali, has a taped conversation of his performance and a telephone bill of his calls to support the claim.

Banks says he twice tried to call Cosell person to person at Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium during a Monday night game between the Steelers and Atlanta Falcons on Oct. 28 when Ali, a close friend of the television commentator's, was in Zaire, Africa, preparing for his world heavyweight boxing championship fight with George Foreman.

Both times Banks, 20, was told that Cosell was in the stadium press box and that no calls were to be put through.

The university student decided on his third attempt to dial the stadium directly, improving Ali's voice, and finally, after a number of dealys, was connected with a person he believes was Pittsburgh publicist Joe Gordon.

Busy telephone wires and a frustrated member of the American Broadcasting Co. crew handling the game are evident on the tape before Gordon is reached.

He bantered with Gordon for some time, during which the publicist said there was no way the caller could get through to Cosell, located with other members of the broadcast crew in a nearby booth. But Banks did.

Finicky Morris suspended in dispute over Knee treatment

MIAMI [UPI] — Coach Don Shula suspended star Miami Dolphins running back Eugene "Mercury" Morris Thursday in a dispute over Morris' knee injury.

Morris, who renegotiated his playing contract into the $100,000 bracket before the season, faces loss of pay and $200-a-day fines while absent from the squad.

Shula first announced the suspension was indefinite, but in a brief meeting with Morris later Thursday morning, told the speedy halfback he would reconsider his case Monday morning.

Morris injured a knee in an Aug. 30 exhibition game this season then aggravated the injury when he returned to the lineup briefly against San Diego Sept. 29. He hasn't played since.

The flareup between Shula and Morris came Wednesday morning when the Miami coach called Morris onto the carpet for failing to report to the team trainer Monday and Tuesday for supervised treatment. Shula had given uninjured members of the squad the two days off.

"We got into a pretty heated discussion and finally he stood up and said, 'If you have to do anything, suspend me,' then he walked out," Shula reported to newsmen.

Shula made his decision to suspend Morris late Wednesday night after discussing the situation further with Morris, the team captains and the coaching staff. Morris was notified by telegram.

Morris blamed the situation on communications problems.

"It all happened so fast I'm not even sure about it myself," Morris said Wednesday night. "I thought coach left it up to the individual. After the game (Sunday), he said those who needed treatment should get it and those who need rest should rest.

"I worked out Monday night (near his home) and I had the best workout I've had in a long time. I rested Tuesday thinking I would go in there Wednesday ready to play."

OSU, Michigan, 'Bama big college grid favorites

By United Press International

The last time a Woody Hayes-coached team lost, it was in East Lansing, Mich. two years ago, and at the time, Ohio State was no. 1.

Now Woody brings this no. 1 ranked Buckeye team back to East Lansing Saturday, where Michigan State will try to duplicate its inspired 19-12 victory of 1972, back when Archie Griffin was a callow freshman.

But chances for what would be the biggest upset of the Waning College football season seem slight. Griffin, a leading candidate for the Heisman trophy, has rushed for over 100 yeards in each of his last 19 games.

Two other Buckeyes were bench riders in the 1972 loss but they are far from that now. Quarterback Cornelius Greene runs the humming buckeye offense and Brian Baschnagel executes his pass patterns so well even Hayes is pleased.

Michigan State, with a mediocre 4-4-1 record, is the underdog by 23 points, charitable perhaps, since Ohio State has beaten five big ten foes by an average of 38 points.

MIchigan, on a collision course with state for their Nov. 23 meeting, is favored by 18 over Illinois, but is after a resounding victory to pull away from Alabama, which shared the no. 2 slot in the UPI ratings with Michigan.

'Bama puts it unbeaten slate on the line against Louisiana State and is the choice by 18. The Crimson tide, the defending UPI National Champion, is headed for a New Year's night meeting with fifth-ranked Notre Dame in the Orange Bowl.

In years gone by, the head-on clashes of Alabama and LSU have been classics in the South, but this is a down year for the Bayou boys, who have been unable to win two straight this season. Last week LSU whipped ole Miss, 24-0, while Bear Bryant's Club was pummelling Miusissippi State, 35-0.

On the Pacific Coast 11th ranked Southern California is a nine point pick over upstart Stanford as the Trojans seek a Rose Bowl berth.

Sunday Soothsaying

The names Larry McCutcheon, Ken Anderson, Drew Pearson, Tom Wittum, Mack Herron and Terry Metcalf represent the best individual performers after eight weeks of the 1974 football season. NFL statistics show McCutcheon pacing all rushers with 719 yards. O.J. Simpson has been a workhorse for Buffalo, carrying 165 times, highest among the leading running backs. The Patriots' Sam Cunningham and Chuck Foreman have scored seven touchdowns apiece to set the scoring pace among running backs.

Ken Anderson is the NFL's leading passer, having completed 127 out of 196 passes. The Cincinnati signal-caller has been averaging 9.02 yards per throw, while Oakland's Ken Stabler has tossed five touchdown passes.

Drew Pearson of Dallas has 42 receptions and 705 yards, good for the number one spot in pass receiving, but Cliff Branch has an average of 18.5 yards a catch, and has scored six touchdowns for the Raiders.

San Francisco's Wittum is the best punter in the NFL, averaging better than 43 yards a punt for the 49ers.

Herron leads all punt returners with a fine 20.3 yard average, while Metcalf has an amazing average of 36.3 yards in the kickoff return category.

Of far greater importance, however, is the fact that official statistics show my season's record is a respectable 67-27-1 and the following predictions should improve that figure.

UMASS 25; HOLY CROSS 20

Both teams have been suffering from injuries and the problems caused by a bleak season, but the Minutemen should be able to handle the 2-4-1 Crusaders.

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS 38; CLEVELAND BROWNS 23

The game may be closer if the Pats don't take the Browns seriously, but Cleveland's glory days are now only memories.

BUFFALO BILLS 27; HOUSTON OILERS 10

Lou Saban has the Bills flying, and lowly Oilers are not about to stop undervalued Joe Ferguson and teammates.

DALLAS COWBOYS 21; SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS 13

The Cowboys are definitely not out playoff contention yet, and not even Norm Snead can save 49ers. Dallas will continue to win and hope for a few more St. Louis losses.

KANSAS CITY CHIEFS 20; SAN DIEGO CHARGERS 17

Against the Giants last Sunday, Len Dawson had to relieve an ineffectual Mike Livingston, but Chiefs should be victorious. Dan Fouts, who passed for 333 yards last week, may help to keep the score close.

NEW YORK GIANTS 21; NEW YORK JETS 14

Craig Morton had the Giants rolling in Kansas City and even though things are bad for the Giants, they're even worse for the Jets.

WASHINGTON REDSKINS 17; PHILADELPHIA EAGLES 7

It makes little difference who is at the helm for Washington — Kilmer or Jurgensen — because Redskins will have an easy time beating the sliding Eagles.

DENVER BRONCOS 35; BALTIMORE COLTS 28

The Broncos should win this equestrian match-up.

GREEN BAY PACKERS 19; CHICAGO BEARS 16

John Hadl should be ready for the Packers and will make the difference in this contest.

MIAMI DOLPHINS 24; NEW ORLEANS SAINTS 14

I don't think an explanation is necessary. It's obvious that the Dolphins will rule.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS 28; CINCINNATI BENGALS 27

Pittsburgh is starting to play up to its potential, and the Bengals will watch their AFC Central Division title hopes dim.

LOS ANGELES RAMS 28; ATLANTA FALCONS 7

Not even new head coach Marion Campbell will be able to help the Falcons win in Los Angeles.

OAKLAND RAIDERS 34; DETROIT LIONS 24

Consistent Raiders will snap Detroit's four game winning streak with relative ease.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS 23; MINNESOTA VIKINGS 21

The Cardinals have used the big play to win seven out of eight games, and their explosive ability should be enough to edge Minnesota.

Hurting Minutemen face HC

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

When Humpty Dumpty fell on the ground, "all the king's men couldn't put him back together again." Now the UMass football Minutemen are in the position where they must put themselves back together again as they head into tomorrow's clash with the Holy Cross Crusaders in Worcester, (WMUA, 1:30).

After optimists had visions of Boardwalk Bowl, the Minutemen must be realists and play each game as it comes. With three tough clashes remaining against Holy Cross, New Hampshire, and Boston College, they'll be hard-pressed to finish at .500 or better in 1975, after consecutive losses to UConn and Colgate leveled their record at 4-4.

The Minutemen are hurting, make no mistake about it. Jim Torrance, the hard-driving fullback who gained almost 300 yards against URI and UConn, without losing the ball to that fatal disease of fumbleitis which has plagued UMass this year, is questionable after suffering a pinched nerve in the 42-34 loss to Colgate. Joining him in the questionable department are offensive guard Ned Deane (injured ribs), plus linebackers Dennis Keirnan, John Penny, and John Toner, all suffering from asserted bumps and bruises.

The Crusaders are not enjoying the kind of season that would made the Pope happy. They've beaten two Ivy teams, Brown 45-10, and Dartmouth 14-3, but neither of them are Ivy powers this year. Otherwise the Crusaders' year has been disappointing with losses to Harvard 24-14, Colgate 21-16, Army 18-13, a 56-0 annihilation at the hands of Temple, and a 14-14 standoff with Boston University last Friday night which John Provost saved with an interception in the final moments.

So far the Crusaders' problems can be summed up in one word: offense. Or in HC's case, the lack of one. They've averaged a paltry 16 points a game, but that average is misleading. When you consider that 38 of the points scored against Brown came as a result of interceptions or punt returns, Holy Cross' offensive problems are even more acute. UMass on the other hand has averaged 20.5 points a game, but take away half of their 30 last turnovers and that total could be considerably higher.

The strength of Holy Cross is their team defense. They're anchored on the line by middle guard Lou Kobza, a 6'1", 230 pound junior, while in the secondary they're led by senior safety John Provost. Provost, a pre-season All-American, leads the nation in pass interceptions and is a terror on punt returns. He personally killed Brown with four interceptions, and two touchdowns on punt returns.

UMass will have a revitalized Mark Tripucka starting at quarterback tomorrow. Tripucka had his best game of the year against Colgate completing 7 out of 14 passes for 90 yards and a touchdown against the Red Raiders.

The Minutemen have rushed for 2025 net yards in their first eight games and if they rush for more than 137 yards against Holy Cross they'll eclipse the all-time UMass season rushing record of 2162 yards set in 1969. (9 games).

Although Holy Cross is not enjoying a good year, UMass Coach Dick MacPherson is well aware that Holy Cross will be tough, very tough.

UMass fullback Keith Lang seems to be having trouble as he attempts to block Colgate defensive end Dave Sinapi in last week's contest. The Minutemen took it on the chin from the Red Raiders, 42-34, but hope to rebound this week against the Crusaders of Holy Cross.

B's breeze, 10-4; Orr nets hat trick

BOSTON [UPI] - Defenseman Bobby Orr scored a hat-trick and had three assists Thursday night as the Boston Bruins routed the expansion Washington Capitals 10-4.

Orr opened the scoring at 3:51 of the first period on a hard slap shot from the blue line, and assisted on goals in the first period by Don Marcotte at 14:45 and John Bucyk at 18:12.

Other scores for the Bruins were Andre Savard at 7:27 of the first period, Dave Forbes at 2:26 of the second, Wayne Cashman at 10:20 of the second and Greg Sheppard at 17:42 of the third stanza.

Tourney bid on line as booters meet UNH

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

The UMass soccer team closes its regular season by taking on the University of New Hampshire tomorrow in what amounts to a must win for the Minutemen in order to stay in contention for a New England NCAA Division I tournament bid.

"We're still in contention," Coach Al Rufe said. "If we beat UNH then we should make it."

The Minutemen were helped out immensely by Tufts who on Wednesday defeated Harvard, another team in consideration for one of the four Division I bids.

As it stands now, UMass is ranked number 9 in New England. The top four teams in Division I will be picked for the tournament. UConn, who is ranked number 3 in the nation and number 1 in New England, along with Brown, who is ranked number 8 in the nation and number 2 in New England are shoo-ins for two of the tournament bids. The other two are up for grabs according to Rufe.

Springfield, who is ranked third in New England and is also ranked in the nation's top twenty, will enter the Division II tournament, as will fifth-ranked Keene State, sixth-ranked Babson and number 7 WPI, Rufe said.

That leaves UMass, Harvard and Bridgeport in contention for the last two Division I tournament spots.

Bridgeport has to play Springfield and if Springfield can defeat them, then UMass' chances will improve. Also, Harvard's loss to Tufts puts the Minutemen in a promising position.

"If we beat UNH, that win combined with our 2-2 tie with Springfield, should bring us up in the ratings to about five or six, hopefully five," Rufe said. "Then I think we'll be picked."

If the Minutemen do get picked for the tournament, it will be the first time that a UMass soccer team has ever played in a post-season tourney.

"We've probably had the roughest schedule of any UMass soccer team in history," Rufe said.

The booters have played UConn (who has a record of 13-0-1), Tufts (8-3), Westfield State (9-3-2), Keene State (11-1-2), Springfield (9-2-3) and WPI (11-2-1), to highlight their tough schedule.

UNH will be spear-headed by Bob Black, who as a frosh last year was one of the top scorers in New England, and by Mendi Nassar, who has 6 goals this year.

Ken Banda and Dean Lungu are listed by Rufe as "very doubtful" for tomorrow's game. Both are still recovering from injuries.

QUICK SHOTS: UNH has a record of 3-3-2. The tournament selection committee will meet Sunday to pick the four teams for the tourney. UMass has a record of 7-3-1, while Harvard is 6-3-1 and Bridgeport is 6-4-3.

Israeli austerity triggers demonstrations

JERUSALEM [UPI] - Israel imposed the severest austerity measures in its history yesterday to head off economic catastrophe, combining a 43 per cent devaluation of the pound with price increases that boosted the cost of living 17 per cent overnight.

Police in a slum neighborhood of Tel Aviv said they arrested 13 persons demonstrating against the price hikes by smashing windows, overturning buses and throwing rocks at helmeted patrolmen. No serious injuries were reported.

The drastic measures to curb consumption by raising basic consumer prices were designed to save money needed for vital defense expenditures and raw materials.

"This is the most severe economic program in the history of the state." Ben-Ami Zuckerman, deputy director of state revenue in the finance ministry, told newsmen.

It thus cost an Israeli 65 per cent more to live than it did little more than a year ago. Government economists estimated it will cost an average family of four earning $350 a month an additional $83.

Moshe Mandelbaum, director-general of the commerce and industry ministry, said the price increases forced the cost of living up 17 per cent in one jump.

Gasoline prices are now the highest in the world with high test going for $2.66 a gallon.

The new prices on basic items, including a 200 per cent jump for 2.2 pounds of sugar because of a withdrawal of a government subsidy, exceeded by wide margins the percentage of the devaluation that dropped the pound from 4.20 to 6 to the dollar.

The government banned imports for six months on 29 luxury items that ranged from automobiles and washing machines to beer and chewing gum. It hoped to keep $700 million in the country because of the restriction.

Finance Minister Yehoshua Rabinowitz in a radio address said the nation no longer could afford defense spending with the same level of consumption.

"We must not make the mistake of deluding ourselves that we shall be able to keep up the scale of services of days of peace and plenty when the economic reality is one of war and shortages," he said.

Some supermarkets closed to avoid chaos yesterday. Those that stayed open were besieged by housewives loading carts with stock bought at the old prices.

The price increases on some items ranked as the highest ever, including 64 per cent for high test gasoline, 79 per cent for kerosene, 100 per cent for heating oil, 112 per cent for margarine, 52 per cent for eggs, 60 per cent for milk, 136 per cent for cooking oil, and 72 per cent for white bread.

"We have wars and we have no money," said Mrs. Dina Cohen, 50 of Jerusalem. "My brother had five children and has been trying to improve himself, and now with this I just don't know."

It marked the sixth devaluation of the pound since the first Arab-Israeli war in 1948. The previous devaluation occurred in August, 1971, when the pound dropped from 3.50 to 4.20 in response to the floating of the dollar.

Town meeting tonight

Students exert power

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

The SGA town meeting will take place tonight at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. It is the first meeting of its kind ever to take place at this University.

"If students show up for the SGA town meeting, it will be a mandate for them to control their own rights. If students do not show up, it will be a mandate for the University Administration to control students' rights," Rick Savini, president of the SGA said about the first SGA town meeting to be held tonight.

"The Student Government Association includes every student; and any student who goes to the meeting has a vote," Savini continued.

Students will be voting on seven specific demands that encompass residential life, the Campus Center, and the Board of Governers. "These demands are specific things that we expect the University to do and-or start to put into effect immediately," Cindy McGrath, Speaker of the Senate said.

"We're trying to find out whether students care about things directly," McGrath continued. She also said if students complain about the dining commons but aren't willing to do anything about it, then the complaints are empty and show students don't care. "But if students care about where they live, eat and how much they pay for things or how much control they have over issues that are primary responsibilities of students, then they should definitely attend."

A warrant for the SGA town meeting lists specific demands. The executive committee of the Student Senate, the Student Organizing committee and residents of Hamlin House have worked during the past two weeks in drafting the warrant containing the demands. These demands will be voted separately and will be directly sent to Chancellor Bromery.

1) the institution of a student Residential Life Governing Board, with administrative staff answering to the Board; an end to mandatory dorm residence and meal tickets by September 1975; an end to University opposition to rent control in the town of Amherst and surrounding area.

2) the Office of Residential Life to incorporate the creation of additional student-run dormitories; that the dormitories be given authority to appropriate funds obtained by housing fees in whatever manner they seem to be appropriate, with the requirement of supporting mandatory maintenance, mortgage and debt-free service fees; the right of student-run dormitories to review the budgets of said dormitories.

3) action on complaints made by residents of Hamlin House which include: campuswide priority in room assignments for Spring, 1975; that the Office of Residential Life provide rent subsidies for those Hamlin Residents who are forced to move to a higher rent dormitory; and the adoption of a systems approach to this problem.

4) the Residential Life Committee to determine policy guidelines and enforcement procedures for a Student Code of Conduct be abolished and that any further encroachment on student's power be stopped immediately.

5) the Campus Center Board of Governors to have complete authority in determining policy and practices of the Campus Center and Campus Center Staff including the authority to hire and-or fire all principal administrative officers within this staff.

6) the Health Services fee be established as optional for all registered commuting students by September, 1975.

7) establishment of complete financial autonomy restricted only be the Massachusetts laws as interpreted by a court of law.

These demands differ from the six demands for student autonomy passed by the SGA governance convention, October 23. "The previous demands, McGrath said, "were general statements of kinds of things that students are expecting out of the University."

The demands for student autonomy were sent back by the Board of Trustees because they did not go through the appropriate channels.

Student legal office contract under review by Pres. Wood

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

The lawyer who represents the UMass system said Friday that a contract setting up the student Legal Services Office (LSO) on the Amherst campus is now being considered by University President Robert C. Wood.

"It's under consideration by the President," University legal counsel William Searson said by phone from his Boston office Friday. "I have not had any discussion yet with the President."

Searson said he expects that Wood will ask him to review the legal implications of any contract for an LSO office when Wood decides what the University's position should be.

"I believe he may have discussed it already with the Chancellor (Amherst campus head Randolph Bromery), and he may have made a decision already," Searson said of Wood.

The University administration is understood to be considering carefully the employment of two attorneys for students because it believes their employment, in their interpretation of law, could violate the statute which set-up UMass.

The two LSO attorneys would be working for the Student Government Assn., according to the proposal now on Wood's desk. But their pay would actually come out of Whitmore administration building.

The conduct being considered calls for the two attorney's to be paid from a state expense account, number "02", which is for non-permanent salaried employees.

Searson said he has not specifically worked on the contract for the two lawyers yet. "I have seen the proposed contracts, and that's pretty much it," he said.

UMass budget revealed here

Friday the UMass fiscal 1976 budget requests were unveiled at a public hearing in the Campus Center.

Three stories on page six report what happened at that hearing. A fourth describes a series of four stories The Collegian will print over the next week detailing the budget and its implications for this campus.

A fifth sketches the basic details of the fiscal 1976 requested budget. For details, turn to page 6.

Ed marathon begins today

The semi-annual School of Education "marathon" begins this morning and will continue through Friday.

Twice a year the School schedules hundreds of one-hour mini-courses and seminars in fields related to education. "Presenters" -- lecturers -- from the state, nation and UMass itself will talk about photography, economics, improving teaching, art and educational change. All kinds in educational innovations and alternatives are topics.

Anyone can attend a mini-course. Most are being held in Hills House in the Central Area, or at the School of Education itself. Those who attend 20 hours of mini-courses this week may receive one University credit towards graduation through the School just by signing an attendance sheet.

For up to date course listings, times and meeting places, go to the Marathon office at the School of Education Building, pick-up a schedule at Hills House, or call the Marathon office at 545-1585.

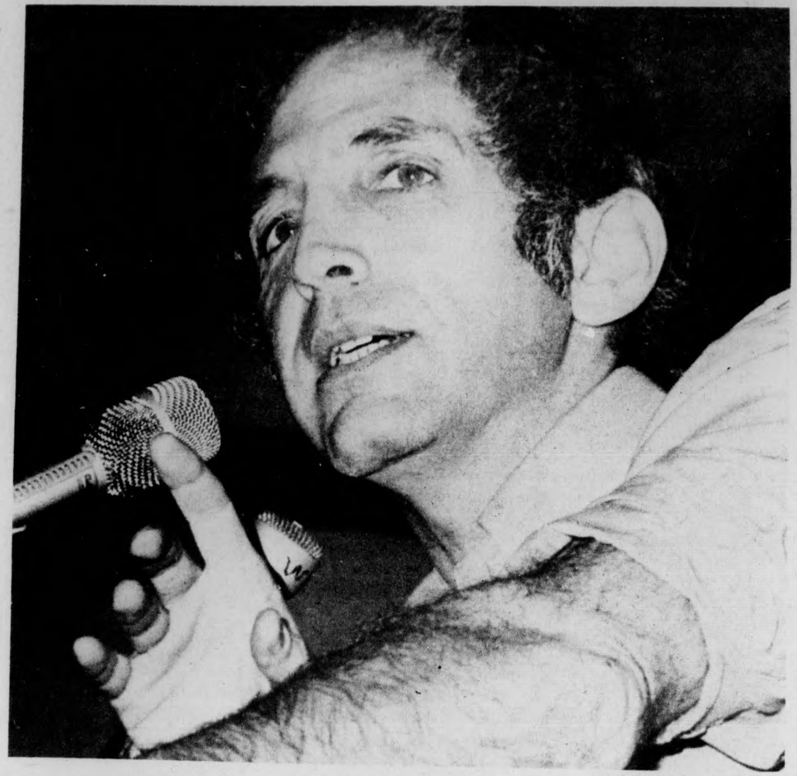
Ellsberg cites election mandate

By LARRY CARPMAN



Staff Photo/Joe Martins

Daniel Ellsberg

Daniel Ellsberg said Friday the recent elections are "a mandate against people who lie."

Ellsberg, responsible for releasing the Pentagon Papers in July 1971 and later acquitted because of "governmental misconduct" spoke before a crowd of 1100 persons in the Student Union Ballroom.

During a press conference before the speech Ellsberg spoke in detail about the election. "The public is now demanding more information from their congressmen; and this is healthy for a democracy. Watergate lowered the public's tolerance for lying," he said.

Meanwhile, during a description of the power of giant conglomerates and how their investments dictate the quality of our economy, Ellsberg said: "You (UMass) have the most distinguished collection of economists here. I hope you benefit by their presence."

Ellsberg, at times emotional, also spoke about the continuing war in Indochina.

"The price has never gotten too high for us in Southeast Asia and it isn't now," he said.

Ellsberg continued: "the illegal acts of the Nixon Administration to cover up the war is what brought the Nixon Administration down."

At about the middle of his 75 minute speech Ellsberg posed two questions to his audience.

"How many of you participated in the anti-war demonstration in 1969?" he asked.

As hundreds of people raised their hands Ellsberg asked again: "How many of you think those demonstratiocs did any good?" Very few people responded.

"Well, the anti-war movement saved hundreds of thousands of lives," said Ellsberg, waving his right hand in the air.

He then described an administration plan to "blow up" North Viet Nam on November 3, 1969. The plan was abandoned, according to Ellsberg, because of administration fears concerning the reaction of demonstrators at the upcoming march in Washington.

Ellsberg's entire speech was interspersed with various anecdotes and jokes about Nelson Rockefeller.

Speaking about the current energy problem Ellsberg said: Rocky (Rockefeller) accepts it as our energy crisis — he's in there with us."

Meanwhile, Ellsberg compared the Pentagon Papers with the White House Watergate tapes.

"In both cases, the Pentagon Papers and the tapes, what you saw were people conspiring and people planning lies," Ellsberg said.

Ellsberg closed his speech saying, "the chance of ending this war right now is better than it was before. Watergate and the economy has made foreign aid to Viet Nam more vulnerable in Congress."

Just before receiving a standing ovation from the over capacity crowd Ellsberg said: "A lot of studying lies before us."

N.E. Board recommends vet school

Creation of a regional New England veterinary college has been strongly recommended by the New England Board of Higher Education for affirmative action by the six states in 1975.

Draft legislation detailing a plan for the school has been submitted to each New England state, according to an article published in the Boston Globe yesterday.

The recommendation is to be presented in December to the regional Governors Conference, which called for the original proposal. There is no veterinary school in New England now.

Thus, approximately one-half of the students would be from Massachusetts, which would share 50 per cent of the unspecified cost.

Under the board's plan, the proposed college would function as a separate entity with an independent governing board of trustees appointed equally by each participating state. Both enrollment and costs would be apportioned according to the state's populations.

The Massachusetts Legislature has appropriated land for the veterinary college on the site of the former state mental hospital in Grafton. Support from at least three other states has been requested. Other suggested locations are at the UMass Worcester Medical School and the University of Connecticut.

Citing statistics on the paucity of available veterinary education, the New England Board of Higher Education's executive director, Dr. Alan Ferguson, termed the country's incapacity in the field "terrible."

Computer offers exams in math and English

Learning packages in college freshmen-level math and english will be offered this week on computer terminals as part of the School of Ed Marathon.

A computer located in the Graduate Research Center has been programmed to give math and english tests to students, and to ask and answer questions about the subjects.

Any computer centers such as on the 7th floor of the main Library, the School of Education, and the Southwest Computer Center will have access to these packages.

To take a sample test, these instructions must be followed:

1) Find a trendata selectric, and switch it on.
2) Switch the adjacent coupler on, and set it to full duplex.
3) Dial 5-1611, and insert the phone in the coupler.
4) Type L, then kick carriage return (CR).
5) Type S3184 for number, then CR.
6) Type LAIM for code then CR.
7) Type APL CLEP, then CR.
8) Type GO, then CR.
9) Follow instructions of computer.

Town sanitary landfill manager specializes in breaking bottles

By LARRY CARPMAN

Breaking 6000 pounds of bottles a week is ordinary work for Harvey A. Langvin. There is even a special technique to it.

Langvin is the manager of Amherst's Sanitary Landfill; more commonly referred to as the "town dump." His day begins at 7:30 a.m. when he opens the silver chain link gate enclosing the landfill area. After picking up stray papers and sweeping the area Langvin begins his task of breaking all the bottles brought to the 30 acre dump for recycling.

The bottles are separated into three bins: one for brown-colored bottles and one each for white and green-colored bottles.

"Brown bottles are your beer bottles mostly," Langvin said. "While the green are soda and the white for coffee and other things."

Langvin has worked at the landfill site for two years. During that time he has seen and broken hundreds of tons of bottles of all kinds.

"I see Michelob bottles the most," he said. "Also I was surprised; there are a lot of small green champagne bottles."

While he does his job Langvin is protected from serious injury by using a combination of technique and equipment to ensure his safety.

"I wear heavy gloves with aluminum lining plus plastic goggles for my eyes," he said.

"Also," he continued, "there's a special way to break the bottle. I never stand directly over the bottle, always at an angle," he said demonstrating the technique.

The winter season brings with it special problems for Langvin.

"When you get a cold bottle it's just like an atomic bomb — that's no lie," Langvin said motioning with his hands. "In winter time bottles shatter," he said.

Naturally the snow makes Langvin's outdoor job more difficult.

"I always have to clear the snow from the bins so the people have room to put the bottles," he said.

During an average day about 300 cars will pass through the dump and Langvin knows just about everyone.

As a small pick-up truck rumbled over the gravel Langvin waved hello. Just as quickly as the truck passed an old car badly in need of a tune-up followed through. Langvin waved and smiled — he obviously knew the driver.

"I know everybody by heart; that's part of my job," said Langvin. "There's a bunch of good people in Amherst," he said with a wide smile.

"The most important thing is coolness," Langvin said referring to his day-to-day contact with the public.

"Taxpayers come first," he said.

Langvin's busiest time is when the colleges in the area close until summer sessions begin.

"The students are nice, but they have a habit of collecting bottles," he said. When UMass ends its second semester several large trucks will deliver enough bottles to the dump to keep Langvin busy eight hours a day for about one week — just breaking bottles.

There are certain things that can make Langvin's job more difficult. "There are things that can go wrong" as he puts it.

"When people disobey the rules here — that's the only thing that goes wrong," said Langvin pointing to a sign that read: "Please Do Not Put Bottles In Barrel."

Tons of bottles have suffered the fate about to fall this one at the hands of the town dumps top bottle smasher.

The Landfill regulates the size of scrap wood (four feet in length and four inches in diameter are the limits) and requests that persons using the bottle recycling facility remove the metal rings from the bottle necks.

Watching Langvin you can tell he enjoys his job.

"I like to work with people — always did," Langvin said waving his left hand at an incoming taxpayer.

Political science department stable

Student political mood has not increased enrollment

By DAN LaBONTE
Staff Correspondent

While Watergate and related political scandals have stimulated influx into the political science department, students' political attitudes have been changed, according to Professor Jerome Mileur of the Political Science Department.

In a recent interview, he said the number of students majoring in political science "has not increased radically" over the past few years. It remains "fairly stable" at around 550.

"But student attitudes concerning government and government officials has changed", he said.

Mileur noted that, until the late Sixties, students were more interested in the theoretical framework of the government. According to Mileur, students are now more concerned with the practical "nuts and bolts" aspect of government, and are making more of an effort to understand the legal entanglements of such operations as impeachment.

The questionable ethics of political officials has led students to be more critical of leaders as a whole. "This general distrust can be seen right here on the University level," he said.

To accommodate the changes in student interest, recent changes in the political science department have been initiated. The Poli Sci Dept. is offering five new courses for the spring semester that allow students, from any major, to concentrate on their specific areas of interest.

Included are: Participation in Public Policy, Undercover Politics, Politics and Everyday Life, The Idea of Community, Politics and the Quality of Life and Political Misbehavior.

Mileur cited Outreach as a program to help students complement their academic studies via internships with government offices. The program is being expanded to allow students to work not only in Washington, but in Boston, Northampton and possibly Springfield, according to Mileur.

"In the future we hope to offer internships anywhere there is a sufficiently professionalized government," Mileur said.

UMass jazz workshop presentations becoming institution on campus

By JACK CAHILL
Below the Salt Staff

The University Music Department's Jazz Workshop presentations are rapidly becoming an institution on campus. Last Thursday's Duke Ellington memorial concert was much anticipated and the collective contributions by the many musicians involved made the evening deeply fulfilling.

The capacity crowd filled Bowker auditorium, the scene of Ellington's memorable concert a year ago, to hear first, the department's number two band swing through such Ellington classics as "Satin Doll', "Mood Indigo," and "Don't Get Around Much Any More."

One could feel throughout that much of the audience's professed ignorance of Duke's music extended only as far as titles. The welcome shock of recognition was apparent as listeners squirmed in rhythm in their seats. The biting version of Mercer Ellington's "Miss Boss" let the nine man trumpet section work out and good soles were offered throughout the program by pianist Mark Hastings and tenor saxist Andy Baer.

The small ensemble that took the stage after the big band provided new musical colors and much variety, using intriguing combinations of horns to prove the timelessness and adaptability of Ellington's music.

Teaching assistant-saxophonist Sulieman Hakim directed and stepped out for a duo with Peter Schott's piano on the ballad "Solitude." Hakim stated the mournful melody on soprano sax with deep feeling and faultless tone, then proceeded to weave a multi-noted, unutterably beautiful solo with a stark, intense fervor. He just blew the shit out of his horn. He so enraptured the audience that we leaped into wild, uncontrollable applause in the middle of his improvisation. Hakim continued, blowing gushing torrents of melody over us, then floated to a perfect ending.

Needless to say, the applause was deafening from people amazed at how much music they had just heard. Peter Schott followed with a moving solo rendition of "Prelude to a Kiss," again well received. "It Don't Mean a Thing if It Ain't Got That Swing" was played ironically by the full ensemble in a droning Eastern mode until it pivoted on the plunger-muted trombones and leaped off into an up-tempo, high energy road race.

Hakim, tenorist Frank Peterson and other unidentified soloists blew fluently and hotly, climaxing in a dexterously inventive conga - drums workout by Thomas Briggs and Robert Gage.

Big band One took the stage for the final segment and shone brightly as a result of their musical tightness and imaginative arrangements by Jake Epstein and conductor-director Fred Tillis. They breathed life into the old standby "Perdido" and handled "Sophisticated Lady" gently, this featuring vibes and Joe Cifarelli's somberly smooth guitar. Altoist Jake Epstein and trumpeter John Walker added their ever-welcome contributions on "A Train" and "IN a Mellotone."

Finally, guest soloist Professor Archie Shepp appeared on stage, squeezing past the packed-in Voices of New Africa choir, approaching the front mike with tenor in hand amid much applause. The band and chorus set the background for "In a Sentimental Mood," leaving Shepp to put his lips to his tenor and state the meolody and, ah, there it is...the huge, gruff tone, the notes flowing uninterrupted from heart through horn, old style and new style surrendering to the forever style of Duke the father. Coleman Hawkins plus Ben Webster plus Paul Gonsalves equals Archie Shepp, one heir to the jazz legacy. Voices croon the lyrics then Archie all over his horn in a fantastic cadenza, halts, plays a nutty tag, laughs and the audience erupts.

Fred Tillis' "Navarac", a crazily interesting reworking of "Caravan" follows with the band even tighter than before and ends the program. Hear some of these music men; it is strongly advised.

Final contract due soon

Negotiations continue as miners walk out

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Hope dimmed yesterday that negotiators for coal operators and the United Mine Workers could iron out differences on key money issues and two other "knotty problems" before 120,000 soft coal miners in 25 states went on strike at midnight today.

The mines were already in effect shut down. Yesterday was a normal day off and most of the miners were to celebrate Veterans Day Monday, meaning they would get triple pay if they work. A coal spokesman said few if any mines would open on the holiday.

In the coal fields, miners stocked up on food and some — remembering how their strike in 1971 dragged on into the Christmas season with no pay coming in — bought toys early to make sure their children would get a visit from Santa Claus this time.

As contract talks got under way yesterday morning, a top industry representative expressed hope it might be the next-to-last day of negotiations. But late in the day, officials close to the talks said chances of agreement on a new pact before tomorrow appeared slim.

Any agreement would come too late to head off a coal strike. UMW contract ratification procedures are expected to take up to 10 days, and the union has a "no contract, no work" tradition.

The longer the talks drag on without agreement, however, the more likely are the chances that a — nationwide strike could have disastrous effects on at least part of the United States. The miners involved in the contract talks dig out 70 percent of the nation's soft coal.

Although there already have been strikes at a few mines, which local officials blamed on the lack of progress in Washington, spokesmen for both sides in the national negotiations said the number of miners who walked out early was neglibible and blamed the early walkouts on local disputes.

Sources said key unresolved national issues included wages, streamlined grievance procedures to head off wildcat strikes and safety rules that would allow a miner to walk off the job if he feared for his life without worrying about being fired.

Three Arab States reduce oil price, but raise company taxes

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates [UPI] — Saudi Arabia, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates yesterday split with three other Persian gulf oil states and decided to lower the posted price of crude oil while increasing taxes on major international oil companies.

The decision was not expected to change oil and gasoline prices for American consumers immediately. But if the tax increase is greater than the price cut it could mean higher prices as the affected oil companies pass the increased costs to the consumer.

No details of the new price structure or tax scale were released.

The three countries opposing the move, Iran, Iraq and Kuwait, left any decision to the Organizations of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which was scheduled to meet in Vienna Dec. 12, an official communique said.

The communique was issued at the end of a two-day meeting of the six Persian Gulf states. In it, the six states agreed to disagree.

The United Arab Emirates, formed three years ago, comprise the sheikhdoms of Abu Ihabi, Dubai, Sharjah, Umm Al Quwain, Ajman, Rujairah and Ras Al Kaimah.

The communique did not spell out the Saudi-Qatari-UAF plan, but oil sources said it provided for lowering the posted price of crude and increasing taxes and royalties paid by foreign companies.

The sources said the posted price reduction would make crude cheaper for the independent oil importing countries, like those in Europe, but not for the major international companies directly involved in oil production, most of which are based in the United States.

Oil sources said any loss of profits by the oil companies could be overcome by increased prices to the consumer.

The three states which agreed to the Saudi plan made it retroactive to Nov. 1 and effective through next July, the communique said.

World Food Conference shows progress, but funding inadequate

ROME [AP] — Some progress is emerging after a week's talk at the World Food Conference, but so far the money to back it up is not flowing in.

The delegates already have sewn together the basic threads of an international grain bank plan to serve the world as a buffer against bad weather and natural disasters.

Most countries have announced readiness to join a food information system, a sort of alarm system proposed by the Japanese to alert countries to changing crop and stock conditions so they could make required adjustments.

Almost without exception, the delegations have paid at least lip service to the conference's main objective — to increase food production in developing countries to make them eventually self-sufficient.

However, what conference planners sought and have not received so far are commitments in dollars to finance the kind of programs to put agriculture on its feet in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Experts want to step up the annual growth rate of food production on those continents from 2.6 to 3.6 percent in the next 12 years and to do this they estimate the wealthy nations must be pumping in some $5 billion a year by 1985.

The source of that hoped-for financial flow was supposed to be the United States and the oil producing nations, although U.S. spokesman reject criticism that America is not doing its share.

U.S. agrees to sell more grain to Egypt

CAIRO [UPI] — Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz signed a $36.5 million agreement with the Egyptian government yesterday under which the United States will ship Egypt 200,000 tons of wheat or wheat flour during the coming year in addition to 100,000 tons of grain already pledged.

"In the years ahead, food productive capacity must be built up in the developing nations," Butz told newsmen at the ceremony. "This is the real opportunity to increase the productive capacity of the world, and I think this is where we're going to have to address increasing attention."

He said, "We have only a limited supply of aid. The world has only a limited supply of aid. We have a limited supply of foodstuffs right now. I think all of us must be very careful to be sure every ton reaches the area of real need."

Butz told Egyptian Foreign Trade Minister Fathi Ahmed Matbuli, who signed the agreement for Egypt, that the United States wanted to "extend short supplies of wheat in the critical world needs between now and next June and July when ample supplies again become available.

Rolling 201: HOW TO ROLL BETTER
Required Textbooklet: e-z wider
Prof. E. Z. Jay

1. Fold the paper (approx. ¾") at the end that isn't gummed. Sprinkle tobacco into this fold. Put more at the ends than in the middle Close the paper over the tobacco. But don't tuck it in back of the tobacco just yet.

2. Hold both halves of the paper, cradling the tobacco inside with your thumbs closest to you and your second and third fingers in back.

3. Spin the tobacco by sliding the paper back and forth a number of times.

4. When the tobacco is shaped and packed, pinch the tobacco and the paper at the center so that when you start to roll, the paper will guide itself around the tobacco.

5. Roll the cigarette tightly, beginning at the center: and by pulling, work your fingers out to the ends.

6. Lick the gummed edge closed. Trim loose tobacco from the ends. The cigarette is now ready to smoke.

This course is open to both beginning and advanced students of hand-rolled cigarettes. Emphasis is on easier, better rolling via the use of E-Z Wider double-width rolling papers. The course exposes the disadvantages of conventional rolling practices such as sticking two regular papers together to roll one smoke. Students will learn that there is no better gummed paper made than E-Z Wider.

Sargent leaves state changed in many ways

By RICHARD GAINES

BOSTON [UPI] — The day Frank Sargent became the governor of Massachusetts the Dow Jones lost 1.5 points to 929.82. The state's unemployment rate was 3.9 per cent and man's first landing on the moon was five months away.

That was long, long ago. How long: Well, Sirhan Sirhan and Clay Shaw were on trial for the assassinations of two Kennedys; Cmdr. Lloyd Bucher was explaining to a Naval court of inquiry what happened to the Pueblo; ground chuck was selling at 75 cents a pound and bread at 25 cents a loaf on special.

The movie "The Boston Strangler" was on an exclusive engagement and Albert DeSalvo, it was discovered, had normal chromosomes afterall.

College campuses were in foment and, of course, the Vietnam War was raging, with the light at the end of the long, dark tunnel nowhere in sight.

Richard Nixon had just been inaugurated President and Gov. John A. Volpe was confirmed as his Cabinet secretary of transportation, elevating a 54 year old former charter boat skipper and state public works commissioner to the top of the state government.

The date was Jan. 22, 1969. In his first major address to the legislature, Lt. Gov. (acting Gov.) Sargent sought to complete his break with the past, saying, "Massachusetts begins anew today. A new governor charts a new course."

He got right down to business. "I don't want to talk taxes on the first day I go into office," said Sargent, "but that's what must be done." He immediately proposed a state income tax surcharge to raise an additional $143 million.

So began "the Sargent era" which has already lasted longer without a break than the term of any Massachusetts governor since Levi Lincoln served from 1825-34.

When he leaves office New Year's day, giving way to Democrat Michael S. Dukakis, Sargent will leave Massachusetts fundamentally changed, perhaps irreversibly.

A lock-them-up-and-forget-them prison syndrome has been broken. Turning a chronic problem into a crisis, then surviving it, the Sargent administration has taken the state far down the road toward effective rehabilitative prison reform. Inmates including murderers serving life sentences now are released periodically on furloughs.

The old youth detention facilities-jail like compounds for budding young convicts in training-have also been closed. The delinquents who in the past were sent away now take up quarters in small, community based facilities, manned by psychologists as well as guards.

The thrust, from institutions back to the community, also got underway for mental patients. The old days, at least where the society's outcasts are concerned, appear gone forever.

The Sargent years also have provided a bridge between the old days when highways were the answer for all demands for increased mobility and the future when non-automotive means are likely to be utilized.

The term Sargent used was "balanced transportation," but what he meant was that the highway days were over. Plans for a Southwest Corridor and all other new highways within Rte. 128 were scrapped, save for the completion of a three mile stretch of Interstate 93, which, as fate would have it, became an absolute necessity when an overloaded truck crashed into a support girder, closing the Mystic Tobin Bridge.

The past six years were further marked by the start of slow but determined effort to overhaul the state governmental structure and a close to two thirds turnover in the makeup of an aging judiciary.

Beyond the programs and policies, Sargent was a leader and reflector of the state's strongly anti-war, anti-Nixon sentiment, signing a Democratic bill declaring the war illegal and lowering the American Flag in front of the State House during a massive protest demonstration, and pushing always to protect the rights of privacy against federal incursions.

Venezuela hits U.S. for Cuba neutrality

QUITO, Ecuador [UPI] — Venezuela attacked the United States yesterday for showing disinterest in ending sanctions on Cuba and criticized Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger for failing to appear at the Quito conference.

Venezuelan Foreign Minister Efrain Schacht Aristiguieta said his country wants "to reach out its friendly, sincere and brotherly hand to the Cuban people, because Venezuelans are not people looking for vengeance."

Schacht said Kissinger showed a "deplorable lack of interest" by failing to appear at the special Organization of American States conference called specifically to review the boycott on Cuba.

Latin American diplomats have commented in private they regarded Kissinger's conspicuous absence as a snub, but Schacht was the first to say so publicly.

Venezuela is one of the 13 nations favoring ending the 10-year-old economic and political boycott of the Fidel Castro regime.

One more vote is necessary to get the two-thirds majority necessary to end the sanctions, but the United States and four other countries have not stated their positions and three countries want the sanctions to continue.

Schacht said Venezuela was "unhappy" at the failure of the United States to take a stand.

He said nations of Latin America are "unpleasantly surprised over the absence of the secretary of state of the strongest and most developed nations of this hemisphere that has thus shown little interest in maintaining and strengthening the hemispheric institutions."

A spokesman for the U.S. delegation said, "We feel no one should feel slighted because secretary Kissinger is not here."

The senior U.S. official to the Quito conference, Deputy Secretary of State Robert S. Ingersoll, has been in constant and regular communication with Kissinger on the development of the meeting, the spokesman said.

The spokesman discounted persistent rumors that Kissinger may appear in Quito before the conference ends tomorrow to help break the deadlock.

Kent State guardsmen relieved after being found innocent

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Relief - that was the feeling expressed by the eight former Ohio National Guardsmen pronounced innocent in the 1970 Kent State University shootings Friday by Chief U.S. District Judge Frank J. Battisti. Most said they just wanted to begin leading normal lives again.

"It feels like your team just won the state football championship on a 94-yard run in the last minute," said William Perkins, who with four other defendants faced a maximum sentence of life imprisonment if convicted.

"It was a terrible tragedy, and we're all sorry it had to happen. But yes, I do believe we'll be able to live normally again.

"On behalf of all of us, I want to thank the people of America for their support. We've had cards, messages, some of them have even given money."

The eight were indicted by a federal grand jury March 29 after about three and one-half months of deliberations. They were charged with depriving the four dead students and the nine wounded of their civil rights.

Three weeks ago their trial began, and Robert Murphy, chief of the Justice Department's prosecution team, brought 32 witnesses to the stand-including the nine wounded students-and built the best case he could.

The case was not good enough, Battisti announced Friday in an opinion he had prepared Thursday night, knowing he would receive the traditional defense motion for acquittal on the grounds of insufficient proof.

Section 242, Title 18 of the U.S. Code, under which the eight were charged, is a "highly specialized" statute, Battisti said.

And nowhere, he ruled, had the government been able to prove the defendants fired with "the specific intention" of depriving the students of their rights.

"It's been terribly hard on us," said Mrs. Sheila Shafer, wife of defendant James Shafer.

Boston to get school truants

BOSTON [AP] — Boston schools will begin a major drive this week to crack down on chronic truancy in desegregated high schools.

The drive will involve teams of truancy officers at the South Boston High School complex, Hyde Park High School and English High School.

The city school department estimates that 300 students have been chronically absent from those schools since schools opened Sept. 12 under a court-ordered desegregation plan.

Hyde Park and South Boston high schools have been the scene of repeated racial incidents.

The drive will focus on the high schools "where we have the largest numbers of absentees," said associate school superintendent William Harrison.

Calley freed

COLUMBUS, Ga. [AP] — In his first real taste of freedom since he was charged in the My Lai massacre more than five years ago, William L. Calley Jr. has begun a new lifestyle in the town where "no one considers him unusual."

Jobless but smiling, Calley happily shook hands with residents of this Army town who lined the sidewalk outside the courthouse after a federal judge released him on bail Saturday.

Calley, his lawyers say, plans to get a job in Columbus and "sink into anonymity." They have counseled him not to talk to the news media until the Army's appeal of U.S. District Court Judge J. Robert Elliott's reversal of his conviction is over.

U.N. ups security

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — The United Nations will be under the tightest guard of its 29 years when Palestine guerrilla leader Yasser Arafat appears before the General Assembly this week.

Not even the stormy visits in 1960 of Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev and Cuba's Fidel Castro created the giant security headache that American and United Nations officials said confronted them with the expected arrival of Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization delegation.

The bombing yesterday of a United Nations Association book store in Los Angeles, followed by an anonymous telephone caller who cited the Jewish Defense League slogan, "Never Again," points up the problem.

THE BUDGET

"The University request for $118 million is a minimal one. I do not believe ...it can ask for less..."

- UMass President Wood

UMass in '76 asks $17m more than this year

By FRED NOBLES
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert C. Wood says the University's $118 million fiscal 1976 budget request is a "minimal one" even though it is $17 million more than will be spent in the current fiscal year.

Kicking off three hours of hearings on the state's higher education budgets last Friday in the Campus Center Auditorium, Wood and other UMass administrators expressed concern with the future of higher education.

"I do not believe," Wood told the hearing before state Sec. of Education Joseph M. Cronin, "the University can ask for less, not if it is to fulfill the mandate to the people of Massachusetts to continue to provide access to higher quality education at affordable rates of tuition and expense."

Wood told Secretary Cronin that the UMass budget, "is not a set of figures pulled out of thin air and gift wrapped in rhetoric. It is a tightly constructed, carefully calculated product of assessing needs and priorities in a difficult financial situation."

In response to a question by Cronin on "the issue of productivity", Wood said, "It's a basic mistake to think of an educational enterprise as a business proposition...we are dealing with people who are acquiring knowledge."

UMass Amherst Chancellor Randolph Bromery told Cronin that he feels the fiscal 1976 budget is "very conservative, a very prudent budget."

Bromery pointed out that the 1976 budget for the Amherst campus is 11.5 per cent higher than anticipated 1975 expenditures. "Half of that increase," Bromery said, "is the result of inflation."

Bromery noted that even with the increased 1976 budget, "zero growth will have to be maintained for one year at Amherst."

Cronin also heard testimony from six invited speakers.

Amherst Town Manager Allen Torrey, speaking on behalf of the Amherst Board of Selectmen, addressed his remarks chiefly to the construction of a new fire station now underway near Tilson Farm on land deeded to Amherst by UMass.

Noting that the town of Amherst, like UMass, has financial problems, Torrey told Cronin, "We need your help with the cost of operating the proper level of fire protection needed by the Amherst campus."

Torrey said that a new "high rise" law passed by the legislature, "makes many of your buildings non-conforming in required fire protection." He stressed the necessity for the University to follow through on its plans to purchase an "elevating platform type fire truck to be housed in the new station."

James O'Leary, president of the Alumni Association of UMass Boston, told Cronin that the Boston campus, "is serving the needs of bright, able youngsters from families of low and moderate income in the Boston area."

O'Leary went on to say that, "The simple fact is that were it not for the existence of UMass Boston most of these young men and women, including myself, would have no other place to go. They can't afford the tuition at private schools. Indeed, many private schools do not want them because they are national in scope and not prepared to serve Commonwealth citizens."

Lucy Wilson Benson, former president of the League of Women Voters and an Amherst resident, told Cronin, "The Commonwealth needs our University to become even better than it is and I fully support the fiscal 1976 budget."

Benson expressed her concern that "now in a period of increasing financial difficulties, the goal of access may be forgotten." She feels all qualified Massachusetts high school graduates should be able to go on to college and not be restricted by high tuition costs.

Cronin also heard testimony from Daniel Murray, president of the Industrial Union Council of the AFL-CIO, William Whiston, director of the Center for Business and Economic Research, and David Booth, secretary of the Faculty Senate. All three speakers urged passage of the 1976 budget.

UMass Boston Chancellor Golino and UMass Medical School Chancellor Soutter also spoke at the hearings. They told Cronin of the progress being made at their respective campuses to meet the demands of necessary new construction and the expansion of faculty positions.

The three-and-a-half-hour hearing ended a few minutes after UMass President Robert Wood announced he had an appointment to keep and left with Chancellor Golino and Trustee George Pumphret.

Minority recruitment, teaching load aired

By A STAFF REPORTER

Budget matters were not the only topics of discussion at last Friday's public hearing on the UMass fiscal year 1976 budget held by Secretary of Educational Affairs Joseph Cronin in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Cronin asked several speakers specific questions regarding the University's efforts to seek out women and minority students. Cronin also questioned UMass administrators about the "contact hour" issue and about proposed changes in various academic departments at UMass.

UMass is under order of the Legislature to show how many hours faculty spend "in contact" with students. Current law, enacted under the budget act of 1974, requires regular faculty to teach or tutor students no less than nine hours per week.

The UMass trustees are expected to publically report the number of hours faculty spend with students at their next meeting December 4 in Amherst.

In his address at the hearing, UMass Amherst Chancellor Bromery said that the University has been making efforts to seek out minority and women students.

Bromery pointed out that UMass sends out, "twice as many admits" as it will acept into its freshman class. He said this was done because only half of those admitted decide to attend.

Bromery went on to say that, "We had to send out three or four times as many admits to women" in order to approach a student population that has close to 50 per cent women.

He said this was necessary because less than 50 per cent of women accepted actually enter UMass.

Cronin asked UMass Medical School Chancellor Soutter what his office was doing to search out women and minority students. Soutter said there was some difficulty in getting minority students to attend the school because, "those we have invited to come have gone elsewhere."

Soutter pointed out that out of 64 students in this year's Medical School class, six are from minority groups and 22 per cent are women.

Soutter said, "The fact that we don't have many women applicants is part of the problem." He went on to speculate that, "I think we'll reach a point where we'll have a fifty-fifty balance."

When Cronin asked Lucy Wilson Benson of the League of Women Voters if she thought the University had done enough for women, Benson responded, "Oh, I'm sure you haven't."

Responding to a question about faculty workload and the recent General Court demands for specific information on faculty "contact hours" at UMass, President Wood said, "Although I understand the motivation and concern of the General Court...I regard the contact hour provision as not an effective way to undertake that task."

Wood noted that the UMass Administration has been independently monitoring faculty workload "for a number of years."

Addressing the same issue, Prof. David A. Booth, secretary of the Faculty Senate said, "The faculty has nothing to hide...we are most willing to communicate to the proper authorities about when we teach, where we teach and how we teach. But we believe the Trustees are the proper authorities to deal with this issue."

Chancellor Bromery told Cronin of new academic developments at the Amherst campus. Bromery said that trends have shown that enrollment in some departments is declining while in others it is increasing and that this will lead to some reallocation of resources. He said decreases have occured in English, History, Languages and Social Science, while increases are apparent in Health Sciences and Engineering Sciences.

Bromery also told Cronin he supports the establishment of a Legal Studies Center at Amherst.

"A lot of people who come to this school should have access to legal education," Bromery said, "because the private schools aren't going to do it for these people."

Chancellor Soutter told Cronin there is a possibility that nursing students from the Amherst campus may be able to get their clinical training at UMass Worcester.

Collegian to look at budget

President Wood has described the fiscal 1976 budget request as "bare bones" and one which did not "spring full-blown from the head of a budget director" but was put together with the help of student, faculty and staff input.

But an initial analysis of the University's request, with an eye to Amherst programs, shows that:

-- half the increases asked for are over and above inflation costs.

--While the Amherst campus stays still, the other two campuses continue to grow at established rates.

--Anticipated increases in "academic services" are three times that of "student services" on the Amherst campus.

The University's "maintenance budget" for 1976 will be examined in a three-part Collegian series: "The Budget: What does it mean for the campus?" beginning later this week.

Cronin predicts new taxes

By A STAFF REPORTER

Secretary of Educational Affairs Joseph Cronin last Friday said if all proposed state education budgets for fiscal year 1976 are approved, "new taxes are inevitable" for Massachusetts residents.

In an interview prior to public hearings on budgets for UMass and other state institutions, Cronin predicted that Governor-elect Michael S. Dukakis will be "tough minded" on budget issues and that he will be "very demanding about state education issues."

"All we know now is that the new Governor doesn't want to raise taxes," Cronin told interviewers in the Campus Center Auditorium. "But if state education gets everything it wants, new taxes will be inevitable."

When asked why the public hearings were not postponed until after Dukakis appointed a new Secretary of Educational Affairs, Cronin said that although the new Secretary will not have the benefit of attending the hearings, the information will be available to him.

"We taped every one of the hearings," Cronin said and added that whoever is chosen to take over his position, "Can listen to 30 hours of tapes or read 30 pages of transcripts."

Cronin pointed out that this is the first time ever that executive budget hearings have been open to the public. He said that anyone can testify at the hearings by requesting permission in advance from his office. He added that, "anyone in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts can ask questions during the hearings."

"One of the breakthroughs of the Education Department hearings," Cronin said, "is that all of them have been held outside of Route 128."

Cronin feels that holding them outside of the Boston area will benefit many people who have little contact with state government.

Cronin said 3,000 notices of when and where the hearings would take place had been sent out in advance in both English and Spanish.

At the hearings on the UMass budget, which began at 2:30 last Friday, approximately 75 people were present. When the hearing ended three and a half hours later, the audience had dwindled to less than 25. Most wore coats and ties and appeared too old to be students.

'Political' prisoner charges authorities with brutality and dehumanizing tactics

By ELLEN AND JOE COTTER
Progressive News Service

"What must it take for a non-white victim of savage white racist brutality and dehumanization to convince a white Federal Judge that he is suffering irreparable injury at the hands of brutal white racist guards in the solitary confinement unit of New York State's "Dachau" prison, where he is caged like an animal for twenty-four hours a day solely because he refuses to relinquish his human rights? Why do U.S. Courts continue to sanction the identical racist and dehumanizing policies which, despite the Attica rebellion and the death of 43 persons, are still being systematically by Commissioner Preiser upon black and Puerto Rican prisoners with the approval of Governor Rockefeller?"

—excerpt from a letter from Martin Sostre to Judge Kaufman concerning the delay over action on his Civil Rights Complaint filed against the New York State prison officials.

Martin Sostre, a Black, Puerto Rican, political prisoner, has been in jail since 1967, when he was convicted on a narcotics charge, which he believed to have been a frame-up. Sentenced to a 25-30 year prison term for allegedly selling fifteen dollars worth of heroin, Sostre believes that the fact that he was operating the radical Afro-Asian bookstore in Buffalo's Cold Springs ghetto was the underlying reason for his conviction. In 1971 and again in 1973 the prosecution's main witness Arto Williams, recanted his testimony that Martin Sostre had sold him heroin and instead swore in an affidavit and testified that Sgt. Alvin Gristmacher of the Narcotic Division had arranged the transaction which led to the arrest and imprisonment of Sostre. Since then, Sgt. Gristmacher has been dismissed from the Buffalo Police Department and has been indicted for the theft of a half-million dollars worth of heroin from the police narcotics locker. Despite these facts, Martin Sostre remains in prison.

Martin Sostre has been in solitary confinement for the past 14 months for refusing to shave a ¼ inch beard.

On a number of separate occasions, Sostre has been beaten for refusing to submit to rectal examinations. Sostre refuses on the grounds that the search is a violation of his rights and that no rules and regulations exist requiring rectal examinations every time prisoners enter or leave solitary confinement. He cited a Federal Judge who found rectal exams to be "dehumanizing" and "needlessly degrading."

On May 19 Martin Sostre was removed from solitary confinement and transferred to Buffalo where recanted testimony of Arto Williams was to be heard. Before actually appearing in court, however he was severely beaten by seven guards for refusing to submit to a rectal exam. When Sostre appeared in court, he told the judge that he had been beaten. The guards then filed assault charges against him.

On May 29, 1973, Sostre submitted a complaint under the N.Y. Civil Rights Act, to the clerk of the U.S. District Court, Northern District of New York, Utica, New York. His complaint, based on the belief that he was a victim of police brutality and repressive acts, was responded to, first with increased repression and brutality on the part of guards, and secondly, with abnormal delay and neglect on the part of the federal court.

On July 6, 1973, Sostre was to appear before Robert J. Feinburg at the Clinton County Court in Plattsburgh, New York, for arraignment, on an indictment handed down by the Clinton County Grand Jury. The indictment charged Sostre with three counts of second degree assault stemming from his beating of May 19.

Sostre had not gone through the basic preliminary preceedings such as arraignment under complaint, hearing, and notification of charges being presented to the Grand Jury, yet he was still indicted.

But before appearing in court, Sostre was again ordered to submit to a rectal examination by seven guards. He was assaulted and forceably examined. Only after this incident, was he brought to Clinton County Court for arraignment.

According to the Amherst Defense Committee for Martin Sostre, on November 4, 1974, Martin Sostre was removed from solitary, taken to the rear of the prison, ordered to strip, forced to the cement floor, spread-eagled with his face pinned to the floor, and kicked. A forceable rectal search took place.

This time he was choked to the point where he could not breathe. He lost consciousness. Martin Sostre came to in the nurses room in the prison, and when he requested medication he was given two aspirins. At that time he realized that he could not talk, and that he was dizzy and weak. His vocal cords had been injured.

During the hearing the judge refused to allow a lawyer to confer with him. After leaving the courthouse, he was taken back to the prison, ordered to submit to another rectal search. Martin Sostre refused, for this he was held down and kicked.

He has a very deep bruise on his hip and his left large toe may be fractured.

The Amherst Defense Committee has stated, "Martin Sostre is fifty-one years old. Unless Martin Sostre is removed from Clinton Prison, he will surely die. His internal injuries need attention."

All humane, and just, conscious people must respond to this new-Nazi technique empoled against Martin Sostre by writing the officials of New York State, by writing Judge Robert Feinburg, Clinton County Court House, N.Y., N.Y. Also by writing Amnesty, International c-o the United Nations. Monetary contributions, needed for legal work as well as bail, can be sent to Box 657, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Campus veterans offered own American legion post

The Progressive News Service is the result of many people's need for free access to the media on a regular basis. Anyone who wishes to write an article or a series of articles, should submit them to the Progressive News Service, c-o Veteran's Coalition in the Student Union, second floor.

By JOE COTTER
Progressive News Service

The 2,400 UMass veterans have been offered the opportunity to establish their own American Legion Post on campus.

The offer was advanced last Friday by eight representatives of the American Legion, during a meeting at the Student Union with people from the Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs, the Veterans Affairs Office and the Veterans Fraternity, Beta Chi.

John Comer, State Vice Commander of the Legion said: "The post would be staffed and run by students on campus. It would be their post with their priorities."

Legion membership is limited to those men and women who have served in the military during periods of armed conflict as specified by Congress.

The Legion representatives said they had also come to change some of the misconceptions that the groups had with one another.

Some of the disagreements stemmed from the expulsion of 30 Vietnam Vets from the Legion parade in Boston on Veterans Day and from the Legion's stance on the war and amnesty. Also, some members of the V.C.C.A. felt that exclusion of civilians was harmful to the function of a community oriented group.

The Legioneers pointed out that the Legion was an apolitical group, that it didn't endorse candidates, but that it had a strong lobbying force in Washington, mostly to fight for veterans benefits.

The Alternate National Committeeman, Robert Groccia said: "The young veteran needs help and we have the structures already established to get that help."

The Legion people elaborated that they were involved in the community with Little League, help for the aged, hospitals, prisons and they even had a legal staff to help upgrade discharges in certain deserving cases.

After the meeting, the Legion representatives were invited to the V.C.C.A. office where some people gave their individual views of a new Legion Post.

Herbert Scurrah, Commander of Amherst Post 148: "About a year ago, I tried to organize the University but the net result of my efforts was only six new members.

We actually need Vietnam Vets or we will go out of existence in a few years. If we couldn't draw them into the local post — then give them a post of their own. They would become established Legion members and would move into Legion posts wherever they settled.

The UMass program would eventually die of its own volition.

If this post were established at UMass, it might catch on at other universities and up to 40 per cent of the Vietnam Vets might possibly be recruited."

Pat Power of the V.C.C.A.: "I think it would just be an alternative outlet for veterans to express their grievances and possibly to formulate constructive projects.

The veterans today are a bit more politically oriented. They feel a need to express their ideas.

But the American Legion professes an apolitical policy and in the same breath it comes out in support of governmental military actions, which in itself is political in nature. Those same policies helped to re-enforce the government's position during the Vietnam conflict, a war in which many of us are abhorrent about.

I realize the Legion has advanced the possibility for changes from within but I feel reluctant to join their organization due to past experiences. They asked me to join today and I said I would sincerely think about it and there is a chance that I might join.

However, the American Legion glorifies the veteran and many Vietnam vets feel that participation in a war shouldn't be glorified."

John Comer gave the details for setting up a post: "A minimum of 15 applicants is necessary to establish a post. An application must be filled out giving all the names and addresses of the prospective members and this is forwarded to the State Commander. He along with the Executive Committee investigate the application for authenticity.

It is advanced to the National Commander who decides whether or not to issue a charter.

The post is allowed to set up its own constitution and to pass its own by-laws but these cannot conflict with the state or national by-laws.

Apartheid still thrives in S. Africa

To the Editor:

Recently the Credentials Committee of the United Nations moved to withhold accreditation of the Union of South Africa on the grounds that the South African delegation was unrepresentative. The General Assembly of the U.N. then voted 99 to 28 to reject South African accreditation. A proposal was placed before the General Assembly to recommend that the U.N. Security Council review the relationship of South Africa to the United Nations, it was passed 125 to 1 with 16 abstentions, one of which was the United States.

The South African government, one of white minority control, has pursued the policy of apartheid since the 1948 victory of the Afrikaner Nationalist Party. Apartheid, [signifying segregation or so-called "separate economic development"], has enabled the government to "resettle" the African populace, 70.2 percent of the population, into 13 percent of the total territory of South Africa, while 87 percent of the national land is reserved for whites only, comprising 17.6 percent of the population. Influx control laws which call for the mandatory carrying of passbooks which must include photo, race identity, number, authorization, and employers monthly statement have been implemented. The Urban Areas Consolidation Act places a 72 hour limit on Africans to remain in an urban area without a special permit. The descendants of the Dutch and English settlers claim to this date that they were on the land before the Africans migrated south, and therefore maintain control over the government, rich resources, and industry of South Africa. Furthermore the African, Asian, and Colored populace have no voting rights in the electoral process which has consistently placed Afrikaner nationalists, or white supremacists in power.

These policies are maintained to facilitate the exploitation of African labor. Without legal collective bargaining power, or trade unions the African laborer is left at the mercy of South African and foreign capital. The average monthly wage of Africans in manufacturing is $69 while the wage for white workers is $419; in mining $25 compared with $453, and in construction $65 to $433. United States corporations now have invested nearly $1 billion in South Africa despite the governments nominal policy statement restricting such trade because of the U.N. sanction or boycott of South African trade. The U.S. veto power in the Security Council can be combatted by the masses of people in the States voicing their condemnation of South Africa's policy of apartheid.

A Southern African Anti-Imperialist committee has formed on campus to circulate a petition for the expulsion of South Africa from the United Nations.

Living on three and a half bucks a day

To the Editor:

When I came to the University I did it with the sole intention of studying and trying to become self sufficient. I was on the assumption that there were many opportunities for the poor people to cross the barriers of poverty; to acquire a good education and to become an asset to his people and to his country.

But I found out different because whenever poor people are struggling for survival, there are too, oppressors who's only intentions are to live at the poor people's expenses. This means that while the poor are suffering the pains of hunger, the rich are living on wealth and getting richer and richer.

This is due to the fact of an increase on my rent from one hundred and twenty dollars to one hundred and sixty dollars. This has made it harder for us to live on. Moreover, it has become a psychological problem which is hampering my efforts to succeed in my classes.

An example of this is that so far I have received $1,100 from scholarship funds for my first semester, to be divided among the rent, tuition, books and food. After all deductions are made — it only leaves me $3.60 daily to buy food for myself and my three kids. This situation has forced me to use up some money from October rent to buy some food to sustain ourselves. I believe other students are going through the same situation. For this reason I am joining them by holding my part of the rent in an effort to demand a decrease on our rent to a level at which we can live like decent people.

Student Town Meeting tonight

To the Editor:

On Monday, November 11, at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, there will be a Student Town Meeting open to all UMass Undergraduate and Graduate members of the Community. This is the first time that such a meeting has even been undertaken, and everyone is urged to attend.

It is time for all students to be treated as mature, responsible, decision-making adult members of their own community. Eighteen year olds have been legally enfranchised, however, the University Administration persists in working within the outdated "en loco parentis" framework of yesteryear!

Students should and will have the authority to make decisions which directly affect them: with regards to residential life, student affairs, academics and the environment. Collective bargaining rights can be yours if you want them! Show your displeasure with the system and support for a solution which ensures student control over areas of student concern.

See you all at the Town Meeting.

Jefferies replies

To the Editor:

In a letter printed in the Thursday Collegian, I mentioned a black TA whom I stated called me a racist though "not in so many words". Later speaking to this TA, I was informed that I had misconstrued his actions behavior, and that this was not his meaning or intention. This being the case, I publicly apologize and express regrets that I misunderstood him. On the chance that I misunderstood the others mentioned, I apologize to them also.

However, the main point of my letter, that blacks have a privileged status on this campus stands. In the text THEY and WE, Racial and Ethnic Relations in the United States by Peter I. Rose, on page 221 it states: "In the Spring of 1973 complaints were filed against several schools and universities [including the School of Education, University of Massachusetts...] for discriminating against 'non-minority' applicants." This statement is just an example of the discrimination I am referring to.

The blacks have been discriminated against, and are still being denied the rights and privileges that white Americans take for granted. This is a fact that is undeniable. But this is not the fault of the University of Massachusetts or its students, so why should they have to "pay" for it?

Again, to any that I may have inadvertently wronged I express my apologies.

...for Jefferies et. al.

To the Editor:

We are a group of black and white women and men living in the Quad and trying to raise our own awareness of racism and other forms of oppression, and also to combat the oppression around us, specifically in the quad. We speak, not to you alone, but to you as a typical UMass white student.

We would like to take issue first with your statements that "blacks on this campus have special privileges"...such as New Africa House and Drum. What "white equivalent" would you like to see? Another quad? Another frat? Another Neuman Center or Bluewall? Who told you that New Africa House and Drum were exclusively for blacks? These are all false assumptions on your part! Have you ever been to New Africa House? You are welcome to any of the cultural events it sponsors - free concerts, free art exhibits; you are welcome to the restaurant in its basement, you are welcome to apply to the day care center it sponsors, etc...

Perhaps you question the need for a black cultural center and a black literary magazine. Whites have told blacks for generations that they are unworthy, that "white is right", black is bad, that their skins are afflictions, their history one long humiliation, their culture empty of distinctive traditions and any legitimate source of pride. White racism eats away at the identity and self-concept of Black-Americans. Now blacks are resurrecting their cultural heritage and realize their heroes, Daniel Hale Williams, Charles Drew, Matthew Henson, Gabriel Prosser, Denmark Vesey, Nat Turner, and, of course Mohammed Ali. Blacks today know that they are beautiful as do many whites. If you can't imagine [because you are protected by your whiteness] the tremendous damage possible to one's self-concept from overt and covert racist acts, look at the price you pay for your racism: Your ego-development is severely stunted because you are unaware and unconcerned. You have assumed a false sense of superiority. You are blinded by your whiteness.

A little awareness of history and the effects of racism in this country would clear up your difficulties with CCEBS and CORP also. In closing, we regret that we cannot possibly reach your years of negative conditioning to the "rightness of whiteness" in one brief written response, or even respond to all the racist things you said, but we ask that you consider the possibility that you lack information. Stop by C.O.P.E.'s office in the basement of Leach. We would be happy to assist you in the raising of your awareness. From your letter your awareness can go only up!

Remember Joe Burroughs

To the Editor:

We want to invite all members of the University community who are friends of Joseph Burroughs to attend a gathering to celebrate his memory, and to contribute to a living memorial in the form of a scholarship fund for an undergraduate majoring in human services. Joe Burroughs, who was a faculty member in Human Development and who was especially active with the academic program of Project 10, the Inquiry Program, and BDIC, died suddenly last week, after teaching at the University since 1957, during which time he was the Faculty Senate delegate to the Board of Trustees and chapter president of the American Association of University Professors.

In his honor, the students and staff of Project 10 have announced a "serious but not solemn" gathering for Wednesday afternoon at 5 p.m. on Nov. 13. We especially want to encourage others to join us for an opportunity to reflect together about Joe's work and what he meant to us and to education at this University. Refreshments will be served. RSVP to the Project office at 545-0871.

Joe's last important work was within the BDIC Program, where he was at work with Dr. J. Alfred Southworth in developing a special degree program in human services. Joe's family has requested that all persons wishing to contribute to Joe's memory do so with a contribution to the Joseph D. Burroughs Memorial Trust Fund, for use as a scholarship for an undergraduate majoring in human services. Checks may be sent to Dr. Southworth, 18 Old Town Rd., Amherst.

For those of you who did not know him, perhaps the words of Fred Weiss, in his Collegian column of October 22, will give you some idea of the measure of the man. Joe, Fred wrote, was "a man who has more intelligence individually than do most Universities collectively, and also has more personal warmth than a farmhouse kitchen." God bless you, Joe.

Tonight, tonight

The Student Government Association will hold the first Town Meeting ever at UMass tonight at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

For people raised in the eastern, urban part of Massachusetts the town meeting concept needs some explaining. A town meeting is the last form of direct participatory government in the United States. There is no voting for a representative to vote for you if he wants. You go to the meeting, speak your will and vote. Your vote will be counted directly in the decision at hand. Participation in tonight's meeting will aid the core of SGA members that have been working for students rights in that fight. The questions that will be aired deal with the quality of life at UMass and the rights of students to decide for themselves where they will eat and sleep.

Tonight's town meeting may be the last quiet request for action.

Many dorms are slums. Webster was singled out last week. A walk through some of the towers in Southwest is not completely unlike a tour of Mission Hill or Columbia Point in Boston. There is no effective way to tell the Administration that living in a cement box twenty stories high and not having anything to say about it is reprehensible to people raised and educated on the premise that we are in command of our own lives. There is of course evidence in many dorms that residents think the quality of life is poor. Weekend after weekend dorm prisoners tear up everything that is not bolted down, deface walls, tamper with elevators and fire extinguishing devices. This is due partially to immaturity, but it is also a message from the residents that they do not care about the place they live in because it is a severe cold impersonal dump that costs more per square foot than off campus housing space. There is no like-it-or-leave-it to dormitory living. It is a sentence for being young, that's all.

The food in the Dining Commons is intolerable. Students are amazed every year that they put on five pounds even though they walk more than ever before. If they don't put on weight from eating all the filler that is part of the regular fare it is because they avoid the troughs altogether. It is sometimes less expensive to dine out than to pay the price of a DC session. Again the price of being young must be paid. Students are forced to eat there.

For the last year and a half the SGA has been waiting to see some action from Dr. Gage and Jack Littlefield who at that time pledged their support in finding suitable housing for those residents displaced by the renovation of Hamlin House. The Hamlin residents must leave during intersession and will be scattered about the campus destroying the community that has developed there. Besides turning students into refugees, the hand-sitting by Gage and Littlefield are evidence that they feel in no way responsible for promises they make. Their arrogance deserves more than discussion at tonight's town meeting. They should be fired.

Commuters, the group most screwed by last year's infamous failure, the parking reorganization, take it on the chin with the mandatory Health Services Fee they pay every year. None of our quasi-parents in Whitmore ever inquire to the convenience or necessity of UHS to commuters. They just have to pay.

Tonight will not produce results if the Administration continues its habit of slipping punches until the next round. And like the fighter who is getting his punches slipped, students here will fight on knowing that one punch will land. Maybe the debates and organized pleas will not make the point.

Maybe crowds will get together like last spring during the streaking fad, except maybe instead of running around naked they'll get together and tear down the dining commons and dorms and even Fort Whitmore. And maybe then mommy and daddy Administration will know that we have outgrown paternalism and are ready to judge the course of our lives. The choice is still theirs.

Frisbee falls to females

Mountains trembled with quakelike rumbles, oceans swirled with typhoon infested waterspouts, the skies shook with solemn anger. It was after the fall. The Die had been cast and there was no turning back.

It was on this fateful day that THE DECISION had been made. After ten centuries of solemn unisexuality, Frisbee Jr. College had voted to go co-ed.

The decision was greeted with frenzied hysteria on the campus proper of Frisbee. Students hung themselves with toilet paper and ran about hysterically lobotomizing every unseemly looking passerby. Loud music, the pat pat of bongos and wild full moon shrieks filled the air. The previously all male student body was preparing for the ritual that Christine Jorgensen so immortalized. It was to be a painful process.

It was a media orgy. National Broadcasters vied with the local hacks in publicizing the event. Stock markets crashed and oil fields were discovered in response to the news that Frisbee, the last of the all male bastions of decency and virginity, had been tossed to the winds. "Where can I send my Wentworth now?" moaned the lonely Industrialist from California. "What will become of us?" Not all were as despairing. "I think it's great!" beamed a local contraceptive distributor.

Frisbee Alumni however, left no doubt as to their preference. Six of their number immediately died of heart attacks while ten others lapsed into shock and comas, three of which had to be lobotomized. "The Roman Empire took centuries to build, but fell in only a day. We are witnesses to another apocalypse," lamented a local custodian, a member of a recent graduating class. Taxi driving alumni all over the country went on strike in disbelief and anger. Threats and rumors of lawsuits permeated the air, especially in the wake of last months 25,000-3 Alumni vote against coeducation. Three bills were introduced in Congress, and a motion was filed before the United Nations Security Council. The White House had no comment but Senator Clyde Eagleton, a renowned Frisbee graduate vowed a full congressional investigation. "The Watergate Committee will pale into insignificance next to the work of the Frisbee Committee," he was heard to mutter.

The Frisbee Administration were cautious in their statement. "Even though this will reduce our student-faculty ratio from 1:3 to 3:1 and cost each student $5,000 more, we feel that the coeducational experience was necessary in a world inhabited by at least two sexes. We felt something had to be done when we heard of the rumor flying about that the menstrual cycle was an Italian bike. And we launched into action when the student government demanded 'sex furloughs' every weekend."

Students at the nearby Hot Buns Secretarial School, just four miles away were generally displeased. The coeducational announcement by Frisbee seemed to threaten the longstanding Frisbee-Buns social alliance. The future of Frisbee-Buns mixers and social dating seemed less secure. "Whattsa matter wid dem. We ain't good enough!" bellowed one especially beleagured Hot Buns coed. It was especially insulting to the Hot Bunners since they had just last year voted down coeducation, and determined to remain forever an all female fortress. One petite young Bunner clad in skirt and sweater put it best: "Frisbee has made its decision and they'll get nothing but Cold Buns from here on out."

In the editorial entitled "Wages and Students" in last Friday's Collegian it was stated that a meeting was scheduled for that day. The meeting, concerning fairness in paying students, is to be held tomorrow night at 8:00 in room 113 of the Campus Center. All interested are urged to attend.

Student employees: Fighting for their jobs

Milton Kerstein will fight for his job tonight. Along with other members of the Student Employee Committee, he will approach the Campus Center Food Services management and offer them rational, feasible alternatives to firing him.

Lisa Saunders: Chairman of the Student Employee Committee.

It's not that Milton isn't frying those Coffee Shop hamburgers well enough; nor is it that Milton's ever been late or missing from work. In fact, for the last 13 months, Milton has been a conscientious worker and a hard worker, as many of his fellow employees will tell you. No, it's not Milton's fault at all. Rather, Milton's job is at stake because of what he calls "an error in judgement" by the management — "a conscious decision to overstaff" the CC complex food areas.

There are two aspects of Milton's confrontation tonight which make it important.

First, it is only one in a long series of battles between students and administrators, battles in which students demand to be heard and insist on being treated like human beings and not peons.

Secondly, Milton is not alone. He is in the same position as Michael Bardsley, a Hatch Bar manager twenty-seven hours per week; and Lisa Saunders, who works in the catering department on the 10th floor fifteen to twenty hours per week; and Sharon Ross, a Hatch bartender nineteen hours per week; and some 165 other students — many of whom depend on their wages not for purchasing the latest Elton John release, not for buying jewelry and make-up, not for weekend entertainment, but for taking care of more real concerns, like paying the rent and the electric bill and filling the supermarket basket once a week.

Milton Kerstein: He's not alone.

Even with his job, Milton (like most of us) is feeling the economic pinch. He sold his car three weeks ago because he could no longer afford to maintain it. And like he said, a layoff or cutback in hours is not like bantering with the funds of some RSO club: "It's all about people's livelihoods."

The $2 to $3 per hour that student employees earn isn't an awful lot when you're talking about ten to twenty hours per week, but for most of those students it's all they've got, it's their sole source of income. And the job market in Amherst, coupled with the nationwide state of the economy, presents an even grimmer picture.

"If I lose my job," said Sharon Ross, shaking her head, "I'll... I'll... I'll just have to pitch a tent in the Campus Center."

There's one thing which bothers student employees like Milton and Sharon even more than the prospect of losing their jobs, and that's the frustration of dealing with the "management", a euphemism for bureaucrats like Phil Amico (Director of CC Food Services) and John Corker (Director of the Campus Center).

When policy changes are implemented without consulting student employees' opinions of their projected feasibility or effectiveness; when student employees' requests for safer working conditions repeatedly go ignored; when communication and cooperation between student employees and management becomes a one-way street; when management persists on giving student employees the runaround and then assumes the position of 'if you don't like it you can leave because there's always someone else to replace you' — that's when frustration sets in.

And where can those students vent their anger, their frustration?

"See that wall?" asks Milton.

According to Mike Bardsley, a Hatch Bar manager, the management in their 8th floor offices is "remote" from the problems of the food service operation.

"We all knew they were overhiring," said Mike. "And they never even bothered to ask us how much business we do."

Lisa Saunders, chairman of the eleven-member Student Employee Committee, noted that "they are still hiring in some areas while threatening to layoff in others."

Almost any employee can readily cite numerous examples of gross mismanagement and occasions which, had student input been solicited, could have been avoided, like hiring the Chambers Brothers for $1800 on Halloween night when "anyone with any experience in the UMass community," as one student put it, could have predicted that only some 250 students (at $2 each) would show.

Employees constantly refer to extraordinary food waste and talk of having to throw away "160 pounds of bananas which weren't stored properly, trays of sandwiches, bowls of egg batter, and vats of jello" to the tune of an estimated $1000 per day.

Fighting to hold onto their jobs takes up even more of their time than the jobs themselves.

"It's not something you can put down like homework," said Sharon Ross. "It's something that's always with you. Everything you do seems to rotate around it. I've been going downhill and I can't concentrate on my schoolwork anymore..."

Sharon, like Milton, Lisa, Michael, and a half-dozen other employees, spend some 20 to 40 hours per week in meetings, formulating sample proposals designed to save the food service operation enough money so that there will be a sufficient amount of funds budgeted for labor. And they've come up with some common sense ideas — ideas which involve eliminating the excessive waste and inefficiency, restructuring hours and work schedules for maximum labor usage, and using the profits from a benefit dance to counterbalance the payroll deficit.

Michael Bardsley: Management is "remote".

The student employees are even willing to donate their time and energies on a volunteer basis, if it means being able to hang on to their jobs.

All they're asking for is a chance — a chance to be heard tonight for once, and from now on, when decisions are being made and policies adopted, especially policies which so dramatically affect their jobs and, consequently, their well-being at UMass.

Urban ed professor to speak at Marathon

DR. HARVEY B. SCRIBNER, ex-Chancellor of the New York City School system and now professor of education here at the School of Education, Center for Urban Education will be speaking on campus during Marathon week, Wednesday, November 13th, 7:00 p.m. at Marks Meadows Auditorium.

Dr. Scribner who was the first New York Chancellor to preside over the decentralized school system, fulfilled the School Board's mandate, "to make waives"--to thaw out the frozen habits of a system grown rigid and unresponsive. Scribner has angered many administrators and has shocked many conservatives.

The New York Times stated that Dr. Scribner was "The Most Powerful Man In the School System--On Paper." Dr. Scribner's newest book (still no title) will be discussed on Wednesday evening. Also, suggestions for Educational reform will be discussed such as: Let every student choose his own teacher; Make every school autonomous; and parents should take and be given responsibilities. Questions and answer time immediately following and Free Coffee.

on WMUA today

This is what will be on WMUA, 91.1 FM, today:

The disc jockeys are Marc Berman from 6-10 in the morning, Scott Bacherman from 10-2, Vinny Peruzzi from 6 to 10 in the evening, and Ken Irwin finishing the day until 2:00 a.m. Stu MacDonald will start tomorrow morning.

WMUA Specialties:

8:30 a.m., High Tides, Jeff Jawer explains the astrological aspects of the day.

2:00-6:00 p.m., Uujamadrum, Mr. Charles Mann hosts soul music.

6:15-7:00 p.m., Off The Hook, Public Affairs Director Eilish Broderick hosts a discussion on food co-ops. Members of the Amherst Food Co-op will be available to answer your questions.

7:00-10:00 p.m., Musical Flashbacks, Vinny Peruzzi goes back only one year, to 1973. Tune in for 1973's best music, as well as news and sports.

10:15-11:15 p.m., Focus, Host Ken Mosakowski interviews Gerry Goodrich, coordinator of a nationwide fundraising effort to aid the millions of starving victims of the draught in sub-Saharan Africa. This show was pre-taped at the headquarters of OXFAM-AMERICA in Boston.

News can be heard at 7, 8 & 9 a.m., and 2, 6 & 10 p.m.

Come in...choose a natural easy care style just for you.

Which style is for you? The sleek, smooth look or an all-out curly look? Both start with precision cutting by our master snippers—end with bounce and compliments. The hand blower persuades hair into a natural look—or for more curls we're magicians with hot irons and organic body perms.

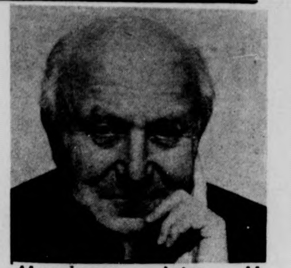
Judae-Christian relations, studies subject of visiting monsignors talks



Monsignor John M. Oesterreicher

Monsignor John M. Oesterreicher, an architect of the Second Vatican Council's Counciliar Statement regarding the relationship between Christians and Jews, will visit UMass this week to talk to students and faculty members.

Msgr. Oesterreicher was a consultor to the Secretariat for Christian Unity before and during the Council, which met in the early 1960's.

He is director of the Institute of Judaeo-Christian Studies at Seton Hall University in New Jersey where he is initiating a graduate program.

From Nov. 11 to 15, Msgr. Oesterreicher will speak of modern relations between Christians and Jews, to students of Asst. Prof. Charles D. Isbell's course on the Jewish People, Judaic Studies 100.

The visiting lecturer will also meet with UMass faculty members while in Amherst, where he will be in residence at the Newman Center.

Room to Move drop-in center offers services for students

By RON LAFRANCE
Room to Move Coordinator

Room to Move is a student run drop-in center which provides educational and counseling services for students experiencing a wide variety of personal and drug related problems. Located in he Student Union rm. 401, the center is open most days from 10 a.m. to midnight and on Friday and Saturday until 2 a.m. There is also a telephone answering "on-call" service when no one is in.

Drop-In Counseling Services: Room To Move staff members have been trained to meet the needs of those concerned with the use of psychedelics, barbituates, quaaludes, alcohol, and hard drugs. Special efforts are made to provide services for veterans, members of the black community, and for those concerned with integrating various meditative or spiritual disciplines into their daily lives. The center maintains an up-to-date library of books and articles which cover a wide variety of social, spirtual, and drug related issues. If the staff doesn't have what you need in the way of information or service, they will be able to refer you to those who do.

The staff tries to provide services in a caring, objective, and confidential manner. In addition to personal contacts, the center provides a variety of forums where students may explore alternative means of personal growth. There are a wide variety of educational workshops on chanting, meditation, yoga, body awareness, movement, and music therapy. These experiences are conducted by well trained and experienced individuals and have been very well received by students.

A special effort has been made to provide a detoxification program in cooperation with the University Health Services. This program is intended to provide non-narcotic assistance for withdrawal from heroin, barbituates, and quaaludes. Although this program is used infrequently, it provides essential backup for more serious situations.

Counseling, outreach highlight drop-in center responsibilities

Educational Outreach Services: The Education Team, under the leadership of E.T. Mellor, presents workshops for Heads of Residence, counselors, and students. These workshops deal with a variety of drug, personal, and social issues. The goal of this team is to help students explore their own values regarding drug use and to become more aware of how they make decisions about their behavior in the context of existing social norms.

The Black Action Team, under the leadership of Allen Gordon, offers outreach educational and counseling services to members of the black community.

Over the past two years, the team has developed an effective, informal mode of delivery for these services. In addition to numerous individual contacts, the team has provided high quality educational programs for various groups within the University community. Through the use of 'corrective history' and humanistic education principles, the team has helped many individuals better understand some of the root causes of drug abuse.

The Room To Move Speakers Program for 1973-74, which aimed at informing the University community of issues particularly relevant to student's interest in personal growth included psychiatrist R.D. Laing, founder of Kingsly Hall; Ram Dass, spirtual leader; Yogi Bajhan, founder of Jundalini joga movement in America; Lock Rush, LSD therapist and teacher of Zen; and Jim Bowles and Edward Robinson, minority drug training specialists. A few of these speakers were presented in cooperation with the department of Psychology and Education.

Staff Training: The Room To Move staff are trained first as volunteers, and then receive weekly in service training. In addition, staff members receive supervision from experienced professionals within and outside the staff. Students receive credit for participation in both pre-service and in-service training. Regular training sessions are highlighted by the participation of many of those involved in the speakers program.

Philosophy: Room To Move has struggled to keep aware of the changing needs of the student body and to develop effective ways of meeting those needs. It has served as a vehicle for communication between the 'folk medicine' of the street and professional medicine, and has been instrumental in developing new models for the delivery of education and health care services.

Coin club to sponsor 1st auction

Tonight at 8 p.m. the UMass Coin Club will present its first Auction and Silver Dollar Raffle in the Colonial Lounge. Half of the raffle profits will be donated to Belchertown State School. The auction is open to anyone for selling or buying. The charge is 5 cents per lot sold.

The Raffle drawing will be held during the auction; fifteen uncirculated 19th century silver dollars will be awarded individually.

The intent of the auction and raffle is to make people aware of the club's purpose, which is, to introduce people to the field of coin collecting. Also, the auction will provide information to people who have a coin and want to know where and when it was issued, its value, the significance of the design, etc.

The Canon F-1.
Images are what it's all about.

Photographic equipment can be a trap. Sometimes, you can get so involved with it that you lose sight of your real purpose—making photographs.

The Canon F-1 can help you forget about equipment and concentrate on images. It was designed, and functions, as an extension of your photographic vision. It's responsive in a way that you must experience to appreciate. And since it was conceived as a system camera, every part works together with effortless smoothness, from the more than 40 Canon FD and FL lenses to the over 200 accessories.

The heart of the camera is it's central spot metering system. With it you can use anyone's exposure system, no matter how critical, since it only measures the central 12% of the finder area—regardless of the focal length used.

So if you're spending too much time lately worrying about your equipment, it's time you stopped, and took a good look at the Canon F-1 system, and Canon's other fine cameras—the automatic, electronic EF, the full-feature FTb, and the TLb. If you're interested in images, Canon's your camera.

One of your greatest concerns has been repricing of items already on the shelf. So when there's an increase, we won't increase the price on present shelf stock. We'll put new merchandise at the rear of the shelf and post a new unit price tag showing the new, higher price. (Unit price tags with both the old and new prices are being prepared.) Other than specials, the only evidence of price re-marking will be on items repriced prior to now. It may be several weeks before previously repriced items are all sold from store shelves. If you find an item with more than one price, we'll charge the lowest price.

Campus feminists to organize

There will be a meeting of campus feminists today in the Campus Center from 11 a.m.-2 p.m. to form a planning committee whose purpose will be to sponsor an event to bring together as many feminists as possible from all areas of the University.

A group of women representing various feminist groups on campus met October 27 to discuss University issues affecting women. They decided further dialogue, resource sharing, and planning for future communication and coordinated action were needed. The when, what, and how of such a conference will be decided by the planning committee formed tonight.

Campus feminists sponsoring this action include the Carnegie Project; Women and Career Options; Everywoman's Center; SBA Women's Caucus; School of Ed Women's Caucus; Southwest Women's Center; the Women's Studies Program; Assoc. Provost Jean Leppaluoto; and Sally Freeman and Salle Hamilton of the Student Development Center.

The meeting is open to all feminists, staff-students-faculty. The room number will be posted on the elevator schedule.

Aid funds available

Funds are available to provide financial aid assistance for Spring semester. The Financial Aid Office encourages students, who have not already applied, to apply. A student must file: a University aid application and either a PCS or an SFS. The University application must be returned to 243 Whitmore no later than November 30th and the PCS's and the SFS's must be mailed to Princeton, NJ and Berkley, CA, respectively, by November 22nd.

All applications are available in the Financial Aid Office, 243 Whitmore.

Research methods explained

Need help in the library? Do you really know how the system works? During the month of January, the UMass Library Reference Department will sponsor "research methods" courses.

Covering any topic from general information to specific subject areas (German lit., political science,...), these mini-sessions will be held from Monday, January 20 through Friday, January 24, 1975. Each session is two hours long and is available free of charge. Registration forms and further information are available at the Reference Desks on the main floor (5-0150). The deadline for registration is Sunday, November 24th.

Scientific psychology methods may reflect status-quo values

Dr. Elliot Mishler will speak tonight on "Psychology Misapplied" - how "scientific" techniques and methods reflect-perpetrate many status-quo assumptions and values. Dr. Mishler will trace this phenomenon through IQ testing, R.D. Laing and the Cult of Individualism, and B.F. Skinner and Behavior Modification.

Dr. Mishler's lecture will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Room 113 C.C. and is open to all.

Dr. Mishler is a professor at the Harvard Medical School and a psychologist at Mass. Mental Health Center. He's done substantial work in the three areas over the past few years. As a professional and an activist, his approach and perspective should be extremely interesting.

Students at UMass especially in Education, Psychology, and Sociology are urged to attend and participate in the dialogue around the perplexing problem of how to apply theory in practice.

This is the second of a series of lectures presented by Student Volunteer Services entitled "The Use and Abuse of Psychology: Dealing with Social Problems".

Globemen at Smith tonight

An editor and a reporter from The Boston Globe will lecture at Smith College in Northampton tonight.

Martin F. Nolan, Washington bureau chief and Robert Healy, executive editor of The Globe will give their impressions of the current political scene in a talk at 8 tonight in McConnell Hall at Smith.

Their talk is free and open to the public. It is fourth in a series titled "The Presidential Crisis: View from the Press," presented by The Globe, the five colleges, and the journalistic studies program at UMass.

Five College Public Radio Station WFCR (88.5 FM) will broadcast the talk live. Following the talk the speakers will meet with the public at a coffee hour.

Since 1965 he has been a national political reporter in Washington, covering Congress, White House politics, and the inner workings of the bureaucracy. He has also written articles for "The Atlantic," "The Reporter," "The New York Times Review," "The New Republic," "Village Voice," and others.

Robert Healy, in addition to being Globe executive editor, covers the political scene in Washington and Boston. His awards include the Associated Press Award for newswriting, and a Pulitzer Prize team award for his part in investigative stories about Francis X. Morrissey's qualifications for a Federal judgeship.

Remaining lectures in the series will be Nov. 25 at Amherst College, and Dec. 9 at UMass.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Even a superficial effort to comprehend the relationship between events on the celestial scene and events here on earth yields knowledge that is indispensable to this week's success. A willingness to cooperate on the one hand and the patience, peace of mind, and self-assurance necessary to allow each individual his own idiosyncracies on the other: these -- though they appear at first to be contradictory attitudes leading to conflicting modes of behavior — are the keys to career advancement, social recognition, and a productive involvement in all leisure-time activities. This is an excellent week for eating your cake and having it too, for there is a little to stand in the way of giving and getting simultaneously — which is not the same at all (if you're careful!) as losing with the right hand what you gain with the left.

Know your own talents, employ them with timing and finesse, and all should end well this week. Ignore signs of fatigue, physical or emotional, at your own risk. During the early part of the week, concentrate largely upon your own ends; later on, you would do well to be generous, even expansive, with your time as you begin to take an interest in and to help others gain — or regain — goals of their own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — Any plans initiated by associates can be trusted to be well-laid. Even so, you would do well to investigate possibilities on your own. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — There is no need to be alarmed if you are not in the driver's seat this week. You can manage to reach your goals if you are careful to follow directions.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan. 5) — So long as co-workers exhibit mutual respect, there is no need for you to interfere in their differences. Live up to a reputation for being easy-going. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Take care that you don't become overly eager to push your career into a higher gear. Take your time, especially early in the week.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Be encouraging to those who would do things in their own time and way. You can expect others to make fewer demands on you toward week's end. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — A week for living and letting live. Don't be disheartened should a loved one not take advantage of a situation leading to gain. Build another's confidence.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 5) — Most important to success this week is a direct approach. Know what you want — and make an effort to communicate your desire to others. (March 6-March 20) — Don't allow trivia to take over, especially early in the week when you should be making workable plans. Disregard another's efforts to change your mind.

ARIES (March 21-April 4) — You might do well to consider reorganizing your life on two levels — where your career is concerned and socially. Timing is important now. (April 5-April 19) — Take notice of the individual as well as of the group; otherwise, you may find yourself pleasing on the whole but out of luck when it comes to advancement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 5) — Determine your goal for the week as early as you can. Care is vital to the successful conclusion of operations being tried for the first time. (May 6-May 20) — Exchange ideas with others in your field as often as necessary early in the week. Later on, you would do well to try to accomplish goals on your own.

GEMINI (May 21-June 6) — With many talents to choose from, it should not be difficult for you to establish a toe-hold on the ladder of new successes this week. Be self-sufficient. (June 7-June 20) — Present projects will not be able to stave off the attack which may come if you are not able to persuade others of their usefulness.

CANCER (June 21-July 7) — If you are tactful, this week could well be the one which sees you on your way to longed-for goals by unexpected advantages where your career is concerned. (July 8-July 22) — You can be responsible for the raising of another's opinion of himself. Ennoble yourself and your career at the same time. Move quickly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 7) — It is your attitude which makes or breaks you this week. Approach any new project with a willingness to cooperate completely with the knowledgeable few. (Aug. 8-Aug. 22) — Consider first of all the welfare of the individual. Groups concerns come in for their share of attention — but only after each member is seen to.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — You would do well to let the group fend for itself — at least for the first few days of the week. There is much to be said for striking out on your own. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Short-term goals suit the tenor of the week better than long-term ones. Don't allow yourself the luxury of forgetting what you're about.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Work at home must supplement work on the employment scene if you are to know the high degree of success the week holds out to you. Divide time wisely. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Take care that doing too much at the beginning of the week does not leave you too exhausted to do enough at the end of it. Guard your energy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — Should you be engaged in rearranging your life on any level, take care that you don't discard the basics. Keep a substantial backlog of essentials. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — You should be able to increase your earning potential considerably if you are careful not to put all your eggs in one basket. Be generous.

Michigan State staggers Ohio State; upsets dominate top 20

Goodbye, East Lansing, Mich.

And for Ohio State, it's goodbye National Championship too — unless the Tigers of Auburn can pull off some sort of small miracle on Nov. 29.

But then, after the happenings in college football this past weekend, even the smallest of miracles would have to seem possible. For as unbelievable as No. 1 Ohio State's 16-13 upset loss to Michigan State might have seemed, who would've ever believed that four other top 10 teams plus a pair of bowl-bound outfits would also meet defeat on the same Saturday so late in the season?

But first things first:

It was, without a question, the upset of the season at East Lansing, Mich., where the unheralded Spartans of Michigan State toppled mighty Ohio State on Levi Jackson's 88-yard to ramble with time running short in the final period. The Buckeyes' desperate drive to the one as the clock ran out only made the dramatics of the day more memorable.

Now Ohio State, sure to drop in the ratings, must beat Michigan on Nov. 23 and in turn hope for an Auburn win over Alabama on the 29th if they are to again gain college football's highest ranking.

The Crimson tide, tied for no. 2 with Michigan, immediately assumed the role of opportunists by "whomping up" on LSU, 30-0, behind the quarterbacking of Richard Todd and the running of Willie Shelby. "We're No. 1!" The capacity crowd at Birmingham chanted, and maybe they're right.

Michigan, which still must face Ohio State at Columbus for the Big Ten title showdown on Nov. 23, struggled past Illinois 14-6 on 146 yards and one TD from Gordon Bell. And with Joe Washington leading the onslaught with 143 yards and one TD, Oklahoma ripped Missouri 37-0.

Fourth-rated Texas A&M was shocked by Southern Methodist 18-14 at Dallas when the Mustangs' Rickey Wesson scored one TD and Wayne Morris rushed for 112 yards to overcome a pair of scores from the Aggies' Jerry Honore.

About the only consolation for Texas A&M was tenth-ranked Texas' surprising 34-24 loss to Baylor which was accomplished through three second half TD drives engineered by Bears' quarterback Neal Jeffrey. Texas A&M and Texas still have a Nov. 29 shoot-out upcoming, but Baylor, with only one Southwest Conference loss, now looms as the favorite for the Cotton Bowl berth.

No. 6 Penn State, likewise believed headed for the Cotton Bowl, suffered its lumps too, falling 12-7 to North Carolina State when the Wolfpack's Stan Fritts ran for one TD and passed 22 yards to Pat Hodance for the game-winner.

Sugar Bowl-bound Florida, ranked seventh, suffered a bout of complacency when unranked (but still hopeful) Georgia posted an upset 17-16 victory behind Matt Robinson's game-winning two-point conversion pass. The Gators, like Ohio State, fell short in the waning seconds of play when quarterback Don Gaffney was unable to complete a two-point conversion pass to Jimmy Dubose.

Elsewhere among the top-rated teams, No. 8 Nebraska got by Iowa State 23-13 on a pair of short TD runs by Freshman Monte Anthony; No. 9 Auburn, headed for the Gator Bowl, squeezed past Sun Bowl-bound Mississippi State 24-20 as Soph Secdrick McIntyre scored a pair of TDs, one for 54 yards.

Eleventh ranked Southern California neared another Rose Bowl berth by humbling Stanford 34-10; No. 12 Miami of Ohio, due for another Tangerine Bowl trip, increased its unbeaten streak to 21 games by nipping Kent State 19-17 on a 39-yard field goal by David Draudt, and No. 15 Maryland amassed 511 yards on the ground and 328 through the air in crushing Villanova 41-0.

Portland Storm; play without pay?

PORTLAND [AP] — The Portland Storm, the Cinderella team of the World Football League, is still beating the bushes for a fairy godmother. No paupers need apply.

The team's players haven't been paid in six weeks, and the administrative staff hasn't drawn a check since Sept. 15.

Storm players are without subsistence money in many cases. Team owner Bob Harris said Sunday in a telephone interview with The Oregonian that he didn't want to talk with money.

A Portland businessman attended Sunday's practice and took the team to lunch at a restaurant. A team official said other meal donations are needed.

Manager Ron Mix said he is trying to raise money from any source to take care of the players' day-to-day needs.

The team was supposed to have been paid $50,000 for moving its last scheduled home game to Orlando, Fla., but the money hasn't been received.

Harris said he doesn't expect to get it. "It looked like a bit of a con job," he said. "My suggestion was not to play until we saw the money."

Negotiations apparently still are in progress for a new buyer for the Orlando team. But nobody seems to know who the buyers are, so Portland can't confront them about the promised $50,000.

"I don't think there is a buyer," Harris said. "I think it was a ripoff to take the gate and give us no money."

At the Orlando game, which Portland lost 23-0, the Storm players were given $7.50 each for meals. It was their only pay for the whipping they took.

The Storm is to play its last game of the year Wednesday in Honolulu, and players say they'll play — pay or no pay.

Player representative Sam Silas said, "We have decided that we will play the game. At the present time there is no talk of a possible boycott."

Pats stunned by Browns, 21-14

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — The Cleveland Browns scored 14 points in the first two minutes of play Sunday and got the winning score on a four-yard run by Ken Brown in the final quarter to upset the New England Patriots 21-14.

Greg Pruitt, who was switched to running back by New England Coach Chuck Fairbanks when both were at Oklahoma, opened the game with an 88-yard kickoff return for a touchdown.

Tom Darden, who later intercepted two passes, grabbed a Mack Herron fumble on the Pats next possession and returned it 29 yards for the score that gave the Browns an early 14-0 lead.

Cleveland's offense was dormant all afternoon, even on the winning score. Pruitt gave them the ball at the New England 46 with a 25-yard punt return and a personal foul and an offside call against the Pats on Don Cockroft's field goal attempt moved the ball to the New England four-yard line.

Brown took Brian Sipe's handoff and zipped four yards through a gaping hole in the New England line.

New England Quarterback Jim Plunkett was intercepted four times for only the second time in his career. The only other time Plunkett had four passes picked off was in 1971 when the Browns again were the culprits.

Cleveland is now 2-0 in its career series with the Patriots. The Patriots got an early idea of how their day was to go when Pruitt took the opening kickoff at the 12, flashed up the left side and cut cross field unmolested.

After New England got the ball at its own 10 on the next series, they could hold the ball only three plays before a completion to Herron at the 29 turned into Darden's touchdown.

The Patriots' only sustained offensive drive came midway through the second period when they ground out 54 yards in 11 plays, climaxed by the first of Sam Cunningham's two one-yard runs.

New England tied the game 12:25 into the second period after Herron returned a Cockroft punt 39 yards to the Browns' 35. The big play for the punchless Patriots was a pass interference call that took the ball to the Cleveland one yard line.

Cunningham plunged over on the next play with his 11th touchdown of the season to tie the team's single-season scoring mark.

Dolphins rip Saints 21-0; tie for first

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — Bob Griese threw first half touchdown passes, two of them to tight end Jim Mandich, and the Miami defense blunted New Orleans' only two scoring threats Sunday, shutting out the Saints 21-0 and putting the defending World Champion Dolphins into a tie for first place in the AFC East.

Griese hit Mandich for touchdowns of three yards with 8:25 left in the first quarter and two yards with 30 seconds left in the second quarter. He threw a 12-yard scoring pass to Nat Moore with 48 seconds remaining in the first period.

The Saints threatened to score twice, but a Dolphin interception stoppted one drive on the Miami seven and New Orleans simply didn't have the steam to put it over from the one-yard line on its second threat.

On Miami's first possession of the game, the Dolphins marched 54 yards in nine plays for their touchdown on the three-yarder from Griese to Mandich. The touchdown was set up by runs of 14 and 11 yards by Ben Malone early in the drive and a 12-yard pass from Griese to Paul Warfield.

Miami made it 14-0 when Griese passed 12 yards up the middle to Moore. The Dolphins took the ball on their own 46 and went in for the touchdown in eight plays.

With 30 seconds left in the second period, Griese passed two yards to Mandich in the left corner of the end zone for a 21-0 halftime lead.

Griese finished the game with 10 completions in 15 attempts for 93 yards.

Stabler, Raiders maul Lions, 35-13

OAKLAND [AP] - Quarterback Ken Stabler hit wide receiver Cliff Branch with touchdown passes of 36 and 15 yards and fullback Marv Hubbard roared for two other scores as the Oakland Raiders crushed the Detroit Lions 35-13 Sunday.

Stabler hit Branch in the end zone with a 15-yard toss in the second period and arched a 36-yard scoring toss to the AFC's leading receiver in the third period.

Stabler hit 20 of 24 attempts for 248 yards before he was relieved by backup quarterback Larry Lawrence in the last period.

Hubbard barrelled over the five for his first touchdown, capping a 66-yard first-quarter drive.

His second touchdown came on a 20-yard third-quarter blast that left a trail of Detroit defenders in his wake.

The victory dashed Detroit's hopes for a 10-4 record, a pledge the team had made after narrowly losing their first four games. They are now 4-5. The victory enabled the Raiders to keep their 3½-game lead in the AFC West.

Jets win in overtime 26-20 against Giants

NEW HAVEN, Conn. [UPI] --Joe Namath threw a five-yard touchdown pass to Emerson Boozer at 6:53 of sudden death overtime Sunday as the New York Jets snapped a six-game losing streak with a 26-20 victory over the arch-rival New York Giants.

Namath, who scored the tying touchdown late in the fourth period, moved the Jets from their own 25 in just seven plays and hit boozer all alone in the left corner of the end zone. The victory was the Jets' second against seven losses and saddled the Giants with the same record.

It was the second regular-season sudden-death overtime since the NFL instituted the rule this year and was the first victory recorded in overtime, as the Denver Broncos and the Pittsburgh Steelers remained tied after the 15-minute extra period in the first game.

Earlier in the overtime, Pete Gogolak missed a 42-yard field goal attempt for the Giants.

Houston ruins Bills, 21-9

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. [UPI] — Vic Washington ran in from nine yards out in the third quarter Sunday as the Houston Oilers held the Buffalo Bills to only three field goals and upset the American Conference Division leaders 21-9.

The loss ended a six-game Buffalo winning streak and left the Bills with a 7-2 record. The surprising Oilers intercepted Buffalo quarterback Joe Ferguson six times as the Bills were unable to score a touchdown.

Buffalo lost running back O. J. Simpson with a sprained ankle in the fourth quarter and wide receiver J.D. Hill a short time later, also with a leg injury.

The Oilers had a 14-6 halftime lead, and the Bills closed it to 14-9 when John Leypoldt kicked a 22-yard field goal at 9:28 of the third quarter.

The Oilers began a drive from their own 39 late in the quarter, getting the ball at the Buffalo nine on a pass interference call on Dwight Harrison. On the next play, Washington swept around the right side for a touchdown to put the game out of reach.

Houston took a quick 14-0 lead in the first quarter on a 13-yard run by Willie Rodgers and a 25-yard touchdown pass from Dan Pastorini to Mack Alston.

Anderson leads Cinci

CINCINNATI [UPI] — Ken Anderson set NFL records for consecutive pass completions and highest passing efficiency Sunday and seldom-used Ed Williams scored two touchdowns to pace the fired-up Cincinnati Bengals to a 17-10 victory over the Pittsburgh Steelers Sunday.

Anderson, who had completed his final eight passes last weekend against Baltimore, hit his first eight throws Sunday for 16 straight completions, bettering the previous record of 15 shared by Joe Namath and Len Dawson.

Anderson, whose accurate passing arm has been the key to the Bengals' offense all season, hit 20 of 22 passes Sunday for 227 yards. His 90 per cent accuracy mark broke the record of 86.2 (25 for 29) set by Ken Stabler last year in Baltimore.

WHY COMMIT YOURSELF TO THE PRIESTHOOD?

Why be a priest? Certainly, in times as difficult as these we live in, being a priest is a lot harder today than it was in years past.

And committing oneself to anything for any amount of time seems to be one of the conflicts of our modern age. But the priesthood is a challenge. A big one.

Today, more than ever before in history, men and women, young and old, are searching for religious meaning, for withdrawal from isolation and alienation to joyful community experiences, for Good News in the midst of discouragement and hope in the place of pessimism.

The Paulists are trying to minister to these needs. As a contemporary religious community serving the American people, our mission is to communicate the love of Christ to people.

Every Paulist is a missionary: in the pulpit or the parish house . . . on campus or in the inner-city . with the spoken or the printed word . . he is communicating to people. His mission is to all of America. His message is love; the love of Christ for all people.

It isn't easy but the Paulist welcomes commitment. Welcomes the challenge. If you are interested in the Paulist way of life, send for the Paulist Papers.

UMass seeks New England cross country supremacy

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

New England's two best cross country teams, both nationally ranked, will meet today in Boston's Franklin Park, where about thirty teams will be competing for the New England championship. Whether or not the UMass runners retain possession of the New England title, against a powerful Providence team that is ranked ninth in the country, depends on the performances of the number four, five and six runners.

Coach Ken O'Brien pointed out that regardless of the outcome, Tom Wilson, Devin Croft, Tom Maguire and Cliff Staples will have to come up with solid performances in order to fill the critical fourth, fifth and sixth spots on the team. The results of today's meet will determine the success of the team in next Monday's IC4A Championships and the NCAA meet.

The harriers have had no problems up front, as co-captains Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin have combined with super sophomore John McGrail to provide the needed consistency in the top three positions.

O'Brien commented that Thomas, Gillin and McGrail are "in tremendous shape", and although the rest of the team is stronger than it was for the early season confrontation with Providence, the big question is this: Are the other four runners close enough to the frontrunners?

Wilson is now a proven fourth man, but none of the other team members have been aggressive enough to break out of the pack and challenge Wilson. Should that happen today or in the next two weeks, UMass won't have to worry about Providence, but rather the big names in cross country-UTEP, Oregon, Western Kentucky and Washington State.

Going into the meet, Mike O'Shea of Providence is favored to keep the New England individual title, which he earned a year ago with a time of 23:44--the third fastest in Franklin Park history. The Friars' leader is running as well, if not better this year, but what may be the fastest field of runners in meet history, reduces the possibility of O'Shea running away with the meet as he did in 1973.

It is expected that the Friars and UMass will battle for team honors, but Northeastern, which won the Greater Boston meet, cannot be overlooked. The Huskies are led by Mike Buckley, Bob and John Flora, Mike Hickey and Howie Scribner.

If the weather is favorable, there inevitably will be some fantastic times. Four runners have already run the Franklin Park course in under 24 minutes this season. A year ago no one had broken the 24 minute barrier before the New Englands and only two completed the five-mile layout in less than 24:20. This year there are twelve runners under 24:20, most of whom are from the expected contenders.

John Flora of NU has the fastest time to date, a 23:55, with teammate Buckley one second behind. Yankee Conference foes Randy Thomas and George Reed are the only other harriers to drop below 24 minutes this year. Thomas ran a 23:57 to capture first place in the 26-31 loss to Providence five weeks ago, and Reed was clocked in 23:59 at the Codfish Bowl Championships.

O'Shea has run a 24:03, while fellow Irish teammates Kevin Treacy and John Redmond ran 24:05 and 24:08. Gillin and McGrail both ran the course in 24:09, but Providence captain Tom Smith is only one second behind, with a previous time of 24:10. The New England runner-up of 1973, Charlie Duggan, recorded a 24:17 earlier this season and college division All-American John Bradford of Brandeis, also ran the course in 24:17.

Providence has the advantage on paper, and UMass has yet to prove its ability to run as a six or seven man team. For the Minutemen runners, defending the New England title is more or less secondary to developing the number four, five and six spots, which will be critical for the remainder of the season. The harriers can only hope to run the best they possibly can, the first step in a series of tough races that includes the IC4A's and climaxes with the NCAA Championships.

Blom gains 2nd place

By JOHN BOCK
Sports Staff

UMass wrestling co-captain Cliff Blom garnered second place honors in the 158 pound weight class at the Fourth Annual Colgate Open Wrestling Tournament held at Colgate University November 8 and 9.

Blom wrestled four bouts to get into the finals where he lost a tight 6-5 decision to Tyrone Neal, defending Atlantic Coast Conference champion from the University of Maryland. In his first four bouts Blom decisioned all his opponents except for his first round match where he won by default after a first period "knockout". The two wrestlers met heads and Blom had the harder head. The other wrestler was out cold on the mat. In the semi-finals he decisioned Binghamton State's Wayne Weller in an overtime bout to gain the finals.

The finals match looked to be Neal's from the outset as he went right out and took Blom down and managed to control him for most of the first period. Then on advice from UMass Coach Homer Barr, Blom executed a short sit-in and escaped and took Neal down. The eventual margin was an escape by Neal in the second period.

The heavyweight class was won by a participant wearing a UMass uniform, but not officially a team member. Carl Dambman, New England Heavyweight Champ in 1971 and 1972 and holder of the most pins record at UMass, continued his pinning way as he won the Most Falls in the Least Amount of Time trophy. He pinned four opponents in an aggregate time of 6:26.

Dambman, a 1974 UMass grad, has accepted an offer from Athletes in Action Eastern Wrestling Team to join them in January as their heavyweight. AIA is an extension of Campus Crusade for Christ, International and fields teams in basketball, weight lifting, track, and gymnastics in addition to its East and West wrestling teams. The two wrestling teams wrestle some of the toughest schools in the nation every year and place very high in both the National AAU Championships and the United States Wrestling Federation Championships.

UMass drops third straight

"It was a halluva call," said a despondent MacPherson. "I'm sick of talking about officials all the time, that's not my job."

From then on the game was anticlimactic. Holy Cross got two quick field goals from Jerry Kelley, capitalizing on a fumble by Mark Tripucka and an interception at a Peter Colton pass which marked Colton's second and last play in the game.

The game was strange in many ways. It differed from other losses by the Minutemen in that Holy Cross blow out to a 14-0 lead on two Mark Cannon touchdown runs of 44 and 3 yards before the game was twelve minutes old.

Pat's UMass gained 200 yards passing in the game and it marked the first time this year that the rushing attack garnered fewer yerds than the passing attack....Jim Torrance actually gained more yards himself than the UMass team did. He had 116 yards in 24 carries, while the team picked up 114 yards met, due to thirty yards lesssby Mark Tripucka. That still leaves UMass 24 yards away from breaking the all-time UMass season rushing record set in 1969. Provost's interception the 25th of his career tied him for second place on the all-time NCAA list with Tom Curtins (1967-68) of Michigan.

Dennis Kiernan came out of nowhere to pick off a Bob Morton pass at the 50 and return it early in the second quarter to the Holy Cross 37, setting up an eight play drive which culminated in a 7-yard touchdown rum by Jim Torrance making it 14-7 at the half.

After Provost's controversial touchdown and the two Kelley field goals made it 27-7 at the end of three periods, UMass tried valiantly to come back but came up short, with untimely fumbles doing them in yet again.

Tripucka fumbled on the Holy Cross 15 after running for a first down five plays into the quarter. But at 5:48 UMass finally got on the board when Lee Harriman playing with a heavily taped left shoulder caught a 22 yard pass fourth down pass making it 27-14.

The Crusaders then got a third Kelley field goal after a 50-yard drive, which made it 30-14. UMass came right back to make it 30-20 on a Torrance plunge from the one, but time and luck, neither of which were UMass possessions, doomed the Minutemen to their third-straight loss.

B's defeat Flames, 4-3

BOSTON [UPI]- Two third-period goals gave the Bruins a come-from-behind 4-3 victory over the Atlanta Flames Sunday night.

The goals, Phil Esposito's 15th tally of the season and Wayne Cashman's fourth, enabled the Bruins to erase a 3-2 deficit. It extended their home unbeaten streak to eight games and kept them five points behind the Buffalo Sabres in the NHL's division four race.

It was unholy! Minutemen axed 30-20 by Crusaders

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

It was something new.

Like a situation comedy looking for something different to keep itself going, the UMass football Minutemen came up with something new in their 1974 saga, a saga which each week tends more and more to the tragic. But after Saturday's 30-20 loss to the Holy Cross Crusaders, one has to wonder whether the Minutemen have become unwilling members of the Theatre of the Absurd.

The ingredients which had gone into their previous four losses continued to be gridiron poison to UMass. There were key fumbles (4) key interceptions (2), and as has become the rule rather than the exception in '74, they did the Minutemen in at Fitten Field in Worcester.

But no matter how costly those errors were, the turning point of the game was effected not by a UMass mistake, nor by an opportunistic Holy Cross player, but by a deux ex machina in the person of Donald M. Cody of Tufts University, a name which for a long time may cause sleepless nights to UMass football players and coaches.

Let's set the stage. With the score 14-7 in the third quarter for Holy Cross, UMass had a fourth and eight at the Holy Cross 34 yard line. Since a field goal from that distance (51 yards) would have been a miracle and a punt would have been meaningless, the Minutemen decided to go for the first down.

Mark Tripucka's pass attempt for Gary Mika was tipped by Crusader linebacker Bill Campbell into the hands of John Provost who returned it from his own 24 to paydirt. But a flag on the play for pass interference gave UMass the ball first and ten at the HC 24 wiping out Provost's pickoff. At least that's what everybody thought.

Referee Cody and his entourage got together after the teams had been lined up, and suddenly, in the worst tradition of science fiction, Cody's arms went up signalling a touchdown bringing UMass Coach Dick MacPherson onto the field in a fury, but not even his sweet nothings could change Cody's mind.

"I asked him what happened and he said that the guy who'd called the interference didn't see the tip," said MacPherson in a post-mortem discussion. "I don't remember ever seeing a play called like that," added the UMass coach.

The officials ruled that since the ball was tipped before the pass interference occured, that made it a "free ball", but whether the ball was tipped before or after it was irrelevant. What hurt was that the teams had already been lined up for a play when the original call of pass interference was changed, but more importantly that the call was changed in the first place. The last time a referee changed a call must have been in the days when beer cost a nickel a pint?

Booters batter UNH 4-2

By BILL DOYLE

The UMass soccer team whipped the University of New Hampshire, Saturday, 4-2, to stay in contention for a tournament bid.

The team is expected to find out today if it was selected for the New England Division I tournament.

UConn and Brown seem to have two of the four bids wrapped up with UMass, Bridgeport and Harvard in contention for the other two. Bridgeport trounced Springfield, 3-1, Saturday, and Harvard shutout Princeton, 2-0, to stay in the race.

The win over UNH gave UMass a 8-3-1 record for the season, breaking the school record for most victories.

"All the hard work really paid off," Coach Al Rufe said.

The booters overwhelmed UNH, with the final score of 4-2 not being a true indication of the complete domination by UMass, especially in the first half.

Just to show how much UMass dominated, consider these facts:

1. UMass outshot UNH 21-1 in the first half and 35-11 for the entire game.

2. The number of corner kicks was also in UMass' favor by 7-1 in the first half and 12-2 overall.

3. UNH penetrated deep into Minutemen territory only once in the first twenty minutes of the game and that one time being aided by two calls against UMass for tripping.

4. The score wouldn't have been as close as 4-2 but UMass' Mike Parsons actually hit in one of the UNH goals.

5. Tom Coburn had a goal disallowed because of a handball.

6. Coburn was sent in on a breakaway but was tripped up from behind. A referee was right on the play but made no call.

7. Numerous excellent UMass scoring opportunities were missed, including early in the game when two Minutemen missed a tip-in on Mohammad Othman's pass through the goal box.

8. The UNH goalie also kept the score down with some excellent saves, including one on a shot by Othman off a direct kick from twenty feet out.

9. Buddy Butler, the UMass goalie, was only forced to make three saves.

UMass opened the scoring at 19:35 of the first half, when Tom Coburn hooked in a direct kick from the goalie's far left. It hit the post and bounded in the upper left hand corner over the goalie's outstretched hands.

Less than two minutes later Bill Spyker put UMass up, 2-0. Jim Vollinger's direct kick bounded off a wall of UNH players in front of the Wildcat goal and Spyker dribbled it through the defense and fired a low shot to the goalie's left at 21:23.

UMass seemed to try and sit on its lead after Spyker's goal and the UNH offense finally started rolling. Medhi Nassar made it 2-1 when he took a long pass through the Minutemen defense all alone and shot it past Butler.

The booters survived the UNH scare and put the game on ice with two breakaway goals late in the half.

Coburn upped his career goals scored record to 37 when Bob McChesney hit him with a pass deep in Wildcat territory. Coburn faked to the left and sent a slow shot past the goalie's right.

With less than two minutes in the half, Bob McChesney scored on a rebound. He was sent in all alone but elected to pass back to Coburn. Coburn's shot was stopped but his momentum carried him into the UNH goalie. McChesney chipped the ball over the fallen two to complete the UMass scoring.

Coach Rufe cleared the bench in the second half. The second stanza was almost uneventful except the UNH score. Mike Parsons, while trying to stop a slow rolling shot towards an unguarded UMass goal, actually hit it in. Medhi Nassar received credit for the score at 41:35.

UMass' Tom Coburn dribbles by a U.N.H. defender in action Saturday. Coburn scored two goals pacing the Minutemen to a 4-2 victory. The win brings hope for a first-ever NCAA New England post-season tourney bid.

Federal education commission recommends student bargaining

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

A federal education commission has decided to recommend to HEW that students be guaranteed the right to unionize and bargain collectively with administrators.

"The commission will make the recommendation this spring. It will be discussed throughout next year," according to Lawrence Magid a member of the commission from UMass.

It is expected, by the commission, that the recommendation will be presented to Congress, so they can vote on legislation giving students this right.

The Commission, called the Study Commission on Undergraduate Education and the Education of Teachers, was started by the U.S. Office of Education to investigate various aspects of higher education and make recommendations to the Office.

Educators from throughout the nation make up the commission. They include Robert Mac Vicar, President of Oregon State University; Dean Corrigan, Dean of the College of Ed. at the University of Vermont; and Victor Alicea, Chancellor Universidad Boricua.

The recommendation was made as the result of a discussion document submitted by Lawrence Magid and accepted by the commission.

The discussion document states: "Students should play a direct role in questions which affect their educational, financial, or career interests. This should include...participation at the collective bargaining table to be sure that decisions made by non-student parties or interests do not restrict or interfere with the rights of students."

UMass town meeting

Students support warrant

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

There were an estimated 600 students who attended the SGA town meeting last night to pass seven specific demands that encompassed residential life, the Campus Center Board of Governors and autonomy of the Student Activities Tax Fund.

This was the first UMass town meeting held at this University. The number of students attending dropped off to a scattered 100 at the time the meeting adjourned.

Rick Savini, President of SGA, who opened the meeting said, "Everybody has a right to vote here. There isn't any time to make a speech, but everybody knows why we are here."

Each motion of the warrant was separately read, discussed and voted upon.

The seven specific demands passed to be sent directly to Chancellor Bromery included:

1) the institution of a student Residential Life Governing Board with administrative staff answering to the Board; an end to mandatory dorm residence by September, 1975; an end to mandatory meal tickets by September, 1975; an end to University opposition to rent control in the town of Amherst and surrounding areas.

2) that the Office of Residential Life to incorporate the creation of additional student-run dormitories; that the dormitories be given authority to appropriate funds obtained by housing fees in whatever manner they seem to be appropriate, with the requirement of supporting mandatory maintenance, mortgage and debt-free service fees; the right of student-run dormitories to review the budgets of said dormitories.

3) an action on complaints made by residents of Hamlin House which include: campuswide priority in room assignments for Spring, 1975; that the Office of Residential Life provide rent subsidies for those Hamlin Residents who are forced to move to a higher rent dormitory; and the adoption of a systems approach to this problem.

4) that the Residential Life Committee to determine policy guidelines and enforcement procedures for a Student Code of Conduct be abolished and that any further encroachment on student's power be stopped immediately.

5) that the Campus Board of Governors to have complete authority in determining policies and practices of the Campus Center and Campus Center Staff including the authority to hire and-or fire all professional administrative personnel within this staff, such as Director, Business Manager and Department Heads.

6) that the Health Fee be established as optional for all registered commuting students by September, 1975; those who chose not to pay the Health Fee, should they later decide to use such services shall pay for services provided.

7) establishment of complete financial autonomy restricted only by the Massachusetts laws as interpreted by a court of law.

While most of the discussion focused around the demands, the issue of the necessity of a student union, and a motion to demand quality education which was tabled were presented.

Primary discussion was on the issue of ending mandatory dorm residence. Larry Gendron of the Commuter Assembly said "the end to mandatory dorm residence is wholly dependent on getting a system of rent control in Amherst." He said without this control, rents will skyrocket and married students, and low socio-economic students will be "priced right out of the market."

John Pepi, of the Student Organizing Project answered him saying that is a chance that students have to take. "You don't sit tight and let the landlords do it. That is why there are tenants unions and rent control. There is no reason to let 18-20 year olds live in dormitories." He also mentioned the possibility of a lawsuit if rent control cannot be immediately obtained.

Food Services director sought

By MARY L. BROWN
Staff Correspondent

The search for a new Food Services Director is now under way under the coordination of Matt Burns, chairman of the Food Services Governing Board and Marjorie Lenn, the assistant director of Residential Life, of which Food Services is a part.

The job has been filled for the past year by Art Warren, who will remain acting director until the position can be filled. This search is an involved operation, requiring placement of ads on a national basis. In addition, hundreds of agencies have been contacted by Ms. Lenn in regard to finding a qualified, competent person to fill the job.

All candidates will be subject to review by a 16-member panel, composed of eight students and eight administrators. The administrators have been chosen on the basis that the reviewing board must have experts in various fields in order to insure that qualified candidates will not be ignored. Any student may apply for a position on this reviewing board by picking up an application at the Student Senate Office, 420 Student Union, Burns said. The deadline has been extended to Wednesday in the hope that more student interest will be displayed. The final committee will be called at the end of next week, he said.

The Director of University Food Services maintains a full time staff of over 300 employees who provide a board plan to over 9,000 students. In addition, there are over 450 students employed by this department. Facilities include four dining commons, three snack bars, three retail stores, a catering service, summer and intercession meals, and a complete bakery. Each week, over 90,000 meals are prepared and served.

The deadline for applications for Director is November 21. However, Burns said, two complications could occur. First, not enough applications will be received and secondly, not enough women or minority candidates will apply. Because the University is Federally funded, a certain number of women and minority members must apply. It is hoped, however, that the search will be completed by intercession, said Lenn.

SOP-sponsored meeting

Rent hikes, breakdown of fees unfair

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

Debt services, inflation, and increased enrollment were blamed for high dormitory rents in the University at a meeting of students and administrators sponsored by the Student Organizing Project (SOP) last Thursday night.

Among the speakers at the meeting to discuss the Financial Structure of the University were State Representative Jim Collins (D-Amherst); assistant director of Administrative Services Roger Cruff; and two representatives from the University of Connecticut.

Cruff fielded questions from SOP members concerning residential life and the dorm situation, and why rents are so high. Cruff said students have to work with the "reality of the situation. There is a total set of funds to work with."

He added that debt services constitute where a major portion of the money goes. "There are debt services, rising utility costs and the debt service for Married Student Housing. It's dangerous to look at all this from one vantage point," Cruff said.

Jack Littlefield Director of Planning added remarks concerning custodial care, which he said "adds to costs." He cited the fact that there has been an innrease of students from 6,000 to 20,000 over the 1960's which increased the need for housing a great number of students in a small area close to campus. All these are contributing factors according to Littlefield.

Ken Banning and Steve Krapata of UConn presented dorm and food-services situation at UConn to the meeting.

There are 64 dorms on that campus, each autonomous, wherein the University is the landlord leasing the buildings to students groups. Each dorm has its own dining area. The students responsible take care of hiring personnel to work in the dorm, what their rate of pay will be, etc.

Banning and Krapata said "there is a mutual trust between academic and student circles, which is probably attributable to our past years of success."

Collins spoke on the issue of State Legislature's relief on the University bonds, and the potential of rent control off-campus. "The State government vests authority for what happens on campus. The Board of Trustees is collectively responsible for what happens on campus," Collins said.

On the issue of mandatory housing on-campus Collins stated that the best way to remove the requirement would be to work through the trustees, Collins said he was in favor of rent control and would like to see each city or town be able to institute it if desired. Collins added that the "University and administration must get together or in four or five years we'll still be talking about the same things."

SOP members John Pepi and Doug Phelps revealed figures of what it costs the average UMass student to live in a dorm. In 1969 it cost $100 per month for a room (actually ½ room) to live in Southwest. This year it costs $200 per room, they said, an increase of 100 per cent in five years.

The comparative figures for off-campus housing were $140 for a one-bedroom apartment in '69. This year the figure is $180, an increase of 23 per cent over a five year period, according to Pepi and Phelps.

Seventy per cent of a student's rent fee each semester goes to pay off the bonds, according to Pepi. And the remaining 30 per cent goes to paying salaries etc., he said. He noted that bondholders of the University are members of the top 1.5 per cent of wealthholders in the country.

Hamlin residents rally for support

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

Approximately seventy Hamlin House residents rallied outside their dorm last night to protest the Administration's decision concerning their future residence on campus next semester.

The decision, which was made last week, gives priority in room choosing to Hamlin residents after Day 1 of room choosing only on a percentage basis. This would mean, for example, if the Northeast area houses 7 per cent of all students living on campus that the Hamlin residents would be given priority on 7 per cent of all available rooms in NE.

This is not in accordance with one of the demands listed in a memo last week sent to administrators endorsed by the Rents & Fees committee.

The Hamlin residents have also added two more demands to the three previous ones in the memo.

The mob, many of whom were carrying signs protesting the administration and false promises made to them, proceeded from Hamlin House to a meeting of the Rents & Fees (R&F) Committee in the Campus Center. Surprised by the arrival of the angry students, R&F Committee Chairman John Marciniec turned the floor over to Ken Somers, president of Hamlin House.

"This is a precedent-making policy decision; if the students don't win now it will be an uphill battle for the SGA and students in the future. It's a coup d'etat," Somers said. Somers added that the Hamlin residents are willing to do all the work concerning their placement, as long as they have a say in where they are going to live.

After storming the R&F meeting, the group, many of whom were wearing the letters DP (displaced person) taped to their jackets headed for the UMass Town Meeting (sponsored by the SGA) to support the Hamlin motion on the Town Meeting warrant.

Prof aids food research

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

Dr. Charles R. Stumbo, a UMass professor in the department of Food Science and Nutrition, is one of the nation's leading experts in the area of food poisoning in processed food production.

"My entire scientific career has been dedicated to the improvement of the safety of foods," Stumbo said in an interview. He has had 37 years of experience with food processing, both as a part of the food industry and at several educational institutions doing research.

Stumbo's book, Thermobacteriology in Food Processing, is the result of his research concerning food sterilization. "It is the only authoritative book in the field," said Stumbo. In addition to the book, he has published over 70 articles relating to food processing in various scientific journals.

Stumbo hopes that the incidence of food poisoning will decrease because of his research. "When a person goes to buy a processed food, he should not have to worry about getting sick or dying from the consumption of it," he said.

The most dangerous form of poisoning which affects processed food is botulism. It is caused by the bacterium Botulinum which produces a deadly toxin. "Only one sixteen-millionth of a gram of pure botulinum toxin can kill a human being," said Stumbo.

Normally Botulinum grows in low-acid content foods, such as vegetables, meat, and milk. Boiling a food for 15 minutes will destroy the toxin, but Botulinum spores are very heat resistant.

Proper food sterilization is essential to stop the germination of the toxin-producing spores. "We eat the spores in our food everyday. The spores themselves are not harmful--it's the toxin that kills people," Stumbo said.

Two years ago the Food and Drug Administration wrote the good manufacturing practice regulations for low acid foods, which are now law, to help prevent botulism. Dr. Stumbo aided in the writing of these regulations.

To implement the regulatory program the F.D.A. established two sterilization process evaluation centers in the United States. One of the centers is located here at UMass under the direction of Dr. Stumbo.

Upon request from the F.D.A., manufacturers of foods must submit records of the thermal processes used in preparing their product. This information is sent to one of the evaluation centers where it is tested in respect to the adequacy of consumer safety.

During the past year the center has established over 230,000 guidelines for safe processing of all low-acid foods in the U.S. Stumbo calls the project "the most complex and exhaustive research I've done during the 37 years of my experience."

Botulism is now very rare in commercially canned products. Only four Botulism deaths in the last 50 years were the result of eating commercially canned food, according to Stumbo. Most deaths result from home canned food, or food that is handled improperly after processing.

Although botulism is rare, it is the most heat resistant form of food poisoning. Therefore, the sterilization procedures that kill Botulinum spores will also destroy less dangerous micro-organisms which may be present in the food.

Because it is so rare and so dangerous, botulism has a great psychological effect upon consumers, according to Stumbo. "If you die of botulism, you'll make the front page of every paper in the country," he said.

Also, every company whose food product has caused a botulism death has been forced out of business. Several years ago, a man died and his wife became seriously ill from botulism. The cause was a can of Bon Vivant soup which they had eaten. Dr. Stumbo was an expert witness for the F.D.A. during the long court proceedings which put the Bon Vivant company out of business.

Dr. Stumbo warns consumers never to taste any food which they suspect is contaminated. "Only taste it after boiling for at least 15 minutes to destroy the toxin," he said. Do not taste food from a can which smells bad; Botulinum bacteria produce odorous gases. Also, never buy food in a can that appears swollen by gas, or taste food when you cannot hear the can's vacuum 'pop' when opening.

Thefts, assaults plague weekend

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

Assault and battery, breaking and entering, and larcenies from unlocked dorm rooms, were among the cases covered by the UMass Police this weekend, said Captain Robert Joyce, of the department.

A UMass student received minor knife injuries when two males illegally entered her room at Pierpont dorm, Saturday night, UMass Police report.

Gilbert Williams, 19, and Mitchell R. Barre, both of Lake Pleasant, Mass., are charged with breaking and entering, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, and larceny under $100. They were arraigned at Northampton District Court, yesterday.

Williams was sentenced to twenty days in the Northampton State Hospital. Barre, who was unable to pay bail, is at the Union St. jail in Northampton.

Both cases will be continued at a later date, said Joyce.

In a continued case, UMass student, William A. Santos, previously charged with assault and battery of a female UMass student, was arraigned in court yesterday.

His case has been continued to November 19.

Students who went to sleep without locking their dorm doors, may have awaken to a surprise, last weekend, said Joyce.

Coolidge dorm was the site of four larcenies, due to unlocked dorms. The amounts of cash stolen ranged from $10 to $60.

Moore House dorm had three thefts ranging from $5 to $250.

JQA, Melville, and Pierpont were other dorms in the Southwest area with similar complaints.

Joyce said the thefts may be related, "especially because most were in the same area."

Two UMass students from JFK dorm received separate phone calls of bomb threats, Sunday at 11:45 p.m., said UMass Police. JFK's head of residence notified UMass Police, after which a search was conducted. No devices were found, Joyce said.

Larceny and vandalism of motor vehicles in UMass parking lots were numerous last weekend, said Joyce. Thefts ranged from $20 to $110. Joyce said all the cases are under investigation by the UMass Police.

Your dope might be lethal ivy

There is a rumor around campus that there may be some lethal marijuana being circulated. The grass, coming from Boston, is reportedly laced with poison ivy and if smoked in quantity could cause death.

One suspicious sample turned in on campus but not yet positively identified is described as more leafy than ground with very green leaves and brown leaves which do not appear to be of the same stock as the rest of the grass.

Anyone who comes in contact with any suspicious marijuana should contact Room to Move, which is currently working on tracking down the report.

Negotiations fail to prevent coal strike

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Coal industry contract talks limped along with little reported progress yesterday virtually assuring a miners' strike of at least two weeks beginning at midnight.

Federal officials, fearful of undoing negotiating progress already made, warily skirted the issue of government intervention should the strike last longer and threaten economic disaster.

Labor Secretary Peter J. Brennan said in television interview that the collective bargaining system should be allowed to work before government intervention.

"If we get into a battle or the government steps in before time and tries to dictate the policy, we're stepping into a real mess that could go on even longer," Brennan said.

Interior Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton made no predictions of how long the strike would last, but expressed hope for an early settlement.

AFL-CIO President George Meany, attending a White House meet of the President's labor-management committee, commented only that the strike would probably last 10 days.

Arnold Miller, president of the United Mine Workers of America, said talks were continuing bu "we are not close enough to reach agreement" and a strike of two weeks' duration was a "virtual certainty."

The contract covering some 120,000 miners who produce 70 per cent of the nation's soft coal expires at midnight and a strike was automatic under the UMW constitution, which requires contract ratification - a 10-day to two week procedure.

Miller, noting that each day's delay in reaching a settlement for union consideration adds a day to the strike, said that although there was some progress, "some progress is not enough to undo 40 years of indifference and neglect."

"The 120,000 working members of our union will mine no coal until they have a contract they can work under safely and live under with decency," he said.

"I hope for the nation's sake that the end comes soon. The coal industry in 1974 has never experienced a greater demand for coal or a more profitable future."

Watergate jurors hear Nixon tell FBI on tape to stop probe

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Richard M. Nixon apparently agreed six days after the Watergate break-in that the FBI should be directed "to stay the hell out" of one of its investigations into the break-in, according to a tape played yesterday at the Watergate cover-up trial.

Chief trial prosecutor James F. Neal played to a hushed, crowded courtroom-that included entertainer Johnny Cash-the three June 23, 1972, tapes whose disclosure last August led to Nixon's resignation.

According to transcripts prepared by the prosecutors for the aid of the jury of nine women and three men in listening to the tapes, Nixon's chief of staff H.R. Haldeman relayed the play for thwarting the FBI investigation, and Nixon responded, "um huh."

Nixon's response was omitted from the White House's transcripts released in August.

With the trial beginning its seventh week, there was this testimony:

—Lt. Gen. Vernon A. Walters, deputy director of the CIA, said he informed White House Counsel John W. Dean III that his early suggestion that the CIA should ask the FBI to halt its Mexican investigation of funds used to pay for the bugging would be of "no service to the President or the nation."

—Former acting FBI director L. Patrick Gray III said he finally told Dean during numerous conversations shortly after the break-in, "John, if there is CIA involvement that would be exposed by an FBI investigation in Mexico, they're going to have to tell me."

—Mrs. Joan Hall, former secretary to ex-White House Special Counsel Charles W. Colson and now administrative assistant to Labor Secretary Peter Brennan, said the wife of Watergate burglar E. Howard Hunt Jr. called her in August, 1972, with what Mrs. Hall considered a "semi-threat" that the burglary team was getting "very desperate" over promises that had been made but not kept.

The prosecution was expected to call witnesses Nos. 20-22 Tuesday - Herbert W. Kalmbach, formerly Nixon's personal lawyer and a fund-raiser; Frederick LaRue, a re-election aide; and Anthony Ulascewicz, who was hired to deliver hush money to the burglary team in 1972. Kalmbach and LaRue have pleaded guilty to Watergate crimes; Ulascewicz is an unindicted co-conspirator in this case.

Disabled Vietnam vets disillusioned

Two years have passed since the United States ended its role in the Vietnam ground war. But time hasn't extinguished the bitterness felt by many disabled veterans of that war.

By GORDON HANSON
Associated Press Writer
Part 1 of a 2 Part Series

DES MOINES, Iowa [AP] — Timothy Day masks his frustration behind a face half-paralyzed by an enemy bullet that tore into his cheekbone and came out behind his ear.

The 26-year-old former Marine corporal was wounded three times in Vietnam before he was 20.

He'd kept his disillusionment hidden for years, he says, but now it pours out bitterly.

"Of those who fought in Vietnam, pick anyone's death," Day challenges. "I wonder how many Americans know why that man died.

"...Why do people hate us so bad for fighting in that war?"

Day and two other disabled Vietnam veterans interviewed with him believe they have been put on the back shelf of the nation's conscience. So, apparently, do many others among the 338,851 servicemen listed by the Veterans Administration as disabled during the Vietnam era.

"They feel like they are rejected by their own peers," says Dr. Roger C. Floren, chief of the mental hygiene clinic at the VA hospital here. "They come back to their home towns and find the kids they went to school with have jobs and are married and don't want them around. They are criticized for going to war...They feel that Vietnam, being an unpopular war, no one wants to listen to them."

Day, 5 feet 11, has the rugged features of actor Charles Bronson.

"We were caught in an American bad dream, and America wants to forget it happened," he says.

"But we don't want people to forget," insists Chester Stanger, 25, a burly former Marine sergeant whose left leg was blown off when he stepped on a North Vietnam mine.

Former Army Spec. 4 Maury Rahm, 27, bearded and with long brown hair, sat quietly in a wheel chair, occasionally moving only his left arm. His other limbs are paralyzed, the result of a sniper's bullet that smashed into his skull.

"But it was worth it to me to fight there," Rahm said slowly. "My only regret is the way we pulled out of that war. We lost it. There was no peace with honor."

Day and Stanger, and to a lesser extent Rahm, resent the public attention given to the prisoners of war when they returned last year from Hanoi.

"The people cared more about the POW's who were shot down than about any of the thousands of other Vietnam veterans," says Stanger. "They threw big parties for the POWs, offered them jobs, gave them cars."

"For the dead and wounded they didn't do a thing," adds Day.

Thousands of other veterans share this anger toward the POW, says Dr. Peter Bourne, teacher of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School, a White House consultant on drug abuse, a man who spent a year in Vietnam during the war and since then has published papers on the problems of the returning combat veteran.

"I not only understand but share their bitterness because, having been there myself, the idea that a POW contributed that much more really got to me...The disabled veteran doesn't necessarily want to be treated as a hero. He just wants recognition for the horrendous experience he has been through, and some consideration when he comes back for a job. There comes a resentment for having been wounded in a war this country didn't care about."

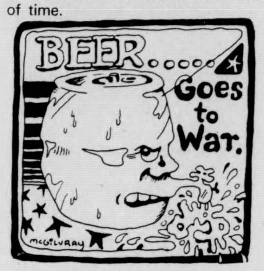
One-day licenses remain

By JUDY BOUCHER

The town's policy of granting one day wine and malt licenses was not subject to a major overhaul last night by Amherst's Board of Selectmen.

Selectman Robert Garvey last week expressed the need for reviewing the town's wine and malt licenses' policy expressing concern that there were possible violations with organizations by buying more beer and wine than needed for the one day event.

However, new guidelines were established requiring the applicant of the non-profit organization to record the name of supplier as well as the amount of liquor bought which must be returned to the Board within a reasonable amount of time.



BEER.....
Goes to War.
McGILVRAY

Also, the license must be signed by an active officer of that organization who must come before the Board when applying for the license. UMass organizations must have written permission from the appropriate administrators. Only two such licenses per year will be granted for that organization.

Garvey's proposal for a $50 yearly fee was defeated. He said "there was a strong responsibility to police such licenses, but it was impossible with a $10 fee for the permit and the present manpower force of the police."

The fee is $10 yearly or $2 per calendar month and the license is regulated under Chapter 181 of the Liquor Control Act. Penalty for not paying the special tax is a fine of not more than $5,000 and imprisonment for not more than two years.

Dean of Students William Field reported that 34 licenses were issued since September 1. Only 6 were granted from April to September. Student groups have represented 74 per cent of the organizations seeking one day licenses.

Selectmen also said the final design of the North East by-pass, was received from the Department of Public Works and the consulting firm, Bayside Engineers.

North Pleasant Street will be closed to traffic when the by-pass is built. Closing of this street is part of the university's long range plan for a pedestrian campus.

The design will be reviewed within two months by UMass officials, the Board of Selectmen and the DPW.

Israelis riot again to protest austerity

TEL AVIV [UPI] - Riots and labor protests erupted yesterday in Israel for the second day in a row against the government's stringent new austerity program but officials reacted sternly.

Hundreds of teenagers from the Hatikva slum quarter of Tel Aviv took to the streets last night to smash store fronts and car windshields on Allenby Road, a major thoroughfare in the city's business district.

A police spokesman said there were no injuries but 35 persons were arrested in the new riots, including a boy of 9 and a woman charged with looting a smashed appliance store.

The disturbances followed a demonstration by the Israeli Black Panthers, an organization of Oriental Jews, who asked the government for immediate subsidies to needy families.

Tel Aviv police commander David Ofer said his men "will deal with the rioters with a strong hand." Police reinforcements moved into the city's Dizengoff Circle entertainment district as a precautionary measure.

On Sunday night police arrested 39 rioters and dispersed others who smashed store windows to loot merchandise and overturned buses and cars.

Women serve major role in struggle

This article was written by Eli Gonsalves, member of the PAIGC (the African Party for the Independence of Guinea - Bissau and the Cape Verde Islands), National Support Committee, U.S.A.

In the beginning of the struggle, leaders of the party worked to re-educate the thinking of the tribal heads, steeped in customs dictating that women be treated as inferior, without personalities or identities. Aware of tribal differences and the need of unity in order to become a nation, elders and leaders elected the liberation of their women. Here, I should say that women responded to the commitment made by the Party, and in resisting the foreign rulers and exploiters.

Women made their homes available for secret meetings, carried and secretly distributed propaganda material. Many times they concealed comrades from the police. They also formed groups to organize aid for political prisoners. During the armed struggle the women had a task that was basic to the development of the armed conflict, that of production. Later when military operations became more intense, women joined the men at the front. The first liberated land of the National Territory was on Komo Islands, where for seventy-five days and nights, men and women fought side by side. Together they resisted the Portuguese colonialists.

Today because the armed conflict has ceased, we are no less involved in a revolution, moreover the work of building a free and productive country is before all the people.

To ensure the continued growth of the women at the local level three out of the five members are women. Women hold leadership positions in all levels of the Party including the CEL. The struggle against illiteracy and the traditions that foster illiteracy are a daily program for the Commission for National Reconstruction. But, with every passing day, more and more girls are attending schools. A number of women have returned from attending higher forms of training in friendly countries and are now working as kindergarten teachers, medical assistants, etc.

The Party has the following slogan: "Defend women's rights, respect women and ensure that they (children, youth and adults) are respected but convince the women of our country that they must bring about their own liberation themselves, through their own work, attachment to the Party, self-respect, individuality and firmness towards anything that might be inconsistent with their dignity."

It is more than a slogan or a group of words that look well on paper, it is a living growing fact of life in Guinea-Bissau that will flourish soon on Cape Verde as well.

When all the people in a nation contribute mind and heart in a righteous effort, it is mankind that will truly reap the benefits.

Symposium on 60's

The New Africa House Steering Committee is sponsoring, tonight, a symposium entitled, "Black Revolution in the 1960's, An Overview", November 12th at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The purpose of the conference is to review the struggle of Black people in the 1960's to attempt to correct the many distortions and omissions that currently exist. Archie Shepp and his Jazz Workshop along with the Voices of New Africa will provide music reflecting the mood of the 60's. The entire university Community is urged to attend an exciting and controversial discussion.

The Panelists will include:

Robert F. Williams, was president of the Monroe, North Carolina NAACP chapter, 1957-61 organized self defense, community patrols to protect community from Ku Klux Klan (KKK), ran for Mayor of Monroe, spent eight years in exile, five years in Cuba, three years in People's Republic of China, met with Fidel Castro, Che Guverra, Muhammad Babu (Zambarian revolutionary), Mao Tse Tung, Chou En Li and was the first Black man from United States to speak in mass rally to Chinese people. Ex-president of the Republic of New Africa, he now faces extradiction back to North Carolina and kidnapping charges dating back to 1961.

Askia Muhammad Toure, noted poet, author of "Songhay", a book of spiritual essays, Co-editor of "Black America Magazine." Was active in the first Black Studies Dept. at San Francisco State with Dr. Nathan Hare.

Sister Sonia Sanchez, poetess, author, playwriter, chairperson of Amherst Black Studies Dept., was active in Black Arts Movement, on the East and West Coast. Served a major role in developing Black awareness and Black Studies Movement.

Accounts of the 60's, as a historical movement will be highlighted by John Bracey, chairman of the Afro-American Studies Dept., UMass, active in early sixties in Chicago C.O.R.E. and N.O.W. organizations, noted historian, and co-author of "Nationalism", a major research on the Black working class in the Black Liberation Struggle.

Muhammad Ahmad (Max Standford), ex-ambassador of the Republic of New Africa, political community worker, worked with street gang forces in 1960's. Author of "Al-Jihad" and "Towards Pan-African Liberation."

Erine Mkalimoto, active member of editorial staff of "Soulbook", organizer of original Black Panther Party, West Coast, member of League of Revolutionary Black Workers (Detroit, Michigan), and major ideologist of the 1960's.

Also on the panel will be Stanely Kinard, active student leader in Black Studies rebellions in Amherst, Mass. area.

The entire community is invited to attend this historical review of the 1960's, by studying and analyzing our past, we are able to make accurate projections in the future.

Orchard Hill has its roots in student activism of the 60s

By JERRY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

The ten-year history of Orchard Hill has its roots in the student activism of the sixties and "is an important perspective in understanding the Hill," according to Allen Davis, Assistant Director of Academic Affairs on the Hill.

Orchard Hill opened in 1964 during a period of tremendous growth for the University; between 1960 and 1964 the student population soared from about 4,000 to near 9,000.

Typical of universities all over the country, the growth was a result of advancing technology in the country. The result in the schools was the modern "multiversity", a super-efficient, technologically perfect institution.

The Hill was cast in "an Oxford-Cambridge atmosphere to combat the anonimity of the modern 'multiversity', which often suppressed free speech and fostered feelings of alienation in students," said Davis.

Though considered a part of Northeast when it came to student affairs (until 1969,) the academic atmosphere was quite different from the rest of the University.

Operating under a Danforth Foundation Grant, the Hill was presided over by a Master (a member of the University faculty) and each house had one faculty resident, as they do now. Each house was also assigned 13 faculty members: one to act as a preceptor who coordinated 12 faculty fellows. It was a system that faculty members hoped would be like that of Oxford, Princeton and Yale, according to Davis.

"The faculty would come up and teach sections of University courses. There were coffee hours where the students could get to know the faculty. Sometimes it was o.k. but usually it was, at best, strained. It was a phony situation and very artificial; there was no indigenous instruction going on," he continued.

In 1968 Lee Varley, the first Master, was replaced by Leon Barron who played an instrumental part in subsequent changes in the Hill. There was general student dissatisfaction with student-faculty relations and outmoded classes but the feeling was more intense on the Hill, said Davis.

Social reality and social awareness became a prime issue. The faculty fellow system, staffed by older faculty very much ingrained in tradition, fell apart and younger faculty began developing interdisciplinary courses.

"These courses reflected a general interest in political action and the courses were very relevant," Davis explained.

Examples include: Exploring Radical Psychologists, Man and Environment, and American Radicalism and the New Left.

Also in 1968, the first group of CCEBS black students was located on the Hill, which was "a concrete influx of social reality," according to Davis.

From 1968-1972 Barron developed this "departure from tradition" into a slate of 35-40 courses a semester. Spring semester 1972 saw Chris Hern become Master.

"He was a good man but just not right for the job," said Davis. He left after the semester and Michael Wolff took over the job. Wolff is Master now and his prime objective is to instill a common perspective behind all the OH courses so as to develop a program with some cohesion.

Scribner, noted educator, speaking here Wednesday

Dr. Harvey B. Scribner, an ex-chancellor of New York City public schools and former education commissioner for the state of Vermont, will speak Wednesday night at 7 p.m. in Marks Meadow Auditorium.

Dr. Scribner is expected to speak on the urban problem in the general context of education.

Considered a controversial figure in education, Dr. Scribner is expected to say that decisions are often made by middle class America but that the responsibility for fulfilling those positions are with the poor.

Dr. Scribner is in his second year of teaching here as a professor of education.

Campus Comments

The Daily Collegian: The largest college daily in New England. Is it meeting its responsibility to its readers? Is it guilty of the many accusations that have been leveled against it? Does it bore you? Campus Comments went on a soul searching mission to learn the public opinion of the space it's housed in.

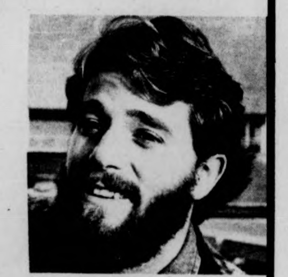
The question — What do you think of the Collegian?

Shirley Johnson - Sr. from Springfield. BDIC major concentrating in Deaf Education. I'm a commuting student and I really don't get a chance to read it that often. Mostly because when I get here, the papers are all gone. I read it about once a week when I finally grab a hold of it. I especially like the editorial section. I'm not that familiar with the editorial writer's names, but I'd know them if I saw their pictures.

Barry Golen - Jr. from Springfield living in Field majoring in Public Health. I think it's a good paper, but at times it's sort of like the National Enquirer...it prints things up to try to blow them out of proportion, such as things that are happening on campus, I can't give any specifics, but this is my view and a lot of other people's views. All in all, I think it's a good paper. I enjoy reading it.

Michele Amrich - Sophomore from Needham living in Knowlton majoring in Journalism. I worked for them for a little while. I do think it's a good paper. What I would like to see is a five college paper instead of just the five college page. Probably the AP and UPI releases are what I read the most. I like campus news, but I don't care for Amherst news.

William Mitchell - Sr. from New Bedford living in South Deerfield majoring in Communication Studies. Actually, I just glance through it every day. I don't read very much of it. My favorite parts are B.C. and the Wizard of Id. I like McGilvray. I think he's starting to get a lot better, since he's getting more practice and he is pretty funny. It's definitely campus oriented.



Kathleen Rea - Jr. from L.I., N.Y. living in Northampton majoring in the School of Ed's Media Specialist for the Deaf program. I have tried to contact the editor's column several times for some meaningful information to be printed and my articles were never printed. I've gone so far as to go down to the office and to speak to people personally and it hasn't done any good.

Lonnie Hill - Sophomore from Salem living in Amherst Majoring in Business. Like any other paper, it's not excellent all the time, but then again it's not bad. It's got pretty good commentators. It gets across both sides of any side they care to elaborate about. I like satirical commentators, like Zamir Nestlebaum, Nat Clark's pretty straight forward, more of a traditionalist. He's been cut down a few times. I like the comics. McGilvray, why doesn't he do a strip?

Letters to the editor

Blacks not in struggle alone

To the Editor:

After reading a letter to the editor by Bill Livingstone in the 11-8-74 edition of the Collegian, I began to wonder if he was unaware of his own prejudices, just as he accused the white race of being unaware of their bigotry.

Mr. Livingstone was writing a reply to Bruce Jefferies' letter which in my opinion was a very well written letter dealing with the very real problems of discrimination whites are facing on the UMass campus. Mr. Livingstone has not seemed to acknowledge this discrimination at all. In fact, he very neatly puts it aside and continues to discuss the injured black society. I suppose there are only white bigots? If that is so Mr. Livingstone, then why can't whites publish their writings in The Drum or set up a New Europe House without any intolerance from the blacks?

You also stated that only through a conscious effort could we help to achieve equality for the under-educated, poverty stricken blacks of our urban ghettos. Are you suggesting that the under-educated, poverty stricken whites don't deserve equality? Because, such people do exist.

Yes, there are whites who suffer from discrimination, just as blacks have been for centuries. If society doesn't begin to realize this, history is only going to repeat itself-with one exception-, the roles of the enslaver and the enslaved will be reversed.

Separating into two distinct races, black and white, isn't going to achieve the desired balance between right and wrong in the world. We have to all "stick together" as one race in order to fight off the unjust beast of inequality. You might be asking yourself if such a race exists. Well, I always thought that every person who was born in this world belonged to the "Human Race".

Lynne Dolinski

NUKES pose threat to the unborn

To the Editor:

In their die-hard drive against abortion, the Catholic Church has stressed the importance of the fetus' "Right to Life".

This is a selective stand on the part of the church.

There is another "Right to Life" issue which the church completely ignores.

I'm talking about the effects of nuclear power.

The link between infant mortality and radiation from nuclear power plants was exposed in 1972 by Prof. Ernest J. Sternglass.

In his study of the Hanford reactor, he found a 150 per cent increase in infant mortality in the area around the reactor. The mortality rate of the more distant control counties either rose less than 10 per cent or declined.

In his study of the Dresden reactor, he found a 48 per cent increase in infant mortality in the counties downwind from the reactor. The upwind control counties showed a decline of 2 per cent in their average infant mortality rates.

Sternglass also found that for each infant mortality, there would be three to four babies that would live with "serious genetic defects, crippling congenital malformations, mental retardation, and other afflictions in many ways worse than death".

Drs. Tamplin and Gofman noted in 1971 that the fetus is about 50 times as sensitive to radiation as an adult.

Nuclear power involves not only the "Right to Life" of the unborn and the infant, but of everyone.

Prof. Linus Pauling, winner of two nobel prizes, estimated that if everyone in the country were exposed to the allowable amount of radiation allowed by the AEC, 96,000 extra cancer and leukemia cases would result annually.

There are too many logical alternatives to nuclear power to risk the existence of the entire human race.

I urge the Catholic Church, and everyone else concerned with the "Right to Life" to help to inform the people about the dangers of nuclear power.

From the recent election results, it is apparent that someone isn't doing their job.

Dave Kowal

And speaking of threats to the unborn

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to an article written in Wednesday, Nov. 6 COLLEGIAN about the pro-abortion group that was operating from the campus center. The article calls for pro-abortionists to write to their Political Leaders urging them to support abortion.

We would like to make this plea to those who are PRO-LIFE and urge them to also write to our leaders in Washington, but urge them to support the Catholic Church's view, that abortion destroys life. Let's remember that a parent need not keep an unwanted child. There are people waiting in line for children to adopt, so adoption is assured. No doubt rape is a very tragic occurrence, but let's not rely on taking away the unborn's right to live.

Ten years ago, abortion was shunned upon. Today it is commonplace. What happens ten years from now?

Five years ago, euthanasia was frowned upon. Today it is being considered. Where will it be five, ten, fifty years from now?

Without a doubt in our minds, people's value of human life is going down. It really must stop.

The view of the Catholic Church is the only way to view it in our opinion. For those who still believe in Christianity, think of it this way. What would have happened to the world today if Jesus was aborted?

Please help the unborn keep their rights. Write to your congressman today.

The D.C., a nice place to visit

To the Editor:

I would like to give some credit where credit is due. I am of course speaking about Food Services. Since Sept. of 73 the dining commons have improved vastly. The quality, as well as the quantity of food has improved. Portions are larger and seconds can be obtained if desired on most meals. With new innovations such as a salad bar, new beverage dispensers, piped-in music, and similar improvements, the dining common has become a more enjoyable environment to eat it. Through innovations such as test panels and surveys, the dining commons can get ideas and suggestions from the students. With this information, the food can be more suited to the students likes and dislikes.

The task of feeding so many students is not an easy one. Much planning and preparation goes into it. Under the direction of Art Warren, the food service has done a fine job. The caliber of the Dining Commons has greatly been improved. James Weaver is another individual who is deeply concerned with the meal ticket program, and the overall success of the dining commons. Much time, work and dedication is put in by these two men as well as others in order to make the operation as successful as possible.

So the next time you eat in the D.C., remember there are many people who work hard to serve you. They have to put up with a lot of problems and troubles. They are doing their best. Their work is often overlooked and should greatly be appreciated. Who knows, maybe someday we'll be having steak for supper every night. It's just too bad there are still people who are not yet in favor of busing.

Cataldo is right about media

To the Editor:

In support of Gerry Cataldo's column on November 8th, I would like to expresss my opinion that "Press Pressure" was an excellent portrayal of media bias. Mr. Cataldo could not have better expressed my own views on the subject, particularly by his reference to the vain attempt at humor and subtly libelous remarks made by Zamir Nestelbaum in his column directed at Frank Bellotti [Attorney General elect].

It was refreshing to learn that the voters of this Great Commonwealth are not easily swayed by editorials of the presses as was demonstrated by the fact that Frank Bellotti defeated his opponent Josiah Spaulding. It is not so refreshing to learn however that there are still the Zamir Nestelbaums of the media who will continue to spew their insubstantial "crap" at the masses of the public who remain easily influenced. Fortunately this mass is not the majority.

Joe Burroughs

A sunshine Sunday of the last three day weekend. First day of Eastern standard time, and I was off to dinner at the Burroughs house. Joe Burroughs was one of the main influences in my decision to return to UMass this year. Using words like "dynamic" and "creative" to explain the possibilities of the Amherst area, in the end I decided to return here because there were people like Joe Burroughs to learn from.

And as I drove towards the Burroughs house in Leverett, I was reminded that there just hadn't been enough time to get together with Joe this year. Hectic pace, different things to do. Joe and his wife Dottie were getting ready to take a semester off from the UMass community and go to Hawaii to take part in a human development project during the spring.

The day was filled with the joy of good company. Dottie Burroughs put out a New England boiled dinner. Two more of Joe's students joined us at the table. After the dinner, three of us went for a walk with Joe down to the Burroughs pond. There was a constant banter of trivialities about life in general and nothing in particular filled the day. A brisk wind but a warm sun, the trees most beautiful leaves already shed; we walked around the fields. There are people that you love, simply because they have touched your life so deeply. A simple vague statement? Perhaps. But there are not enough ways to describe how I loved Joe Burroughs. Not enough ways to describe how almost everyone who knew Joe Burroughs loved him.

Some believe that the way to improve people is to criticize them. Tell them that they are wrong, and that they should "shape up". I doubt that Joe Burroughs ever did that. Always a smile. A kind word. Some quick praise. Joe Burroughs had a way of making everyone's life seem important. Every person that he came in contact with was made to feel that they were the most important person in Joe's life at that moment. Nothing else much mattered, only you. In ways he was like F. Scott Fitzgerald's Gatsby; he made you feel as though he were seeing you at your best possible moment.

As the windy Sunday moved towards night, the brisk breezes increased. The fading color of the leaves were no longer seen through the dark of night. It was the end of the day at the Burroughs house. After saying goodbye to Dottie, Joe walked me towards my car. A quick hug. A firm shake. A warm goodbye.

I never realized that this would be the last time that I would ever see him. There rarely is a way to know such things. There were still too many things to talk about, to share, and to laugh about. Joe Burroughs died last Sunday at the age of 58.

When I heard the news on Monday, I walked through the Campus Center Concourse half stunned, and was bitter because nobody seemed to notice that a dear friend was gone. The hustle and bustle of UMass is like a city. Small things like the death of a friend, are usually lost to the masses pricing candles and posters.

Yet the bitterness was not appropriate. Joe would have corrected me. People cannot mourn for things that are already done with. People have to spend all of their energy in living and understanding both themselves and those around them.

There were so many things that Joe Burroughs had left to live for. He packed all of his heart and mind into every living day. Was involved with his students and his family. Was always willing to find time to listen, and was always around to care.

That Sunday, the last Sunday together he was beaming. Looking forward to Hawaii, I told him that he should try and get to Europe someday. He assured me that he would try. I know that there was so much life for Joe Burroughs to live, and am frustrated by the fact that it was cut short. Still there is the greater realization that he truly lived his life, and got the most out of every day while he was among us.

There was that moment. The tears were all gone. I was sitting with Dave Hoffman, another good friend of Joe's. Dave, red-eyed squeezed my hand, and said "I'm going to miss him more than I ever knew. His loss leaves a gap that won't be filled for a long time." I wanted to answer Dave, say something that would make him feel better. There were no words. I put my hand on top of his and squeezed him. Then eventually I muttered, "At least a hundred people who knew him would have given ten years of their life to his. Then he could have lived almost forever."

It was only later, much later, after speaking to friends who mourned Joe's loss, that I realized how close to the truth that remark was. The only tribute left, for the words that were never said, is to live life in the spirit that Joe Burroughs did. For the moment. For each other. For the things worth finding. And for the things worth loving. If I can do it half as well as Joe Burroughs did, I'll be doing alright.

- - - - - - - - - - -

There will be an informal get together on Wednesday at five o'clock in the main lounge at Pierpont, for those who knew Joe Burroughs to discuss their personal memories and feelings about Joe.

While Whitmore sleeps

By DEAN TUCKER

First there were twelve people standing around a flagpole with signs that said "End the War." Then there were twenty, then fifty and a hundred and it became bejesus fashionable to be against the war in Southeast Asia in my home town in New Hampshire. The last time a demonstration was held three hundred rallied. The only opposition at the gathering came from a few beer-bellied Korean vets who were drunk and carried around pro-U.S. posters that had words spelled wrong on them. It was all so damn pitiful to see them because by then the movement that started with small groups hanging around flagpoles had grown big; no massive; enough to hound a lying President out of office (only to have him replaced by a bigger liar.) The movement had closed campuses down and stopped a political convention from dealing with its ballyhoo bullshit as it had in the past. The movement threw out ROTC and recruiters from Dow Chemical and other manufacturers and chemical killers. The movement lost a Kennedy hero and moved on with his spirit. The movement picked up a hero when Muhammad Ali said no to the draft and the movement moved on. It didn't stop the war in Vietnam. It helped. (The war goes on.)

The thing is the movement wouldn't have moved if the people it was trying to move were listening and thinking and when half a million literally knocked on the White House door and no one answered it was very discouraging. But the movement moved on. And we won.

So UMass has its first Town Meeting. 600 people show up to discuss an agenda that was not too publicized because it was late in formation and the Collegian Editor-in-Chief who is so beholden to advertisers won't pull off-campus commercial ads from the campus paper to accommodate an ad about a precedent setting on campus meeting of students (who own the paper and who wanted to meet to discuss the quality of life at their campus.) But despite the decisions of a boy-wonder-hack 600 people show up. They pass the word to Whitmore that the last hurrah of en loco parentis days is soon to be hurrahed. This writer, leery of causes, at the last minute decides it is just. He's read the scenario before and knows that there will be a lot of talk before the word gets to Whitmore that we will eat where and when and what we wish. That we will not be refugees in our own community. That we will not be the victims of state hired bureaucratic slumlords, and that we will use the infirmary if we want to. We say to the self perpetuating helium filled egos of Whitmore "get off my back you damn monkey!"

So 600 people show up and pass the agenda. Bromery and stooges sit this one out. Groups that want to talk about the quality of education get tabled (suppressed) and must wait. Hamlin House, the refugee headquarters people, leave. Bits and pieces of a crowd that echoed every time their name was mentioned walk out when their name was not.

But from small factioned crowds around flagpoles come big crowds at the doors of big buildings. A suggestion that we storm the Chancellor's house gets cheers but no takers.

The time will come, when like the war movement, the battle for students rights will get big and noisy and in the end because it is just and the people working for it have faith, we shall indeed overcome.

After the meeting SGA President is as concerned as he was before. What to do now. The fight has started. It is the first of warmups that will lead to the day when Whitmore makes an attempt to say no. They will get pummeled, but before then more warmups are needed. Another town meeting. Yes. Soon. Whitmore must answer this week. Hamlin is tensed, ready to leap. We are getting ready with them. Do you hear us Whitmore? Listen good now.

Power setties everything

Might makes right might very well be right. Leafing through the pages of history I find that any significant accomplishments have been made under the administration of a powerful, established authority. It took a tyrannical madman to unite a torn Germany and a fascist dictator to get the trains to run on time in Italy. I'm not saying that what this country needs is a dictator, but in the wake of Watergate we certainly need a system of government that is stable and lasting. It is in a time such as this, when on the safeguard against a political monopoly that it might very well happen without our ever knowing it.

We presently have a Republican president and an overriding Democratic Congress. Every four years a new president is elected, every other six a new senate, and every two a new house of representatives. As one administration settles into office a threatening opposition usurps the Congress; with such a future ahead, what can we predict for white house occupancy in 1977?

This endless run-around is supposed to be the idealistic form of government. Rule by the people? How can this be when the people are so caught up in politics and election campaigning to spend any serious consideration on the actual governing process? We must discern the difference between politics and government, vote getting and administration, promises and action.

A good politician makes countless promises, a good government official spends all his time fulfilling his previous commitments.

The question of power is present at the federal, state, local, and even campus level. Yesterday's Collegian headlines ran "Students exert power". What power is to be exerted in an impotent society? Why the sudden flare-up for autonomy, independence, power?

What power is to be found in a society that can be swayed so easily by some fast talking crowd mover? There is no power to be spoken of when people gather together like a herd seeking a leader, any leader who promises to pull them out from their drab existence.

Power is never in the hands of the people. It is the employ of massive bureaucracies, colossal institutions that have no place for the individual. It is they who are in power who settle everything with little care for the common citizen. They thrive on power and its prosperity. Power begets power as chaos gives birth to order. From the mass confusion of Watergate, power shall seek its roots and grow. The soil is fertile for a prosperous political crop.

Whoever seizes the reins of power shall hold the future at his disposal. His decisions are final; in a few years the police will prove him right. I recall a passage by George Orwell on power, he said that magistrates must not rule by love, trust, or respect. Power is to be feared and as true image of power he said to let the mind conceive a huge military boot kicking, stomping on a human face; forever

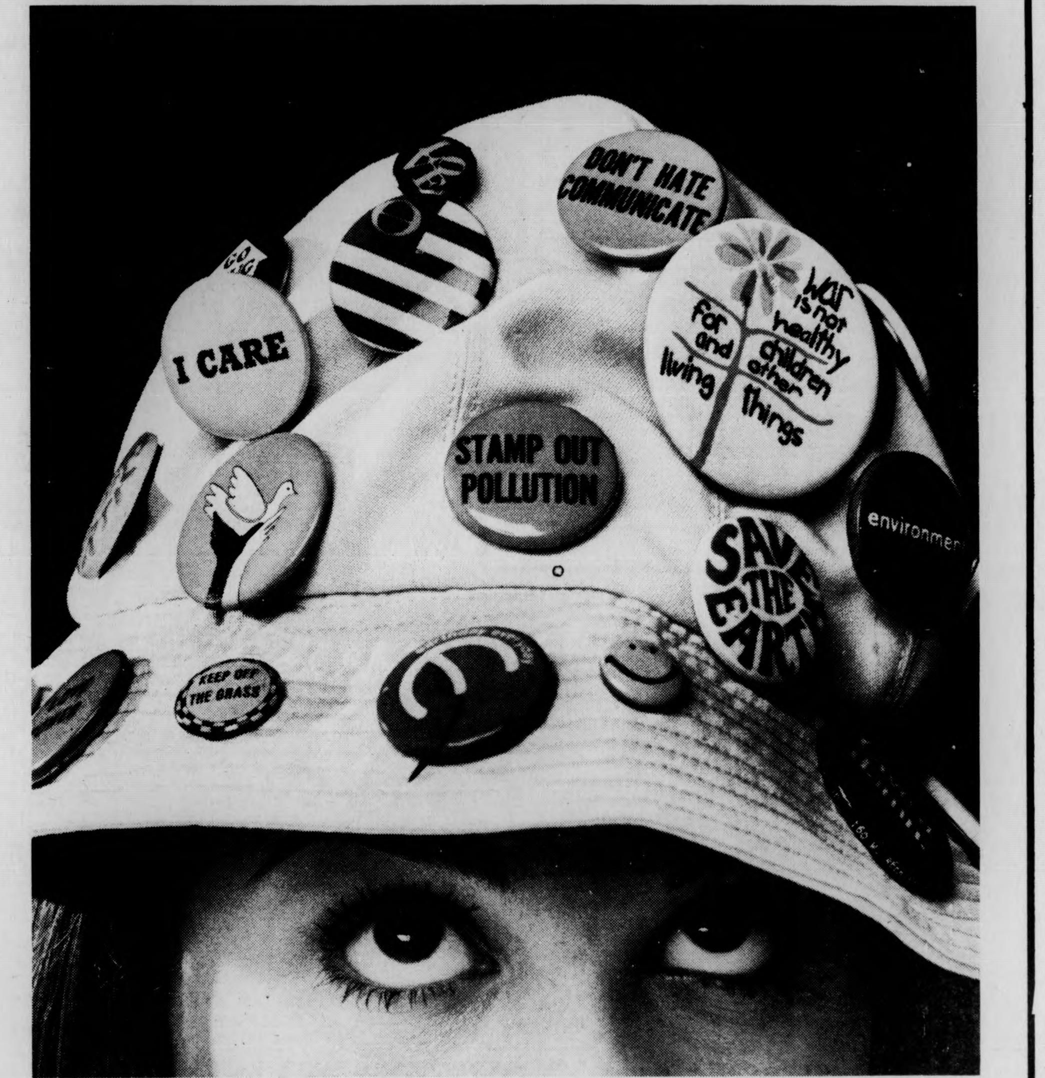
Changing the world is a fine idea, but where do you start?



We asked the same question when we first found ourselves in a position to make the world a more livable place.

At Kodak, we started close to home. In Rochester, New York. We cut river pollution with one of the most efficient industrial waste water treatment plants in the country. We cut air pollution with scrubbers, adsorbers and electrostatic precipitators. We helped set up a black enterprise program in downtown Rochester.

Why? Helping to combat water pollution not only benefits society but us as well as we need clean water to make film. Our combustible waste disposal facility not only reduces air pollution but also helps pay for itself in heat and steam production and silver recovery. The black enterprise program not only helps people who aren't well off but also helps stabilize communities in which Kodak can work and grow.

In short, it's simply good business. And we're in business to make a profit. But in furthering our business interests, we also further society's interests.

After all, our business depends on society. So we care what happens to it.

Author, poet lecturing on Richard Wright

Sylvia Wynter, Cuban-Jamaican author and poet, will deliver the third lecture in the UMass series on the life of Richard Wright, Thursday, at 8 p.m. in Herter Hall Room 231.

Wynter, the author of "The Hills of Hebron," is on leave from the University of the West Indies and is currently a professor of literature in the Third World Studies Department at the University of California in San Diego. She studied at Kings College of London University and at the University of Madrid. She is a contributor to the Jamaican Journal and many other Third World publications.

The title of her lecture will be "Caliban Agonistes: Richard Wright Revisited." The public is invited and a reception will take place at the Center for Racial Understanding in Moore House after the program. The sponsors are the Afro-American Society, the W.E.B. Dubois Department of Afro-American Studies and Harambe.

Health adv. Board to discuss input

A new formula for student input in the University Health Services will be discussed at this weeks' Student Health Advisory Board meeting. The Board has been discussing the future role of consumer participation at the Health Services.

Advisory Board meetings are open to all students, and the Board tries to elicit student suggestions and complaints.

This weeks meeting will be in the Campus Center, Rooms 804 to 809 on Wednesday, beginning at 4:30 p.m.

U. Iowa reps on campus today

Representatives from the MIT Urban Studies & Planning Division and the U. of Iowa Law School will be on campus today to answer questions and give information to students interested in graduate and law school programs at the respective schools.

A representative from MIT will be available from 1:00-4:00 at the Student Development Center, Room 112, Berkshire House.

The U. of Iowa representative will be at Room 112, Berkshire House from 10:00-3:00.

Vietnam group showing films

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

The film Vietnam: Still America's War was presented at a meeting of the Vietnam Study Group in the Campus Center Sunday night.

"The film was presented to help people realize that the war in Vietnam is not over," said Buffy Weissman, a coordinator of Student Volunteer Services.

The film will be reshown again Thursday on the Campus Center Concourse from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., then at the Amherst Food Co-op from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m.

The Vietnam Study Group has sponsored other programs this semester centered on the Vietnam War.

Their program has included a concert by Holly Near, a folk singer from the Indochina Peace Campaign, and a display of a U.S. manufactured "tiger cage", a 5' x 10' x 5' cage, which is used to hold political prisoners.

The group was formed as a result of the first UMass showing of Vietnam: Still America's War, Weissman said. The film was shown in early October by Don Luce, President of the International Volunteer Service.

Rearden said, "At our meetings we try to learn more about U.S. violations of the Paris Accords, the interconnectedness between all struggles for liberation, and most importantly to plan and discuss actions and strategies that will be effective in reminding Americans that the war is not over."

The group will be showing a slide show about U.S. involvement in Indochina Sunday. The time and place will be announced in the Collegian.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Even a superficial effort to comprehend the relationship between events on the celestial scene and events here on earth yields knowledge that is indispensable to this week's success. A willingness to cooperate on the one hand and the patience, peace of mind, and self-assurance necessary to allow each individual his own idiosyncracies on the other: these — though they appear at first to be contradictory attitudes leading to conflicting modes of behavior — are the keys to career advancement, social recognition, and a productive involvement in all leisure-time activities. This is an excellent week for eating your cake and having it too, for there is a little to stand in the way of giving and getting simultaneously — which is not the same at all (if you're careful!) as losing with the right hand what you gain with the left.

Know your own talents, employ them with timing and finesse, and all should end well this week. Ignore signs of fatigue, physical or emotional, at your own risk. During the early part of the week, concentrate largely upon your own ends; later on, you would do well to be generous, even expansive, with your time as you begin to take an interest in and to help others gain — or regain — goals of their own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — Any plans initiated by associates can be trusted to be well-laid. Even so, you would do well to investigate possibilities on your own. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — There is no need to be alarmed if you are not in the driver's seat this week. You can manage to reach your goals if you are careful to follow directions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — So long as co-workers exhibit mutual respect, there is no need for you to interfere in their differences. Live up to a reputation for being easy-going. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Take care that you don't become overly eager to push your career into a higher gear. Take your time, especially early in the week.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Be encouraging to those who would do things in their own time and way. You can expect others to make fewer demands on you toward week's end. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — A week for living and letting live. Don't be disheartened should a loved one not take advantage of a situation leading to gain. Build another's confidence.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 5) — Most important to success this week is a direct approach. Know what you want — and make an effort to communicate your desire to others. (March 6-March 20) — Don't allow trivia to take over, especially early in the week when you should be making workable plans. Disregard another's efforts to change your mind.

ARIES (March 21-April 4) — You might do well to consider reorganizing your life on two levels — where your career is concerned and socially. Timing is important now. (April 5-April 19) — Take notice of the individual as well as of the group; otherwise, you may find yourself pleasing on the whole but out of luck when it comes to advancement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 5) — Determine your goal for the week as early as you can. Care is vital to the successful conclusion of operations being tried for the first time. (May 6-May 20) — Exchange ideas with others in your field as often as necessary early in the week. Later on, you would do well to try to accomplish goals on your own.

GEMINI (May 21-June 6) — With many talents to choose from, it should not be difficult for you to establish a toe-hold on the ladder of new successes this week. Be self-sufficient. (June 7-June 20) — Present projects will not be able to stave off the attack which may come if you are not able to persuade others of their usefulness.

CANCER (June 21-July 7) — If you are tactful, this week could well be the one which sees you on your way to longed-for goals by unexpected advantages where your career is concerned. (July 8-July 22) — You can be responsible for the raising of another's opinion of himself. Ennoble yourself and your career at the same time. Move quickly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 7) — It is your attitude which makes or breaks you this week. Approach any new project with a willingness to cooperate completely with the knowledgeable few. (Aug. 8-Aug. 22) — Consider first of all the welfare of the individual. Groups concerns come in for their share of attention — but only after each member is seen to.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — You would do well to let the group fend for itself — at least for the first few days of the week. There is much to be said for striking out on your own. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Short-term goals suit the tenor of the week better than long-term ones. Don't allow yourself the luxury of forgetting what you're about.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Work at home must supplement work on the employment scene if you are to know the high degree of success the week holds out to you. Divide time wisely. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Take care that doing too much at the beginning of the week does not leave you too exhausted to do enough at the end of it. Guard your energy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — Should you be engaged in rearranging your life on any level, take care that you don't discard the basics. Keep a substantial backlog of essentials. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — You should be able to increase your earning potential considerably if you are careful not to put all your eggs in one basket. Be generous.

Food Services workers meet

Tonight at 8 p.m. a meeting will be held in Room 113 of the Campus Center to discuss the problems of student-workers in the University Food Services. The meeting, called by the interim Student-Workers' Organizing Committee-Food Services, will be particular focus on the issues of wages. The Committee is currently urging an increase in wages for student-workers to meet the soaring cost of living. Other topics to be discussed include safety, health, and waste in the food services.

The Committee is urging student-workers to attend the meeting and to participate in the discussion, in order that a course of action can be adopted and that a permanent committee can be set up with full representation from all the dining commons and snack bars.

Time's out for Woody

COLUMBUS, Ohio [AP] — Woody Hayes, still seething over his Ohio State team's 16-13 upset loss at Michigan State Saturday, is calling for instant replays to settle controversies during college football games.

Asked Hayes: "...When is football going to come into the 20th century and use the electronic advantages we have"

The Ohio State coach is still bitter because officials didn't call a time-out to unpile the players one yard from the Michigan State goal line in the closing seconds.

Ohio State wingback Brian Baschnagel ran for an apparent touchdown. Two officials first signaled a touchdown, and then the field judge and back judge ruled time had expired before the aborted play.

Julius Erving of the New York Nets, Travis Grant of the San Diego Conquistadors and George McGinnis of the Indiana Pacers continue one-two-three among American Basketball Association scorers, according to the weekly statistics released Monday.

Erving heads the list for the second consecutive week with 28.71 points per game, followed by Grant with 27.73 and McGinnis at 26.11.

The California Angels have signed Jerry Adair to complete manager Dick Williams' coaching staff for the 1975 baseball season, it was announced Monday.

Adair, 37, spent the last three years with the Oakland A's.

The Oakland A's reaped the largest financial payoff in World Series history for their five-game victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers, it was announced Monday by baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

The A's received a record $736,359.41 and 31 members of the team received full shares amounting to $22,219.09, which is the second largest individual payoff in history. Each full Oakland share fell short of last year's record of $24,760.87, but that was only because of the A's added generosity. Oakland players voted only 27 full shares a year ago.

Steve Bartkowski's passing exploits in California's 52-26 victory Saturday over Washington Monday earned him the Pacific-8 Conference offensive player of the week award.

The Cal Quarterback completed 16 of 27 passes for 326 yards and two touchdowns. By halftime, he had passed for 268 yards, hitting nine in a row during one stretch. His total yardage of 309 yards (he lost seven rushing) was a California single game total offense record.

The Cleveland Browns' 21-14 upset over the New England Patriots was "our best defensive game of the season," Cleveland Coach Nick Skorich declared Monday at his weekly news conference.

"Our secondary was very well coordinated. For the first time this season we did not give up the bomb, and that's against one of the highest-scoring offensive teams in football," he said.

Bernie Fryer, a 24-year-old guard who averaged 7.8 points a game with the spirits of St. Louis of the ABA this season before being injured, announced his retirement form basketball Monday.

Steve Blass, one time star of the Pittsburgh Pirate pitching staff, has been placed on the team's 40-man roster which makes him unavailable for selection by another team in the December major league draft.

RON HARRIS PLOWS through a Holy Cross tackler on a punt return, but didn't get too much further in last Saturday's 30-20 loss. Ron Harris also had an interception in the second quarter of the game.

WFL: Money isn't everything

By CRAIG AMMERMAN
AP Sports Writer

Players on at least four World Football League teams haven't been paid lately. Now one team has given the impression that it is begging for food, and another is missing a set of uniforms.

Players on the Portland Storm, who according to sources haven't been paid for six weeks, were taken to a local restaurant for lunch on Sunday by a benevolent businessman. A team official said other meal donations are needed badly.

Ron Mix, the Storm's general manager, said he was trying "to get some money from any source" to take care of the players' day-to-day needs. The players, who threatened to boycott last week's game unless they were paid, played after being assured the team would get $50,000 of the gate receipts.

But team owner Bob Harris says the money hasn't arrived from Florida, and he has no guarantee it will. Still, the Storm players said they would play their 20th, and final regular-season game this week.

Elsewhere, the situation is not so clear. For instance:

—Chicago Fire owner Tom Origer has called off his team's final game, ending its playoff chances. He says he has lost $800,000 this year and is looking for investors. Origer said his team didn't deserve to be in the playoffs and he is against eight teams in the playoffs since there are only 10 teams left in the league.

—James Healey, revenue director of the city of Birmingham, says the WFL's Americans owe $14,000 in sales taxes. Officials say they have been promised payment by this Tuesday, and Healey says if he doesn't get it he will seek an injunction to bar the team from playing any more home games. The Americans are supposed to play Shreveport in Birmingham Wednesday night.

—The Charlotte Hornets are minus one set of uniforms — confiscated by sheriff's deputies because the team hadn't paid a laundry bill. As far as could be learned, however, the Hornets will play this week's game against Memphis, using their second set of uniforms.

The Hornets are among the WFL teams which are running behind on payrolls. Hornet players were paid for two weeks on Sunday, but they were told not to cash the checks right away. Team officials said they hoped to make a bank deposit on Tuesday.

Then there are the Florida Blazers, who have not received a regular pay check since Sept. 6, although they did get a $75,000 lump sum payment from one week's gate receipts. Players have been promised several times they will be paid once the team is sold, but the sale has yet to be consummated.

Finally, players on the Southern California Sun were given two weeks' back pay this past weekend. The team's coaching and front office staff still is owed back pay.

Against that backdrop, the league plans to begin its playoffs next week.

The state of hockey

For those people who like more and more expansion "success", being achieved by players with less and less talent, the National Hockey League is a "must" to watch. Expansion teams in the NHL have acquired that wondrous formula of success by spreading existing talent so thin, that it barely shows through the mediocrity.

One must thank, however, this year's fledgling clubs, the Kansas City Catastrophies and Washington Watergates for building such expansion hockey juggernauts as the Division III - leading Los Angeles Kings (who posses that all-star goaltending combination of Roy Edwards and Rogy Vachon), and the omnipotent Vancouver Canucks, at the top of Division II in the "blood and guts" NHL. The Catastrophies and Watergates possess a combined record of 2-21-2. Who else but Kansas City and Washington (probably big winners next year when two more teams enter the league) could break the NHL into four divisions, with our beloved Bruins playing in the Adams Division (Division IV)?

The National Hockey League refuses to curb their successful expansion. They will add two teams next year and then two more each in 1976 and '77; franchises may span from Petaluma to Peoria.

The NHL is not alone in this watering down of talent; the new World Hockey Association has added 14 teams to the proceedings for a combined total of 32 franchises in both the NHL and WHA. This is a 533 per cent increase of hockey teams in less than ten years (talk about the price of meat going up!). The last place Boston Bruins of the 1960's would be perennial champs in this modern conglomeration.

The game of hockey has turned into an asylum and to survive in that asylum, one has to be an inmate. Fistic superiority is the most essential attribute for the modern hockey star. Last year's champs, the Philadelphia (City-of-Brotherly-Love) Flyers are sharpening both their sticks and elbows in preparation for their title defense. Flyers' Dave Schultz is a good example of today's hockey player; he may not be able to score or play defense, but he sure can fight!

If this reporter sounds displeased with the current state of hockey, it is for good reason. The NHL, and the game of hockey in general, has turned into a big business corporation. The idea of the game is no longer to win, but to make money, as attested to by the longer schedules and modified playoff system. Fourteen out of the eighteen teams will be eligible for the Stanley Cup Playoffs. A better than six month schedule is played to eliminate four teams and in another month or so, the other thirteen clubs perish from competition leaving the one remaining, chump...er...champ.

Trying to stock the NHL with enough talent to go around so that the mediocrity doesn't show is like trying to cover the White House with one can of black paint and praying that no white shows.

One can only hope that the National Hockey League will start pruning its limbs instead of growing new ones, and thereby restore first-rate hockey to its supporters.

Oldest voice is also the "Most"

By MICHAEL B. FALLON

BOSTON [AP] — In the early 1950s, the Boston Celtics were a struggling Basketball Association.

And the last thing the Celtics thought they needed was some unsolicited advice from the backup radio broadcaster for the arch-rival New York Knicks.

But they got a little advice one snowy winter day outside the Boston Arena, then the Celtics' archaic second home.

"I was walking out of the building and this guy started tugging on my sleeve," recalls the Celts' long-time publicist, Howie McHugh, "and he says, 'You know what this franchise needs? Somebody to educate your fans about basketball."

I said, 'Let's worry about getting the fans in the building,''' recalled McHugh. '''That's what we need right now.'''

The guy giving the advice was Johnny Most, a New Yorker who later became the voice of the Celtics and now is the dean of the NBA's broadcasters.

The controversial Most is in his 22nd year with the Celtics and his 24th in the NBA. He's seen them all from Easy Ed Macauley to Bill Russell to Dave Cowens with the Celtics.

Since shortly after that snowy day outside Boston Arena, Most has been educating the Boston fans about basketball. And the Celtics' 12 NBA championships have been bringing the fans into the building.

And basketball broadcasting in Boston never has been quite the same.

A Boston Globe columnist in a recent, generally critical article on the city's sportscasters, said merely that "Johnny Most is basketball in Boston."

And perhaps in the entire NBA. The Celtics filled the Boston Garden two seasons ago for Johnny Most Night and his worshippers came from all over the country.

"How many sportscasters ever had their own night in their own arena?" Most was asked recently. "There aren't any others," he answered directly.

The rigors of travelling the NBA circuit keep Most in what he calls "a state of constant fatigue." But he hasn't thought about quitting.

"I figure if I hang on at least seven more years, then my oldest boy will be ready to take over," says Most. "He's 15 now and by the time he's 22 he'll be ready."

Tom Heinsohn, Boston's current coach and a standout player from 1956-65, worked with Most as a Celtics' broadcaster several years ago and says simply: "Johnny Most wrote the shorthand of basketball broadcasting. He coined many of the original phrases that not only have been adopted in broadcasting but are used in running accounts of the game."

Heinsohn was referring to "stop-and-pop" which was coined when Most found he couldn't keep up with Jerry West's quick release of a jump shot; "tricky dribbles" for Bob Cousy as he pioneered the behind-the-back dribble, and "band" for a good field goal by anybody.

Thomas finishes second

Harriers lose to Friars in NE's

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

Since 1914, the New England Championships have been held at Boston's Franklin Park (except for 1917, due to World War I). Never have the times been as fast as those recorded Monday afternoon, during the sixty-second annual running of the New Englands, which were won by a talented Providence College squad.

Mike O'Shea shattered the course record of 23:37 set by Art Dulong of Holy cross five years ago. O'Shea led his Irish teammates by capturing first place with the standard-setting time of 23:31, as the Friars won the meet with a mere 29 points. UMass co-captain Randy Thomas undoubtedly ran his best race over the five-mile Franklin Park course, finishing second in 23:38, nineteen seconds better than his previous best time.

There was only a ten point difference between the Friars and UMass after the first four runners from each team finished, but once again, the distancemen were plagued by the weakness of the number five runner. "We were stronger up front than I would have guessed," explained coach Ken O'Brien. "The times were great, and they (Providence) ran much better than before," added O'Brien, who was not displeased with his team's performance. The MInutemen runners finished a distant second with a totla of 52 points, while Northeastern was impressive in placing third with 59 points.

Thirty teams were entered in the race, which began as a stream of multi-colored uniforms across the Autumn setting of Franklin Park. A large crowd, expecting a battle between UMass and Providence, lined the five-mile layout. Roars echoed in the warm and pleasant afternoon air during the race, as fans, spread over the course, gave their favorite runners plenty of vocal support.

The harriers ran better than they did a year ago, when they won the New England title, but Providence was simply a stronger team. The situation may be analagous to a pro football team compiling a 13-1 regular season record, only to finish second to an undefeated team, and somehow missing the wild card spot because there was another team with the same record.

The times would have been fast for the normal Franklin Park course, but the officials lengthened the course by ten seconds as a result of widening several turns that had been "shaved" by runners in recent meets. Considering the ten-second factor and the tougher competition this year, it was an extremely fine showing by Thomas and teammates. In fact, any of the top three teams would have won the 1973 New Englands with yesterday's performances.

Northeastern, led by Mike Buckley and the Flora twins, has improved considerably since mid-season and came within seven points of surprising UMass. "Northeastern ran an exceptional race," commented O'Brien, "but I don't think they can run as well at Van Cortlandt Park." The IC4A's will be held next Monday at Van Cortlandt, where the rugged hills may affect the speed-oriented Huskies.

"The guys ran exactly as I thought they would, but I did expect our top three to be ahead so that we could make up for our fifth man. I thought we could beat them (PC) up front," said O'Brien, who feels his runners will do better at the IC4A's.

Little Tommy Smith of Providence finished third, and teammate Stetson Arnold finished fourth, ahead of Bill Gillin. Gillin and John McGrail placed fifth and sixth, respectively, running their best times on the rolling course. Northeastern's Buckley and Bob Flora took the next two positions, while John Savoie of Providence and NU's John Flora rounded out the top ten.

Holy Cross was good, but ref didn't help

By GLENN POSTER
Sports Staff

Donald J. Cody of Tufts University will be forever in the memories of the players who participated in the 1974 UMass-Holy Cross football game at Fitton Field in Worcester. Cody was the referee and the turning point in the ballgame. (but more about that later)

UMass lost its third straight and also its thrid in a row in the Crusader series. The MInutemen had to play catch-up football for sixty minutes, no easy task on the road. For the Crusaders it was parent's day, and they all wanted to impress Mom and Dad.

It only took the Jesuits three minutes and forty-four seconds to get on the scoreboard. The Minutement got their only victory (the toss of the coin), went on a drive for one first down, and were forced to punt. The Cross started its initial drive on their own 42 in good field position. On their fourth play from scrimmage, Mark Cannon of Malden, who later was voted the game's Most Valuable Player, took a handoff from quarterback Bob Morton on a quick opener off the right side of the line, cut back against the grain to the left, outdistanced safety Ron Harris, and scampered 44 yards for the touchdown. The Crusaders were never to be headed.

After a second Cannon touchdown run of three yards, the Minutemen got on the scoreboard in the second quarter. It was set up on a Dennis Kiernan interception which was returned five yards to the HC 37. Another moment of glory for UMass in the second period was a 67 yard punt by John Romboli that rolled dead on the Cross 7. But HC started moving and it took an interception by Harris to stop that drive. However, the ensuing UMass possession lasted a mere four plays.

History was made three minutes and thirty-eight seconds into the third quarter. The first touchdown signal that I can recall ever being made from the twenty-four yard line was given by the aforementioned Cody. As mentioned by Dave Eibel yesterday, John Provost picked off a fourth down Mark Tripucka pass and ran 76 yards to the end zone. Pass interference was originally called on HC's Bill Campbell, a linebacker. The score was nullified. Now for the official ruling: "Pass was thrown, tipped at line by Campbell. This prevented pass interference call. Since the tip made the ball 'free,' Provost intercepted it legally. The official who made original interference call said he did not see the tip of the ball at the line." Maybe it was figured that the parents in the crowd would like to see Provost tie the all-time career interception record that day at home. A referee has to be an authoritative figure. You either make a call then and there or you don't. Either something did or didn't happen. Don Cody did not have control of the game on Saturday. Cody, who received at least two votes for MVP, save a totally inept performance.

In the fourth quarter a face mask call on Tripucka was seen by all eyes in the press box. Don Cody did not notice anything wrong.

Maybe everything fired up the Minutemen. They scored twice following Cody's second error. By the way, the Crusader ground attack also did the Minutemen in Cannon had 130 yards and quarterback Bob Morton rushed for 101.

There were positive signs for UMass. Jim Torrance had his third hundred yard game of the season, totaling 116 on the ground. Jerry Mondalto had a third-down quick kick good for 58 yards. And one interesting stat showed a passing differential of 200-16 yards. Morton completed only one toss in the first quarter to Dave Quehl and that's all she wrote. And all the Minutemen passes were completed in the second half. But the final result on the scoreboard dictates win or loss and this time, making no excuses, outside forces prevented a UMass victory Saturday.

DISS AND DATA — The Minutemen have only won one game outside the conference, that being the 14-0 affair at Dartmouth. And Maine has already clinched a tie for the conference. UConn, New Hampshire, and UMass are all 3-2 in YanCon play and any of them can tie Maine. So this Saturday at Alumni Stadium vs. UNH is the game of the year.

AC gets new faces

By TOM CROWLEY

The new student representatives on the Athletic Council have one thing in common: the idea to protect the so-called minor sports at UMass.

Mary Leonard, Paul Gowen, Robert Spousta, and Eileen Gallant were recently appointed by the Student Senate to the Athletic Council. The new two year members will join undergraduates Tom Price, Weeden Wetmore, and Carl Vercollone on the 15 member council.

"I don't feel enough attention is being paid to the minor sports," said Spousta.

"All students deserved a chance to participate in athletics. My support of small sports is more idealistic," Spousta said.

Eileen Gallant is also a member of the women's crew team as well as the Athletic Council.

"I think lesser sports are being ignored on this campus. The money going to football and basketball is ridiculous," Gallant said.

"I want to get some input from the campus," Paul Gowan said.

Gowan also said "The Council is only advisory. I just want to air some different ideas."

The Council is chiefly an advisory board. It has no power in the control of the budget and athletic policy. It can only make recommendations. It's also very obscure.

In fact, one new member, Mary Leonard is in the dark.

"I know nothing about the Council, really," she said.

Of the four new appointees, only Spousta knew how the Council worked.

Even though they don't know that much about the Athletic Council, the new members all want change.

"I think there should be some definite changes," Leonard said. "A closer investigation should be made into where the money has been suggested to go."

"I definitely want to see some changes," Spousta said. "I expect to meet some resistance on the ideas presented by me."

The four new students' representatives have much in common. They all want to safeguard minor sports and are involved in one (crew). They all want changes. And they're all new to the job.

Will help incoming students

Collegian to publicize 5-college activities

The Daily Collegian, with the help of the Student Senate Communications Council, will publish a two-page supplement at the beginning of the second semester listing and describing the activities of all UMass and 5-college groups, Editor-in-Chief Jerry Lazar said yesterday.

The supplement will be written by officers of the Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) and acknowledged leaders of 5-college groups who wish to be listed, Lazar said.

"It is really hard for incoming students to take advantage of the incredible number of alternative groups on campus when they don't even know they exist," Lazar said. "The Collegian's listing will help eliminate that."

Only groups which voluntarily submit reports on their activities to the Communications Council by December 21 will be listed in the special supplement, Lazar said.

Here are the details of The Collegian's planned two-page listing of campus and 5-college non-profit organizations open to students:

Material for publication must be submitted by the group according to standard format. The Collegian does not have sufficient volunteer staff to solicit or write the material independently. However, The Collegian does reserve the right to edit, shorten or reject material according to the judgement of the editors.

Group leaders should understand that if there is a large response to this request, data from groups will have to be shortened to fit the two pages. Please adhere to the following form. The entire report should be no longer than one page, double-space typed.

—list official name of group, estimated number of members, names, addresses and phones of principle two leaders.

—list source and amount of funding. Membership dues (if any).

—requirements for membership (if any).

—examples of specific activities.

—customary meeting times and dates.

—signature and phone number of President or chief coordinator.

Tuition waivers, LSO among topics

Graduate senate airs grievances

By HILLARY MORTICK
Staff Reporter

Graduate student grievance procedures, policy regarding tuition waivers, and funding of Legal Services Office (LSO) attorneys were the main topics discussed by Acting Dean of the Graduate School Vere Chappell and members of the Graduate Student Senate (GSS).

Monday night's GSS agenda also included tentative approval of the Residential Life Governing Board (RLGB) Constitution. GSS President Jim Lindsey said the RLGB Constitution will be submitted as an area of dual primary responsibility by both the Student Government Association (SGA) and the GSS.

Lindsey informed the Senate of four major areas of concern he would like the GSS to examine this year. These concerns will be stated in a letter he plans to send to (SGA) President Rick Savini.

Chappell said he's been in contact with President Wood's General Counsel William E. Searson who wants neither academic nor employment issues to come under the jurisdiction of the grievance procedure policy.

Chappell disagrees. He feels students, faculty, and administration want a broader based policy so they can establish a viable working mechanism to deal with all grievances that may arise.

In other matters, Chappell said an administrative task force, convened by Chancellor Randolph Bromery, has been attempting to revise and codify existing regulations concerning tuition waivers. Since this task force is defined as an administrative one, no graduate student representative is included.

There have been several exchanges of ideas between the task force and President Wood's office. Current task force recommendations under consideration include: 1) raising the minimum stipend necessary to receive a tuition waiver, 2) granting graduate assistantships for no less than one semester, and 3) granting tuition waivers primarily for academic services (teaching, research) rather than for service to the university which have no relation to a student's academic field of study.

The task force has recommended and received Wood's support for changing the current minimum stipend necessary to receive a

UMass to make BEOG application a must

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

The financial aid services is making application for the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant a requirement for all students who are presently receiving financial assistance and who entered college after April 1, 1973.

Director of financial aid services Richard Dent said that if these students plus any independent or married students now receiving aid do not apply for this grant, that their current aid will be eliminated or reduced.

"If the student doesn't care enough to apply," said Dent, "then we don't care enough to continue their aid. We're being hard-nosed about it."

Dent said the grant (BEOG) is a Federal program in its second year. The application is available in the financial aid office and is free.

Dent stressed that the grants are based completely on need. "If your parents make under $10,000," he said, "then you are definitely eligible. If they make between $10,000 and $15,000, then you are probably eligible.

"Married students making under $3,000 to $4,000 are clearly eligible, as are single students who are earning under $2,000," he said.

Dent said 550 students are now receiving BEOG aid, and that 400-500 students in the freshman and sophmore classes who are eligible for this grant never applied for it.

The grant does not have to be paid back and awards this year have ranged from $200 to $1050 per person.

Blackout, fire hit campus

By DEBBIE SHAFER
Staff Reporter

Two malfunctions of an electrical nature disrupted activities on campus late yesterday afternoon. A 40-minute power blackout occured at 4:45 and an unrelated electrical fire broke out at 6:05.

The blackout affected Sylvan and Central residential areas, the Campus Center, Graduate Research Center, Hasbrouck Hall, Morrill Hall and the Infirmary. A physical plant spokesman cited a large fuse failure at the East Pleasant St. electrical substation as the cause of the blackout.

Power was restored to the affected buildings at approximately 5:30.

In an unrelated incident, a generator in the attic of Brooks dorm caught fire. No injuries were reported, and campus police said the incident was "very minor."

"It just caused a lot of smoke," police said.

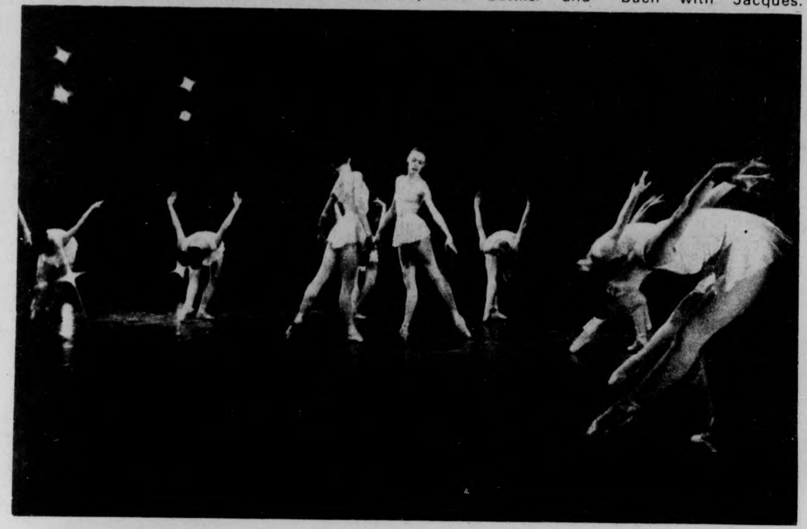
Residency program starts tomorrow

Boston Ballet to perform here

The Boston Ballet, under the artistic direction of E. Virginia Williams, will begin a half-week residency program here tomorrow under the auspices of the UMass Arts Council.

At its first performance Friday, Nov. 15, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium the program will include "Allegro Brillante," "Medea," "Grand Pas De Deux," and "Bach with Jacques." Saturday, Nov. 16, the 3 p.m. matinee, also in Bowker Auditorium, will consist of "Concerto Barocco," "Tarantella," and "Graduation Ball."



Members of the Boston Ballet will arrive here tomorrow as part of a half-week residency program. The first performance will be Friday night.

The Boston troupe will also give a lecture-demonstration tomorrow at 1 p.m. for elementary students in Hadley at Hopkins Academy. Friday at the North Physical Education Building, master classes will be given for intermediate and advanced dance students at UMass.

The residency by the Boston Ballet is a joint program of the National Endowment for the Arts and the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, administered by the Massachusetts Arts and Humanities Foundation, Inc.

Established with a Ford Foundation grant in 1963, the Boston Ballet has grown from a group of fourteen very young dancers to a seasoned company of 35, performing an extensive repertoire of classic and contemporary works.

In addition to seasons in Boston with a full symphony orchestra, the ballet has a full touring schedule and participates in the National Endowment for the Arts Touring Residency Program. The Boston Ballet performed at the White House for President Lyndon B. Johnson and for several years has been the resident ballet for the Chicago Lyric Opera. National Educational Television has twice featured the company.

The troupe continues to reach toward its goal of extending the total art of ballet in America by developing new and vital dance artists, new choreographers, new techniques for presenting dance, and new audiences.

Tickets, at $4 for the general public and $2 for UMass students, are available now at the Arts Council Box Office. Details on the master classes and lecture are also available at the Arts Council, Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202.

Patrolman Grader promoted here to sergeant on night shift

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

Patrolman Richard Grader was recently promoted to a Sergeant in the UMass Police Force.

Grader, who has been with the force for four years, was previously a patrolman and detective in the force.

Grader's new duties as Sergeant will include Shift Commander of the 3 p.m.-11 p.m. shift.

Grader placed first, of eight candidates, on the McCann Exam. The exam is given to determine the candidates ability to apply what he has learned through actual experience. The exam also included an oral board, which was evaluated by other Sergeants in the department.

Patrolman Daniel C. Hagan, who placed second on the exam, was promoted to detective on the force.

Hagan, who has been with the force for two and one half years, was previously a patrol officer on the 11 p.m.-7 a.m. shift.

Captain Robert Joyce of the department commented:

"I consider these men qualified, and expect they will provide a great service to the community in their new capacities."

Las Vegas donations tied up

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

Alpha Phi Omega and Gamma Sigma Sigma, the national service fraternity and sorority, may be able to donate $1,850 to charity earned at their Las Vegas Night. That's if another campus organization considering paying the major portion of the incurred expenses does so.

Frank Evans, advisor to Alpha Phi Omega, said this group, which they wish to keep unnamed, has not yet decided if it will pay the expenses, thus releasing more money to be donated to charity than would have been otherwise.

The money to be donated will be distributed among Amherst A.B.C. (A Better Chance) - 30 per cent; the Eunice Shriver Center for the Mentally Retarded - 30 per cent; the National Association for Paraplegics - 15 per cent; the Sickle Cell Anemia Foundation - 15 per cent; and the Local Council of the Boy Scouts of America - 10 per cent.

Las Vegas Night was held for its twelfth annual time Saturday, October 26th on the entire first floor of the Campus Center.

Nurse educator speaks tonight about institutional licensing

Lucie Young Kelly, nurse educator and spokesperson for nursing issues, will speak tonight at 8 in Mahar Auditorium.

The talk, "Institution Licensure: A Threat to Nurses and Consumers," is sponsored by the UMass nursing division, School of Health Sciences.

"Institution licensure" refers to the licensing of institutions rather than of individual nurses. Nurses across the county are licensed individually after passing written examination, and in 1973 collective action by Massachusetts nurses helped defeat proposed state legislation to change that to institution licensure. The proposed legislation (House bill 6120) involved a reorganization of the state's human services departments.

Kelly is a registered nurse who received her Ph.D. from the University of Pittsburgh School of Education. She is legislative chairperson for the New Jersey State Nurses Association.

She has been a member of and chairperson of key committees of the American Nurses' Association and the National League for Nursing, on state and local levels. Her publications include "Dimensions of Professional Nursing."

Kelly is program director of patient education, office of Consumer Health Education, College of Medicine and Dentistry, in New Jersey. And she also is an adjunct associate professor of community medicine at Rutgers Medical School.

The way it is

By SUE CARTMELL
Mt. Holyoke Choragos

A frequent response to student suggestions on this campus is the answer, "Well that's the way it is at Mount Holyoke; if you don't like it you can go somewhere else." The fact that this answer is repeatedly made to student questions (and it is my understanding that the Dean of Students Office is the most flagrant perpetrator of this "MHC-Love it or leave it" philosophy) disturbs me for two reasons.

Initially, the love-it-or-leave-it attitude breeds a sterile sameness in the community when the rationale is used to mold adherence to some preconceived Mount Holyoke norm. Then, secondly, this status quo rationale reveals the assumption that a student's attendance at college indicates her tacit compliance with a contract, the terms of which are decided completely by the college. The fact that the college has such success in creating student life-style consensus (in dorm life, eating, sleeping, studying, and even note-taking patterns) indicates that this contractual arrangement is being used by the college to maintain control.

In this contract between the student and the university, college administrators have the ability to dictate the terms of the contract, as well as to determine where and how it is to be applied. But where does this leave students, especially at a place that presumes to claim it encourages women to exert some control over their lives?

There are two ways students can deal with an oppressive contract. Both acknowledge that our technocratic society uses colleges to put the finishing touches on the socialization process. The first approach tries to deal with the college on its own terms of power politics.

The first approach is a union of students operating under student organizing legislation in a way similar to the operation of labor unions under the National Labor Relations Act. Legal groundwork for a union of students was laid when eighteen-year-olds were given the power to make contracts. The college experience is interpreted legally as a contract made between the college and the student for a degree.

Another alternative is to put colleges under an administrative board composed of students, faculty, and administration for the purpose of making policy decisions about the entire Mount Holyoke experience. Instead of accepting our present division into three camps, such a committee would highlight (in the same manner that the student presence on the A.P.C. has) our common goals and concerns.

Hampshire Union staff vote set for Friday

By BIFF PRICE
of the Hampshire Climax

Tensions mount for the clerical staff of Hampshire College as the date for voting on unionization draws near.

The November 15th contest between District 65, representing other college clerical staffs, and 'no-union' will be the second such vote at Hampshire College. The campaign for or against the union seems to be mainly carried out with discussions, meeting and memos. The only exception being a pro-union newsletter, Reunion, started at the beginning of the unionization effort over a year ago.

The Hampshire Climax reports that there have already been meetings to discuss possible contract demands, so that if the union does win bargaining can start immediately.

This vote will indeed be important to the entire 5-College community. If District 65 wins at Hampshire, moves toward unionization will spread to other colleges, private and public. The win would also spur on moves for students and faculty to consider some sort of union. If the staff votes 'no', it could be many years before unionization is considered again, at Hampshire or elsewhere.

Inter-college IDs fail

By CAROLYN HULL-RYDE
Smith College
5-College Correspondent

In response to charges that Smith College identification cards would not work in the five-college system, Mr. Gilbert, responsible for the ID process at Smith, replied, "Our cards were designed to be compatible with and not identical to the other five-college cards."

The college's new yellow ID cards with embossed names and social security numbers are the result of a year's study by the valley colleges to make identification cards at the five institutions interchangeable in library computers and meal exchange systems. In addition the cards were made compatible to facilitate student identification.

Smith ID cards may be used in the UMass library computer system and are compatible with the food service system at Amherst. The cards are not like the IDs at the other five colleges, but Smith cards may be used with slight adaptation in the UMass library. They require no alteration for use in the Amherst "charge-card" meal exchange system.

Smith and Mt. Holyoke were the only five colleges to have IDs made on campus. Amherst, UMass, and Hampshire sent ID photos to a company in Indiana which supposedly produced a more durable card. Amherst, for example, wanted the cards to last two to four years. Betty Brace head of the UMass circulation department commented that UMass cards went to Indiana and that some are already beginning to disintegrate.

The new Smith IDs are security proof. Gilbert demonstrated that the Smith cards were unalterable by slitting the vinyl cover with a pocketknife. The picture came off embedded in the vinyl. "It would be impossible to substitute another picture on these cards," he concluded.

Gilbert conceded that the Smith card was designed for use in the UMass library computer. The card already has the student's social security number as identification. The number 7 before the social security number tells the computer a student is from Smith.

The cards may not be used as they are now in the UMass system. They must be adapted. In order to check out books through this; computer, a student must have a "guide-hole" punched in her card at the UMass library. The card must also be hollirithed, which means punching holes that the computer associates with a student's name. This device is available at the UMass library to adapt Smith cards for use in the computer.

Identification cards at UMass and Hampshire are interchangeable in their automated systems. Brace of the UMass Library said that "the automated system at UMass provides quicker, easier access to books out on loan than the older write-in system."

Smith's library has no automated computer system but uses ID cards to identify students. Ms. Courtney of Smith's circulation department said, "We are very pleased with our system." Smith has no plans to initiate a computer checkout system in the circulation department until the new library is built, according to other sources.

The Smith card was embossed for use in the Amherst "charge-card" meal exchange machines. It was found that the name and social security numbers on the Amherst cards are reversed in position from the Smith cards but this has not affected interchangeability in the Amherst system.

The cards at Mt. Holyoke were embossed for use in the Mt. Holyoke bookstore, but other five college cards cannot be charged on there.

tuition waiver ($1250 per year) to half the current standard stipend of a full-time teaching assistant (TA). A full-time TA now receives $3600 a year; so the suggested minimum stipend would be $1800 which may become effective June 1.

Finally, regarding LSO, Chappell explained his understanding is that the President's office is now leaning back to 03 funding (temporary services, non-employee) of LSO attorneys.

According to a GSS spokesperson, the main objection to the 03 funding of the attorneys is that as state employees, they'd be unable to sue their funding agency. Lindsey commented, "We're looking for the least binding agreement on the attorneys within the legal framework within which we're operating."

In further GSS news, Lindsey outlined four main areas of concern to graduate students that he's including in a letter to SGA President Savini: "1) Greater financial autonomy for the graduate student monies collected on this campus, 2) A built-in service component as a mandatory requirement of all graduate students' education, 3) an improvement in the services which graduate students pay for directly with mandatory fees and indirectly with lost time and aggravation due to bureaucratic malfeasance, 4) Explanation of unionization of graduate students will be investigated."

'Toughest problems' not yet resolved

Mine shutdown causes industrial cutbacks

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Soft-coal miners, following their "no contract - no work" tradition, idled the nation's mines yesterday. Some railroads and steel plants immediately announced layoffs or production cutbacks and the federal government began monitoring soft coal exports.

Negotiators for the 120,000-member United Mine Workers and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association renewed their protracted contract talks in Washington with what industry representative Guy Farmer called "the toughest problems" still to be settled.

The miners have been pushing for increased mine safety as well as pay increases and improvements in sick pay and vacations.

Neither side expressed optimism for a settlement before the end of the week. Union ratification procedures in which all the rank-and-file members will vote on accepting a new contract would take an estimated 10 days to two weeks after that, leaving little hope of re-opening the mines until after Thanksgiving.

UMW President Arnold Miller said some progress had been made in the talks but "Some progress is not enough to undo 40 years of indifference and neglect."

Farmer said he hoped a settlement could be reached this week but "We're writing an entire contract from Page 1 to the end."

Major coal-related industries, chiefly railroads and steel companies, began cutting back operations. Initially minor, the cutbacks were expected to escalate as the miners strike progressed.

Reports from the 25 coal producing states indicated the walkout was, virtually complete. The miners, who receive no strike pay from the UMW, had expected the walkout and many had laid in stores of food and saved money in anticipation.

Ernest Enedy, 44, a 26-year veteran of the mines, said in Portage, Pa., that a miner's "whole life is lived in preparation for no work."

Enedy and his wife enlarged their garden, stocked up sweet corn and potatoes, canned vegetables and fruit, and froze a side of beef.

Penn Central, Norfolk and Western, and the Chesapeake and Ohio railroads, which haul coal, announced layoffs.

Report on Project Independence claims U.S. needs imported oil

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Eliminating oil imports within a decade is neither possible nor desirable, and continued high world prices would be the nation's best buffer against another Arab embargo, the Federal Energy Administration said yesterday.

These were among conclusions reached in a 1,000-word report on Project Independence, a national goal of approaching energy self-sufficiency by 1985, set by President Richard M. Nixon and passed along to the Ford administration.

John C. Sawhill, being forced out as head of the FEA because of policy differences with the administration, said in summarizing the report:

"We do not think zero imports would be a desirable or achievable goal for United States energy policy. International considerations, domestic energy realities and economic common sense may all argue for a policy in which the United states continues to import some of its oil."

"Oil imports will remain level or rise in the next few years, no matter what long-term actions we take," the report said. Besides, it said, deliberate limiting of imports could damage the economy unless domestic production was brought up to demand, and could upset the balance of trade.

One of the four broad options for U.S. energy policy set forth in the report was to maintain roughly a status quo, based on an assumption that Americans will spend less on oil if prices remain high.

Thus if the world oil price remains at $11 a barrel, domestic demand will increase only slightly, the report said. But if prices drop somewhat, it said, demand would push the nation's needs to 12.4 million barrels of foreign oil a day and a one-year Arab embargo could cost this country $205 billion.

Tight security surrounds U.N. as Arafat due to arrive today

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] - Representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization made their first foray into the United Nations protected by a massive security operation yesterday to pave the way for the arrival of their leader Yasser Arafat.

The FBI, meanwhile, arrested an official of the Jewish Defense League after the militant organization vowed Arafat will not leave New York alive.

Arafat was scheduled to arrive in this county today to demand before the U.N. General Assembly a homeland for Palestinian refugees.

As the 20-member PLO delegation made its first moves in the United Nations, hundreds of police and special agents ringed the skyscraper U.N. headquarters building. Marksmen were stationed on rooftops and in nearby buildings.

Other officers with guard dogs patrolled streets and the city's bomb squad was on alert after telephoned threats.

The United Nations was closed to all but official visitors, losing an estimated $4,000 a day from its guided tours.

Arafat left Cairo early yesterday en route to New York but Arab sources professed not to know his arrival time. They would say only that he must arrive by 9 a.m. EST today. He was scheduled as the first speaker in the General Assembly's historic Palestine debate at 10:30 a.m.

One security official revealed that the route Arafat would take into Manhattan would not be chosen until five minutes before the motorcade gets underway.

At a news conference Monday night, members of the Jewish Defense League, displaying a pistol on the table in front of them, vowed publicly to assassinate Arafat during his visit to the United Nations.

"We are ready to assassinate Arafat, JDL spokesman Russell Kelner said. "This has been carefully planned. We have trained men who will make sure Arafat does not leave New York alive."

The FBI arrested Kelmer yesterday. FBI officials would not disclose the exact charges to be filed against him.

Seemingly unabashed by the threats and huge demonstrations that marked their arrival Monday and kept them virtual prisoners in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel overnight, the PLO delegates, dressed in Western business suits, pledged to intensify diplomatic and political efforts in their future activities.

25,000 vets totally disabled

Veterans' disabilities linger on after war

By GORDON HANSON
Associated Press Writer
Part 2 Of A 2 Part Series

American participation in the Vietnam ground war ended two years ago. Today nearly half of the 338,851 Vietnam-era veterans with service-connected injuries have a disability rating of 10 per cent or more. Twenty-five thousand are rated 100 per cent disabled.

On an average day there are 9,450 disabled Vietnam vets in the nation's 172 VA hospitals, says a spokesman for the VA. And 5,800 of them are either psychotic or undergoing psychiatric treatment.

Personality disorders relating to behavior and to relationships with others are higher among Vietnam veterans than they were among the veterans of World War II and Korea, says Dr. Gordon Braatz, clinical psychologist at the VA hospital in Minneapolis.

Disabled veterans Timothy Day and Maury Rahm aren't optimistic about the future. They say they take each day as it comes. Each has two children, as does Stanger.

"My wife worries a lot about the bills," says Day. "I don't. If I want to get drunk instead of paying the electric bill, I'll get drunk. I live for myself. But still my family is my future."

Rahm, who said he went to Vietnam believing he was fighting for a cause, is severely limited by his disability — his paralyzed legs and right arm. He sleeps late and "musters for lunch. I don't like to drink, so at night I work in a shop in my garage. I spend most of my time there working on stereos and tape players. I flunked out in the second semester at electronics school, but I think I'll go back."

Former Marine Chester Stanger has "no regrets. I love everything I did. The past was beautiful. Life is too perfect for people to be hateful and headstrong. I got that attitude the day I was hit. I don't have to prove anything to anybody, now that I've proved it to myself."

Day recently had a fifth operation to clear a stubborn infection in his skull where the enemy slug penetrated. "They've taken out everything I had to hear with," he said, gently adjusting the black leather patch he occasionally wears over his left ear."

He receives a $188 monthly disability check and $110 a week as a materials handler for a publishing company.

"It was the only place in town that would hire me, because I'm deaf in one ear."

A Veterans Administration spokesman in Washington said the unemployment rate among all seven million veterans of the Vietnam era "is lower than for the non-veteran population." He said unemployment statistics are not available for the disabled veteran.

Stanger, a bearded, soft-spoken 6-footer, who weighs 220 pounds, wears an artificial leg and is a clerk-typist at the Des Moines VA Hospital. He had wanted to be a police officer.

He receives a $334 disability check each month. It once was $200 higher, but a review board decided that his disability wasn't as great as originally determined.

Disability pensions now range from $32 to $1,400 monthly. They would go up 15 to 18 per cent in 1975 if President Ford signs a bill approved by Congress to increase the VA budget from the present $13.7 billion annually to $14.1 billion next year. Ford has said he'll veto the bill as inflationary.

Rahm drives his specially equipped car to the nearby VA hospital several times a week for physical therapy. He gets a $1,297 disability check monthly and lives with his family in a comfortable $49,500 ranch house. The VA gave him $12,500 to help equip the house for his special needs.

The car has changed Rahm's life. "The first three years after I was wounded, I didn't have a car. Guys used to drive me around. If nobody was able to, I had to stay where I was at."

Day thought about his return from Vietnam. "It's sad to come back to a country that didn't believe in your fighting for it."

Rahm: "Some World War II people don't like our war."

Day: "What makes their war better than ours."

Law banning busing ruled unconstitutional

BOSTON [UPI] - A legislative amendment prohibiting forced busing as a method of implementing Massachusetts' first-in-the-nation 1965 Racial Imbalance Law in Springfield is unconstitutional, the State Supreme Court ruled yesterday.

Chief Justice G. Joseph Tauro, writing for the majority in the 4-3 opinion, said depriving the State Board of Education of the power to order busing was, "in effect, an authorization to discriminate."

The high court was asked in August by the Springfield School Committee to vacate an earlier order mandating the school committee to implement a plan to racially balance the city's schools.

The motion to vacate was based on the enactment late in July of Chapter 636, which amended the 1965 Racial Imbalance Law by removing from the Board of Education the power to use busing as a means toward integration.

The motion was denied in late August, a few days before the scheduled opening of Springfield schools. Approximately 6,000 students have been bused without incident in Springfield since classes began.

The judges said in the opinion that it was a "likely inference" that Chapter 636 was enacted with the intention of short-circuiting implementation of the board-ordered and court-ordered balance plan.

AEC coverup?

CAMBRIDGE [AP] — The Union of Concerned Scientists has charged that the Atomic Energy Commission is involved in "a massive coverup" of the possibility of catastrophic nuclear power plant accidents.

The coalition of scientists, engineers and other professionals said yesterday it will request a meeting with President Ford to discuss "documentary evidence" in the form of AEC internal studies and memoranda, that the commission is engaging in a coverup of plant safety hazards.

In their letter to Ford, the scientists said "According to AEC files that we have obtained, AEC officials, both past and present, have repeatedly taken steps to mislead the public, the Congress, the courts, and the successive administrations about nuclear power plant safety hazards of the utmost gravity."

The group is recommending to the President that he suspend further plans for nuclear power plant construction because of the evidence of safety hazards.

Kalmbach testifies

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Judge John J. Sirica yesterday interrupted the Watergate coverup trial to personally challenge Herbert W. Kalmbach's tearful testimony that money paid the burglars was for humanitarian purposes and not to hush them up.

Throughout an emotion-packed day on the witness stand, Kalmbach had insisted he understood that some $220,000 he raised and dispersed for the bugging team was solely for support and legal fees and not to buy their silence.

Embargo upheld

QUITO, Ecuador [AP] — Hemispheric foreign ministers yesterday rejected the lifting of 10-year-old economic and political sanctions against Cuba. The United States said no clear satisfaction exists that Fidel Castro's regime has stopped exporting revolution.

The measure failed after five fruitless days of meetings under auspices of the Organization of America States.

The foreign ministers came to Quito at the request of Costa Rica, Colombia and Venezuela, who declared that Cuba no longer presents the threat of revolution to the Americas that it did in 1964 when the OAS first invoked the sanctions.

Ford sees recession

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The White House bowed to statistics yesterday and conceded the nation was moving into a recession.

After weeks of avoiding the word, presidential Press Secretary Ron Nessen said that economic indicators he has seen for November "will show that this month we are moving into a recession."

Nixon problem found

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Richard Nixon's blood pressure shoots up markedly when he is under even "minor stress" such as talking with a visitor or thinking about a problem, his physician reported yesterday.

The regular medical bulletin from Dr. John Lungren raised for the first time the question of "hypertension" in the cardiac system as one of the complications following surgery for phlebitis.

Ancient science of soul travel

Eckankar science can raise consciousness

By DENNIS SUMAN
Staff Reporter

"Eckankar," said Arron E. Boykin, president of the Eckankar International Society at UMass, "is the ancient science of Soul Travel."

It is the natural way of attaining God-Realization by shifting one's consciousness beyond the limited physical planes of time and space, or worlds of duality, to the higher, spirtual realms, thereby achieving self-realization, or objective consciousness."

Soul Travel differs from other consciousness or meditative disciplines, such as Transendental Meditation or yoga, Boykin explained, in that these other disciplines' highest level of awareness is limited by their very nature to the mental realms, known to still be in the worlds of duality. Through the spiritual excercises of Eckankar and the inner guidance of the living Eckankar Master, Darwin Gross, one is able to travel to other worlds and realms.

"By focusing on the third or spirtual eye of the Soul, one is able to make contact with Darwin Gross, the present living Eckankar Master, and by using him as a coworker, be taken into the higher realms of consciousness, above the universal mind and above cosmic consciousness to the God-state," he said.

The student of Soul Travel is taken by the Master into the pure spirtual worlds separated from the mind, and he learns to have his existence in these higher spiritual worlds while directing his actions and activities in the world below, with the result that he functions on a much higher state of awareness.

"It's important to realize that there is never a final level of attainment," Cris O' Connor, a member of the society said. "There are an infinite number of realms or planes one constantly strives for, there's always that plus factor to one's awareness level one can go on to."

The society will be holding a "Darji" Dinner (Darji being the spiritual name for Darwin Gross) tomorrow from 5 to 7 p.m. The public is invited to attend.

Anyone interested in obtaining more information on the dinner and seminar, or in learning more about the society or Soul Travel in general, can contact. Boykin at 549-1698, or Michael Short at 256-8079.

Students complain about N.E. occupancy

By ROBERT SHEMELIGIAN
Staff Correspondent

Roger Cruff, director of The Office of Residental Life for Administrative Services, heard student's objections to the occupancy rate in the Northeast Area Monday night in Johnson House Lounge, and said that although he was concerned, he would not lower it.

Most of the objections were raised by students from Johnson House who thought it was unfair that "we have to have all the triples." Johnson House has the only 14 legitimate triples on campus.

Most students present at the meeting thought triples were an "undesirable living situation" and wanted "a yes or no answer" to the problem before room choosing comes up in December.

"It's not going to be a yes or no answer from me", said Cruff, "I can only make a recommendation."

Cruff proposed to "keep the triples open only if they're voluntary." This means that no students would be assigned to a triple unless specificallly requested by the student. Some of the people dissatisfied with triples volunteered for them.

One woman who asked in September to be put in a triple, said "it's not that we don't like each other, its just that we can't hack living together in a triple. You go to your room to be alone and you can't be alone."

Some Johnson House students feel the most desirable answer to the problem would be the lowering of the occupancy rate in the Northeast Area.

Outing club features program with slides

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

A slide show featuring the outdoors program at the University of Oregon was shown Monday evening in the Campus Center at a meeting of the Outing Club.

The slides were shown to promote ideas for an outdoor program at UMass.

Development of the outdoors program was started two years ago, and is being coordinated through the Student Activities Committee.

The outdoors program will be independent of the Outing Club, Bruce Lindwall, vice-president of the Outing Club said.

Lindwall said the Outing Club is helping to start the outdoors program because they have much in common.

Lindwall said, "The Outing Club is divided into several committees, most of them dealing directly with the outdoors.

"These committees include cross country skiing, caving, canoeing, rock climbing, winter mountaineering, safety, conservation, and publicity."

Trips are not run on a regular basis. Anyone who wants to lead a trip can do so. Group equipment is provided free by the club.

"Trips have ranged anywhere from the Amherst sanctuary to Mexico," Lindwall said.

"The Outing Club is a collection of individuals with a common interest who enjoy being together."

The club meets every Monday at 6:30 p.m. Locations are announced in the Collegian.

On Monday, November 18, the film The Rise and Fall of the Great Lakes will be shown.

Yearbooks still available; Index needs volunteers

John Neister, Index Editor-in-Chief, says yearbooks are still available to anyone having a computer card given out at registration. He said there are 600 books left.

The yearbook is the lost Index to be published. This book represents the dedication of many people and a whole year of work to capture a few glimpses of the UMass-Amherst campus during its 1973-74 schoolyear, Neister said.

Index needs writers for this year's book, Neister said. The Index is interested in anyone wanting to write on any topic and no previous writing experience is needed. Those interested should drop by the Index office in room 409 of the Student Union, or call 545-0848.

The Index is also looking for any art student experienced in oil painting to do some art work for the front cover.

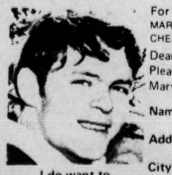
why does a man join Maryknoll?

There are probably as many answers as there are individual Maryknoll priests and Brothers. Some men are deeply moved when they hear of babies dying in their mother's arms because of hunger or disease. Others are distressed by the growing antagonism and separation between the rich and the poor nations. More are concerned about the great injustices that have been inflicted upon the poor by those who possess wealth and power to an excessive degree. Others look to learn from peoples who have grown up with a different mentality than that which is theirs. All feel that the only solution to the crises that threaten to split men asunder is the love of God as shown in the life of His Son, Jesus Christ. This love of God urges men to go forward and be missioners so men can love one another. What could be your reason for joining Maryknoll?

If you keep saying you want to do something with your life – here's your chance to prove it



I do want to do something.

Organizes Hatch Jam Sessions

John Walker believes jazz can survive here

By DENNIS MCNALLY
Staff Correspondent

Jazz has usually meant people like Charlie Parker or John Coltrane flying through the infinite possibilities of sound and thought in some smoky room, leaving the audience to stumble into gritty city streets at dawn, minds happily blown. The question is, can an urban black art form find happiness in a small Western Massachusetts town like Amherst? John Walker thinks so.

Walker is the moving force behind the Jazz Jam Sessions which have appeared on three Wednesday nights in the Hatch this semester. He feels that jazz is the music of the future, as well as America's greatest native art form, and the UMass students are being cheated of musical alternatives by the area's lack of jazz. "Jazz already has thumbs down on it," he argues, "because of years of 'it's only a black art form and its supposed to stay in a certain place,' but if this is an educational institution, we should be able to make that decision for ourselves."

To do that, Walker went to the Campus Center Entertainment office this summer with a proposal that they accepted; he would organize four Bi-Weekly Sessions in, as it turned out, the Hatch. After four sessions, they would evaluate the program.

His quartet would receive a minimal fee to play and serve as back-up for anyone in the area who felt confident enough to get on stage with professionals. The idea, Walker said, would benefit both an audience looking for something other than rock and roll, and give student musicians "a place to experiment, to show you what we worked on this week."

So far, there have been three sessions. The first was hardly publicized, the second featured Archie Shepp and drew 175 people, the third was first cancelled and then played before an audience of 275 last week. But in the middle of a stomping set, Walker had to tell the audience that he didn't know whether the series could continue. Curious, I joined him in a talk with Carl Clay and Ed Vadas, who are in charge of Hatch entertainment.

Both men denied hating jazz, and said that their hesitancy about the sessions evolved from the bottom line--the sessions have lost, according to Clay, around $95 a show. "We're committed," he said, "to as broad a range of entertainment as possible, but it must be on a break-even basis." He conceded that he was overstaffed--nine employees last week--but warned of the difficulty of balancing costs with the obligation to keep student jobs. His job has other difficulties; bar business is down nationwide, and nothing in the Hatch has done well so far.

Clay came to the job in September, and says that he's become really oriented only recently. When asked about the future of the Sessions, he refused to commit himself either way, and said that planning for next semester would take place next month. Finally, as if to get this very rude reporter and Mr. Walker off his back, he set November 13 as this semester's last date for jazz.

Walker argues that the office has not given him full support, and that the sessions could make money with full scale advertising and cooperation. He points to the relative success of the sessions already, even without the momentum building regularity of scheduling he wants.

He also pointed to a casual comment made by Ed Vadas, who suggested that UMies liked only rock and roll, and "if we put in something different...the kids go by 'ho hum!" Walker finds that condescending and a self-fulfilling prophecy; "if you can't see anything different, how can you like it? All I'm asking for is a fair chance, and so far I'm not getting it."

As he also said, "the bar is the yardstick for all programs here." If the crowd at the last session (Wednesday, Nov. 13, 9-1) buys over $340 worth of beer, the sessions stand a chance for next semester. For the moment, it's up to the fans.

President Ford's "WIN" Policy is a No Win Policy for the American People

WE HAVE BEEN TOLD: We consumers are causing inflation through our imprudent use of credit and our excessive expenditure on food, housing, and travel.
FACT: Over the past year, real expenditure of the average consumer has gone down. We do not have to be told that we are buying fewer goods and services than a year ago, we can feel it!

WE HAVE BEEN TOLD: We as workers are causing inflation through our demands for increased wages and salaries.

FACT: Over recent years, real wages, the amount of goods and services that the average wage earner can buy, have declined.

WE HAVE BEEN TOLD: Too much government spending on social services pushes up prices.
FACT: It is now clear that the government's attempt to stem inflation by cutting social welfare expenditure and increasing unemployment is working no better now than it did when it was tried in 1970.

WHAT IS THE CAUSE OF INFLATION: A complete discussion on inflation is complex. However, it is clear that the industries in the American economy have become more concentrated in the hands of a few. This concentration has given the corporations the power to increase prices, arbitrarily. It is to these monopolies that we should direct our efforts at stemming inflation.

OUR DEMANDS:

1. Roll back prices, especially on food, gas, and utilities, to 1970 levels and freeze them.
2. Create jobs by instituting programs, such as the building of humane low cost housing and better schools, to alleviate the inexcusable unemployment, especially that of the near depression level now experienced by nationally oppressed people.
3. Training for socially useful and meaningful jobs at a living wage.
4. End the movement of factories to avoid paying decent wages.
5. End the waste of our resources by cutting back the military budget.
6. No more big business created shortages, such as the energy crisis.
7. Roll back tuition and student fees for food and shelter to 1970 levels.
8. Increase financial aid for all students who need it.
9. Abolish the sub-minimum wage for students and increase the minimum for all workers.

Dukakis rejects limousine

BOSTON [AP] - Gov.-elect Michael S. Dukakis says he will give up the governor's rented car and will urge the other constitutional officers to give up theirs.

Gov. Francis W. Sargent uses a Lincoln which the state rents from the manufacturer at $1,500 a year.

"I won't have a limousine," Dukakis said in an interview with the Boston Herald-American. "I don't need one and I will suggest to the other constitutional officers that they return their leased cars."

A spokesman said yesterday that if Dukakis as governor needs to go somewhere by car, "He will have someone drive him, either in his car or someone else's." Dukakis rides to work every morning from his Brookline home on the Green Line trolleys of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority. He has said he will continue that practice.

Four of the other five constitutional officers use state-rented cars but do not get the attractive terms offered to governors by the Ford Motor Co. manufacturer of the Lincoln.

For example, the Ford sedan leased by Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight from a dealer in Revere costs the state $3,276 a year.

Auditor Thaddeus Buczko uses a 1972 Buick which was bought outright by the state when new.

Amherst astrologers hit Ford on timing

By MARK BACKER
Staff Correspondent

The stars tried to tell President Gerald R. Ford that Oct. 17 was a bad day to veto the Freedom of Information Bill. For, on that day, the planet Mercury was in retrograde.

Amherst members of the Astrological Society made this observation at a recent meeting.

"It's important to know that his decision was made during an unfavorable time," President Don Cerow of the Astrological Society said.

"When a Mercury-retrograde occurs, it's a time for looking back and reflecting on the past, not making decisions which concern the future."

Besides studying President Ford's Astrological Chart, the Astrological Society also held elections and discussed plans for future activities.

Deciding that a joint vice-presidency would be divided into internal and external affairs, the Society elected Pat Gray and Leslie Mitchel. Jeff Jawer was elected treasurer and Larrie Shea, secretary. The election of Don Cerow as president had taken place at an earlier meeting.

In other business, the Society decided to have a trip to the UMass Observatory on Nov. 19 and to hold an open-house on Nov. 26.

"The open-house will be a free exchange between the Society and the community. We will be having visiting astrologers who will help us draw-up people's charts for free," Cerow said.

Tay-Sachs tests this Sunday

Jewish center sponsors disease detection

A program of Tay-Sachs disease detection is now available for the Amherst-Springfield area. This testing will be held Sunday, from 1-5 p.m. at the Jewish Community Center, 1160 Dickinson Street, Springfield.

Organizers urge all Jewish couples of child-bearing age to be tested. Couples can register for the testing by calling 739-9601 between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. or 739-4715 between 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. (1:00 p.m. on Friday) during the week of Nov. 11-15.

The Tay-Sachs Prevention Program, under the sponsorship of the Beth Israel Hospital, the Combined Jewish Philanthropies of Greater Boston and the Tay-Sachs Foundation of New England, is cooperating with local organizations in planning the mass screening to detect carriers of the trait for the disease.

The goals of the Tay-Sachs Prevention Program are to publicize and conduct in central locations monthly screenings for the Tay-Sachs trait in individuals of child-bearing age, organizers say. The education campaign of the program is primarily directed towards Jewish couples between ages 18-40 but all couples including non-Jews who wish to be tested will be accommodated. About 500-1000 are expected at each of the screening sessions.

The nerve cells of children affected with Tay-Sachs disease will store abnormally large concentrations of a specific brain liquid known as Tay-Sachs ganglioside. Eventually this process destroys their nerve cells. The signs of the disease begin very early in life. In the affected newborn child, muscle tone may be diminished and the child appears to startle easily.

Motor development is delayed. The child may learn to roll over, but usually does not achieve the ability to sit or stand. A few months after his first birthday, seizures develop and his head size begins to increase disproportionately.

After about 20 months of age, blindness and paralysis become evident. The affected child is totally bed-ridden and expressionless. Feeding becomes difficult, frequent infections occur, and inevitably the child dies, usually before his-her fourth or fifth birthday.

It has been estimated that one in every 30 Jews with Eastern European background is a carrier for the disease. Children of two carriers run a one out of four chance of having Tay-Sachs.

For additional information, contact the Tay-Sachs Prevention Program at (617) 893-0600 or write Tay-Sachs Prevention Program, 200 Trapelo Road, Waltham, Mass. 02154. For information locally call, Elliot Feldman 253-3968.

OHAG calls for better living conditions

To the Editor:

At a recent meeting of the Orchard Hill Area Government, problems with dorm and Hill maintenance and upkeep were discussed. It was the consensus of this body that:

1. there do exist conditions on the Hill that warrant investigation, e.g. dirty bathrooms, broken glass lying on the grounds, floors and walls in dorm halls that need cleaning, etc.

2. In many cases, vandalism, and student apathy and fear in dealing with their fellow students who are doing the damage, is a cause of some of the existing conditions on the Hill. OHAG has set up a Vandalism Investigation Committee whose responsibility, in conjunction with OHAG, is to look into this problem and to try to deal with it by educating its constituents as to individual responsibility and liability in such cases.

3. Dickinson dorm and Field dorm have found their janitorial services to be up to par, with few complaints to register.

4. However, poor conditions do exist in Grayson and Webster, as a result of poor scheduling of jobs done weekly, as well as daily routine maintenance which has fallen behind.

5. In certain cases, the Physical Plant has been negligent in its duties in seeing that such things as broken glass and bottles are cleaned up from the grounds, or in maintaining decent health and sanitary conditions in the dorms, notably Grayson and Webster.

6. We demand action be taken by responsible people in the Physical Plant, and further, that Physical Plant set a publicized level of standards agreeable to residents of the dorms.

Since poor conditions do exist in two of the Orchard Hill dorms, which are a part of the Hill as a whole, the Area Government deemed it necessary to publicize its feelings on this matter to provoke quick and lasting reactions to these problems. We have noted recent changes and improvements in service in Webster, specifically. However, we, as a body, are concerned that this matter not be dropped when the publicity dies down, and that permanent changes be effected, not just temporary ones to appease irate students.

Hamlin House should stop self pity act

To the Editor:

Monday evening I happened to pass through the Campus Center on my way home form an Economics discussion. I was feeling like a fat, rich American who could find better ways to spend my energies than studying. With all of the injustices in the world, there has to be more to life than this. When I hit the concourse, I ran into a group of people carrying signs and chanting, "We demand our rights". At first I thought it was the Campus Center Student Employees and I thought this was good because when you have to have money to eat, you have to have it. But I was wrong. It was the inhabitants of Hamlin House protesting being moved so that the dorm may be renovated. The signs said such things as "Another screw job". "I am a displaced person", etc. Several of these innovative individuals even had D.P. on their backs in masking tape.

Now really. I personally feel that interpersonal relationships are the most important things for the individual, that they must come first. However, with the inevitability of international depression, the possibility of world wide revolution [most of the world cannot go to bed hungry every night and take it sitting down], and people starving to death at the rate of 10,000 a day, can't you, er, gentlemen find someplace better to put your energies? Do you realize what a displaced person really is? You use the term so lightly. If Hamlin is not open next semester, will you still have a roof over your heads and central heating? I think so. I also think that you will have indoor plumbing and electricity, which puts you ahead of most of the world. Think about it.

I realize that one must clean one's own house first, but how can you complain about dirty ashtrays when your neighbor's roof is falling in and killing his kids?

Southwest women plan weekend

To the Editor:

The Southwest Women's Center is sponsoring a Women's Weekend November 15, 16 and 17, 1974.

The "Clinch Mountain Backsteppers", a bluegrass band on tour from Colorado will play on Friday night, beginning at 8 p.m. in the Hampden Student Center. Beer will be sold and there will be a $.50 admission charge in a one-woman Ceramic Art Show to be held from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday.

Gayle Vernon, a graduate of Mass. College of Art and owner of her own studio in Milton, Mass. will display and sell her work. This will include sculpture, jewelry, and other ceramic pieces. Wine and cheese will be served free of charge.

On Sunday the Women's Center will provide coffee, donuts and several newspapers from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Following this at 2:30 p.m. "Mary Churchill and the Cranberry Puppets" from The Puppet and Showplace in Boston will present a Feminist Puppet Show. Young and old are encouraged to attend.

The Southwest Women's Center is located in the MacKimmie-Crampton Apartment.

Come, bring a friend, and enjoy!

Unionites have no control

By ERIC FLEET

When conditions of unfairness and injustice exist those individuals being treated poorly have the right to organize in any orderly fashion they choose for the purpose of righting injustice. This appears to be the case today at the University of Massachusetts, where a group of students are demanding a student union. While I fully support the right to voluntarily organize, in the light of today's labor situation, I feel compelled to warn students of the hazards involved in the sacrifice of some freedom to a larger group.

As bad as the University may appear to be, one is free here to pursue life (i.e. attend classes, join clubs, "find oneself") within a very liberal framework. Beyond a few bungling bureaucrats at registration, one does not need to deal with the U or any intermediary body at any time. This kind of freedom, freedom from hassle, is most valued by students, who need time to deal with all those other problems we need not mention here. As I see it, no gross injustices are being committed, save the residency requirement.

Yet, we are faced with a group of activists clamoring for power, and quite radically at that. Before we delegate our individual freedom to any one group, we must know exactly who that group is and if it is owned by any political party, as remote as that possibility may seem. The power any potential student union could wield would not necessarily be that presently held by UMass but that of individual students. We must fear power in the hands of a small group of students, as it could become far more despotic than that of the University's. Unless such an organization is totally voluntary and students are free to withdraw at will, I cannot give it my support and I would urge others to do likewise. One need only look at American labor to foresee what a despotic union could do.

During the late 1800's and early 1900's a legitimate movement began to organize labor for protection against the arbitrary power of an industry which owned the government, lock, stock, President and Congress. Unfortunately, as can be seen today, the rank and file worker lost control of his union and it became an instrument of further exploitation. A few elite activists now control the unions and make all policy decisions. In many states a worker is forced to join a union in order to hold a job, regardless of his political convictions. And to put the bridle on the jackass, billions of dollars in union dues are donated to a certain political party, which need not be mentioned, without the rank and file ever being considered. If a worker does not want his dues to support a particular candidate he is, of course, free to quit his job.

If students are not careful they may soon see the day when their money is controlled by a certain political group in opposition to their interests. This group, in possession of arbitrary power over "everything affecting student life" and with complete control over the purse strings could conceivably discontinue courses it disliked, remove Recognized Student Organization from clubs it did not agree with or suppress activity by groups and individuals it opposed. Don't believe it? Look at labor.

William Pitt, a renowned British statesman once said, "Unlimited power corrupts the possessor." A student union, however well intentioned, would be no exception.

Editorial Points

Protest sign of the week, seen at Monday's student town meeting: "Put Gage in a cage."

Or better yet, how about a corner room in Southwest?

———

Or even better yet, how about making him wait for a room until renovation of Hamlin is completed?

———

$1.76 per gallon for regular and $2.66 for high test gas in Israel with the current inflation. And a member of the UMass Whitmore brain trust was heard to ask, "why don't they just get their gas from the Arabs, since they're so close?" Probably the same guy who ordered the building of Southwest.

———

Wonder what the administrators are going to use as an excuse for avoiding students now that the town meeting's history?

———

Maybe the only answer to the situation is some good, old fashioned PROTEST.

The sacred bull

The problem of hunger has recently emerged to the forefront of the world's issues. Even now, as we bask in the affluent sun, 1500 of the earth's most prominent demagogues display their talents at a conference called for the very purpose of providing food for the masses in "underdeveloped countries."

The conference started on a predictable note, with delegates hurling international, ideological insults at each other's nations and shouting about the inability of the competition to cope with the problem at hand. As usual, our beloved United States took the brunt of the criticism, and after a few rounds of that old tune, "You Capitalist Pig," our nation once again retreated behind the slogan, "Sticks and stones will break my bones, but names won't bother me."

All in all, the beginning seemed that it was going to be another one of those conferences where everything would be said and nothing would get done. You know — the usual.

But that was all changed Sunday when another figure emerged to entertain the world's public. It's almost a regular event for the Pope to make some sort of statement about something. The major difficulty is that he always says the same thing, and this situation was no different. In a statement obviously released for the world press (an inexistent option for most of his predecessors), Pope Paul VI issued a heartrendering statement intended to address the hunger issue.

In the statement, the Pope said, "It is inadmissable that those who have control of the welfare and resources of mankind should try to resolve the problem of hunger by forbidding the poor to be born, or by leaving to die of hunger children whose parents do not fit into the framework of theoretical plans banked on pure hypothesis about the future of mankind."

Thus, it is once again proven that you can always count on the Pope to provide a workable solution. He might as well have said, "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation."

All the while that the Pope sits in the gold-plated Vatican and spews forth his words of worldly wisdom, millions continue to die of famine. In the midst of the absurdity of nation criticizing nation, he adds to the fun by criticizing all the nations, not only for their long established greed, but also for advocating birth control. His long term proposal is the co-existence of nations, while his immediate proposal is to allow more people to be born to allow more people to die.

Money and Religion have controlled the history of the world, with each nation established to further the purposes of one or the other or both. Governments are then established towards these ends, with money and religion becoming the dominant factors of their particular societies. It is through either big business or organized religion that these factors exercise their control.

What the Pope has said about war and the injustices of government could be easily located in any Bible, Koran or other holy manual of self behavior. What he has said about birth control could result in the end of millions of thankless lives, and the diffusion of an already miniscule food supply. Pope Paul could be considered one of the most powerful men in the world. He commands a nation of believers with the power of faith, and his sole statement will probably have a much greater impact than all the insults and negotiations that will be recorded at the World Food Conference.

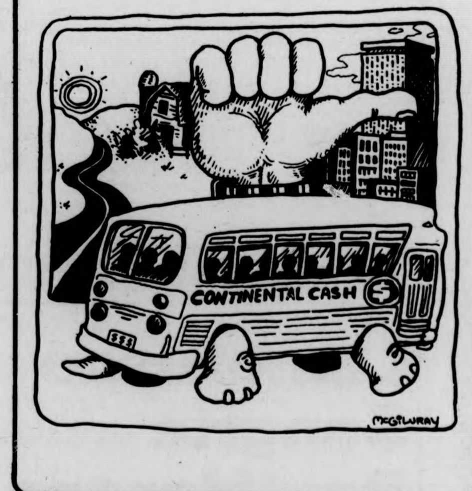
Another busing problem

Every weekend an exodus from UMass takes place as students escape to parts near and far. The hooks on the ride board in the Student Union overflow with requests for rides and riders, as does the ride board operated by WMUA. Some flee in their own vehicles, others brave the elements and lady luck by using their thumbs, while the rest pay through the teeth to leave the driving to Peter Pan and Trailways.

On any Friday the traffic circle next to the campus center garage fills with students waiting for the Boston express bus. When the bus driver begins to take tickets and let those first students on the crush becomes unbearable. Bags, backpacks, arms and legs of each person get pulled and pushed in several directions at once. Keep those elbows in, because you may lose an arm as the crowd converges on that open door such a few feet away. It's obvious that the bus is not going to take all those that are standing there with tickets. A few short minutes after the driver begins collecting tickets, he announces that that's it, climbs into his driver's seat, and drives away. A man declares to the crowd that another express bus to Boston is on the way and for the crowd to please be patient.



"All those wanting to connect for New York City please board the bus near the shelter, the company man speaks to the crowd and walks off to converse with the other bus driver. The crush has come to a momentary halt as students mill around restlessly. Others sit on the curb, leaning on their weekend luggage. At 4:15, the second 4:00 Boston express bus arrives as the Springfield bus departs. The crowd crush begins once again, this time even worse than before. The driver yells to the crowd that if they don't stop pushing he won't continue taking tickets, but the crush doesn't stop and neither does the bus driver. A few very long minutes pass as the bus fills and the crowd shrinks. Will everybody fit? Magically, everybody does, and finally this bus joins the UMass rush down Route 9.

Two and one quarter hours later the Boston express bus pulls into the Boston Trailways Terminal. The traffic with its insane Boston drivers, the city with its dirty trash blowing in the streets, the buildings and the bright lights — a voice behind me mumbles to no one in particular, "What am I doing here? This place makes Southwest look like heaven."

Perhaps in response, a voice up front asks the driver if he would turn around and go back to Amherst. In silence, the bus comes to a halt and empties its load into the throngs that never seem to leave this city terminal.

For two days I play in the big city, dreading the ride back. The ride in wasn't really so bad, I tell myself. I remember a trip to New York City...An accident on an expressway had delayed our arrival by an hour. Perhaps to pick up that lost time, the bus driver drove down the streets of upper Manhattan as if they too were throughways. He stopped at a fourth of the red lights as he rambled recklessly down the really busy streets. If the intersection was moderately crowded, he honked, and then drove through. If it was a quiet intersection, he didn't even bother to honk.

The bus driver today actually stopped at red lights! The only law he broke was the one that says buses and trucks prohibited from left lane. The ride wasn't so bad, really.

"Does anybody want to give me a ride back to Amherst?" No? Oh, well. Sunday night it's back to that great cultural center — the Boston Trailways Bus Terminal. Once again, the bus fills and departs, leaving half the crowd behind with a promise of another bus picking them up shortly.

Next, it's Natick, and the bus driver announces that he'll take anybody to South Hadley. A woman approaches him and asks "If you're going to South Hadley, why does it say Amherst on the front? Don't you go to UMass? I have a reservation to go to UMass."

The bus driver points to the throng of people that stand at the gate. "Do you see them? They all have reservations." After four or five people climb on, the bus departs as an announcement declares to the crowd that another express bus is on its way.

I doze in the dark bus, occasionally awakening to the familiar smell of marijuana which floats to the front of the bus. After all, it says only cigar and pipe smoking is prohibited...At 8:40, the 6:45 express bus unloads at UMass, and I'm $8.50 poorer from that round trip ticket.

UMass Oxford Summer Program may terminate due to inflation

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

This tenth year of the Oxford Summer Seminar at Trinity College in England, may be its last, according to Dr. Ernest H. Hofer, director of the English Department program.

Citing increased costs as a factor, Hofer told the Collegian, "This year, the basic price has increased from $950 to $1010 for the eight week program. We've had to tighten up our program by cutting down on some unnecessary luxuries."

Hofer blames the English inflation rate of 16 to 18 per cent.

"If we had raised our prices according to England's economy, we would have had to raise our prices by $250. This would defeat the purpose of the program."

The program is designed to offer courses in English Literature and British Sociology which might be better taught in their land of origin at a price students can afford. Any student with a "B" average or very close to it is eligible for the program. The student needs to have taken or projected for spring 1975, 15 hours in English or subjects in the humanities, such as classics, history, and philosophy. Students wishing to elect a sociology course need at least six academic credits or the equivalent as prerequisite.

"Over the past seven years the Seminar has attracted students from over 60 universities. Each year 50 per cent come from the Amherst, Five College area, "Hoffer said.

The first 120 qualified students will be accepted through March.

The $1010 cost of the program includes a round trip flight from Boston to London to Boston, three nights at the Hotel Penta, tickets to musical or theatrical events; room, board and tuition at Trinity College July 4 to August 15; a day at Warwick Castle, followed by a play at Stratford; a guest-speaker program at Trinity each Wednesday; trips to points relevant to elected courses, and a final banquet in the tradition of a Commemoration Ball, Hofer says.

Travel time is at the student's expense.

The travel time, which lasts from June 21 to July 4, gives students the option of choosing from three planned tours, or to travel on their own.

The tours include a British Isles tour ($355.40), a Scandanavia camping tour ($225), and a Morocco camping tour ($240).

The seminar meets at Trinity College July 4 through August 15.

The student may choose one or two 3 credit courses from 12 English seminars and 2 sociology.

Anyone interested in the program can contact Hofer in Bartlett 160.

Study claims Vietnam veterans get less aid

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A new study says the GI bill denies Vietnam-era veterans educational advantages that World War II vets got and discriminates especially against vets in the East and Midwest.

"While the draft ignored state lines, for many veterans the GI bill stops at theirs," says the report prepared for the National League of Cities and the U.S. Conference of Mayors.

The report, timed to coincide with observance of Veterans' Day in more than 40 states, says GI education benefits are inadequate everywhere but also ignore the fact that public education costs differ sharply from state to state.

"Only some Vietnam veterans who live in low tuition states have sums for subsistence that equal those which World War II vets received," it said.

"Annual tuition charges for a four-year public college range from $165 in California to $266-$378 in Texas, to up to $1,050 in Pennsylvania and $1,088 at the University of Vermont...

"Because of a factor over which the veteran lacks control--the tuition structure of his state--some will in practical effect have no GI bill."

The World War II GI bill paid college tuitions up to $500 per year and gave the vet $75 a month for living expenses, which exceeded the minimumwage pay of that day. Many schools also provided vets with housing and jobs.

Today's stipends start at $220 a month for unmarried veterans, a lump sum intended to cover all education and living costs. Congress has passed a new bill raising allowances 23 per cent, to $270 at the basic level, but President Ford has indicated he may veto it as inflationary.

Mexico plans separate Spanish dictionary

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA
Staff Correspondent

Mexico is preparing their own Spanish dictionary. In Spain the daily newspaper, 'Arriba' is questioning if other Latin American countries could follow Mexico's example and begin creating their own dictionaries.

Up to now, each Latin American country, including Puerto Rico, has an Academic of Language that recommends to the Royal Academy of the Spanish Language which of the national vocabulary, modism, etc, of each country should be considered as classic Spanish.

'Arriba' quotes Prof. Luis Fernando Lara about The reasons why the Mexicans are doing their own dictionary: "The dictionary's cultural background is to reflect an autonomous Mexican culture, in which they merge the Spaniard past, the Mexican Indians' influence and the modern cultural contacts with other countries."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Even a superficial effort to comprehend the relationship between events on the celestial scene and events here on earth yields knowledge that is indispensable to this week's success. A willingness to cooperate on the one hand and the patience, peace of mind, and self-assurance necessary to allow each individual his own idiosyncracies on the other: these — though they appear at first to be contradictory attitudes leading to conflicting modes of behavior — are the keys to career advancement, social recognition, and a productive involvement in all leisure-time activities. This is an excellent week for eating your cake and having it too, for there is a little to stand in the way of giving and getting simultaneously — which is not the same at all (if you're careful!) as losing with the right hand what you gain with the left.

Know your own talents, employ them with timing and finesse, and all should end well this week. Ignore signs of fatigue, physical or emotional, at your own risk. During the early part of the week, concentrate largely upon your own ends; later on, you would do well to be generous, even expansive, with your time as you begin to take an interest in and to help others gain — or regain — goals of their own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — Any plans initiated by associates can be trusted to be well-laid. Even so, you would do well to investigate possibilities on your own. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — There is no need to be alarmed if you are not in the driver's seat this week. You can manage to reach your goals if you are careful to follow directions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — So long as co-workers exhibit mutual respect, there is no need for you to interfere in their differences. Live up to a reputation for being easy-going. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Take care that you don't become overly eager to push your career into a higher gear. Take your time, especially early in the week.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Be encouraging to those who would do things in their own time and way. You can expect others to make fewer demands on you toward week's end. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — A week for living and letting live. Don't be disheartened should a loved one not take advantage of a situation leading to gain. Build another's confidence.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 5) — Most important to success this week is a direct approach. Know what you want — and make an effort to communicate your desire to others. (March 6-March 20) — Don't allow trivia to take over, especially early in the week when you should be making workable plans. Disregard another's efforts to change your mind.

ARIES (March 21-April 4) — You might do well to consider reorganizing your life on two levels — where your career is concerned and socially. Timing is important now. (April 5-April 19) — Take notice of the individual as well as of the group; otherwise, you may find yourself pleasing on the whole but out of luck when it comes to advancement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 5) — Determine your goal for the week as early as you can. Care is vital to the successful conclusion of operations being tried for the first time. (May 6-May 20) — Exchange ideas with others in your field as often as necessary early in the week. Later on, you would do well to try to accomplish goals on your own.

GEMINI (May 21-June 6) — With many talents to choose from, it should not be difficult for you to establish a toe-hold on the ladder of new successes this week. Be self-sufficient. (June 7-June 20) — Present projects will not be able to stave off the attack which may come if you are not able to persuade others of their usefulness.

CANCER (June 21-July 7) — If you are tactful, this week could well be the one which sees you on your way to longed-for goals by unexpected advantages where your career is concerned. (July 8-July 22) — You can be responsible for the raising of another's opinion of himself. Ennoble yourself and your career at the same time. Move quickly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 7) — It is your attitude which makes or breaks you this week. Approach any new project with a willingness to cooperate completely with the knowledgeable few. (Aug. 8-Aug. 22) — Consider first of all the welfare of the individual. Groups concerns come in for their share of attention — but only after each member is seen to.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — You would do well to let the group fend for itself — at least for the first few days of the week. There is much to be said for striking out on your own. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Short-term goals suit the tenor of the week better than long-term ones. Don't allow yourself the luxury of forgetting what you're about.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Work at home must supplement work on the employment scene if you are to know the high degree of success the week holds out to you. Divide time wisely. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Take care that doing too much at the beginning of the week does not leave you too exhausted to do enough at the end of it. Guard your energy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — Should you be engaged in rearranging your life on any level, take care that you don't discard the basics. Keep a substantial backlog of essentials. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — You should be able to increase your earning potential considerably if you are careful not to put all your eggs in one basket. Be generous.

Celtics found quite a darkhorse in High Henry

By MIKE BERGER
Sports Staff

The following action was described by Johnny Most during the fourth game of the Bucks-Celtics championship series last spring.

Rebound Finkel. On the left to White, crosscourt to Havlicek, back to Chaney-High post to Finkel, the set shot over Jabbar............IT'S GOOD AND LISTEN TO BOSTON GARDEN EXPLODE!

Henry Finkel is a sports hero in Boston. Perhap's not talented like Plunkett, Orr, Yastrzemski, or Havlicek. Moreover, Finkel represents dedication, hard work, intelligence, and a great attitude that are all prerequisites for a championship athlete.

For those basketball novices. Henry Finkel is 7 ft. tall and can be described as thin, lanky, and perhaps uncoordinated on the basketball floor.

Graduating from Dayton University in 1968, many people don't realize that Finkel was the leading scorer on his college team and was one of the top scorers in the Big Ten Conference.

Henry came to the Celtics in 1969 and was in the unenviable position of filling Bill Russell's shoes as a basketball center. 1969 was a lean year for the Celts and the one thing that was learned from that season was that the Celtics were not going to win championships with Henry Finkel as the full-time center. The following year, the Celtics drafted Dave Cowens and the rest is obvious.

Finkel was then relinquished to the role of the backup center. However, as time went on, Henry found his time to be extremely irregular. For example Finkel would play 10-15 minutes one game and not see action for two weeks. This type of position would be similar to someone driving a car during the dead of winter for one day and not driving for the next three weeks. Would you expect a car to start the first time three weeks hence?

Dave Cowens was once asked who was the best center he played against. Dave replied:

"Hank Finkel. On talent, it would have to be Jabbar, Chamberlain, Reed. But just on intelligence alone, Henry is the best. One of the prime reasons for myself winning the M.V.P. is Henry Finkel. Hank has really taught me a lot of the little things that a basketball center must know."

Finkel's style of game is to set up picks and screens for the guards and occasionally take a shot. On defense, Hank can be beaten on quickness and agility. But what makes Henry Finkel the darling of the crowd is his knack of fighting for offensive and defensive rebounds, and his hustling during the fast break.

When Dave Cowens and Phil Hankinson return to the lineup, the Celtics will have to come to a decision as to whether they will keep Finkel or the more talented Jim Ard.

Perhaps what people can identify with Finkel is his touch of clumsiness. It's that sense of ungracefullness that we all exhibit at different times. But moreover, people respect and applaud Finkel because you know when Hank is out there, it's 200 per cent effort all the time.

In a sport's world of no cut contracts, bonus babies, and overpaid athletes, Henry Finkel is a breath of fresh air. It's guys like Finkel who have made the Celtics. And 12 championships in 15 years as opposed to the Bruins two can attest to that.

Dodgers' Garvey voted MVP

NEW YORK [UPI] — Steve Garvey of the Los Angeles Dodgers, a virtual unknown at the start of the season whose unique batting talents made him a household word by the end of the campaign, Tuesday culminated his "rags to riches" year by being named the most valuable player in the National League.

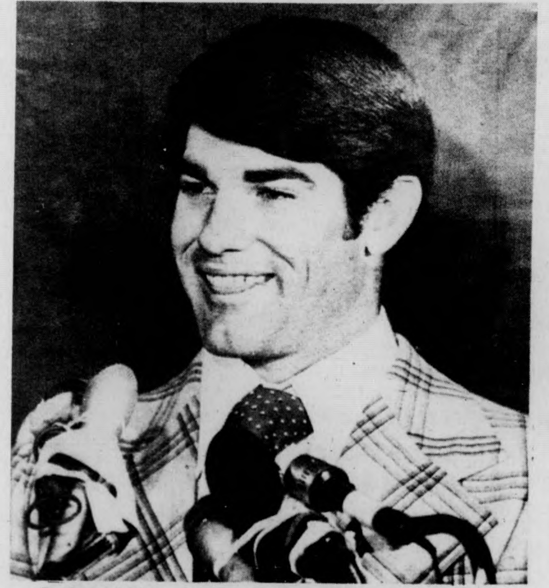
The 25-year-old first baseman, the major leaguer to collect at least 200 hits and 100 runs batted in this season, was a surprisingly easy winner in the balloting of the Baseball Writers Association of America as he beat out stolen base king Lou Brock of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Garvey, who batted .312 with 21 homers and 111 RBI's, received 13 first place votes and 270 points from the 24-man committee who participated in the voting. Brock, who set a modern major league stolen base record with 118, had eight first place votes and 233 points. Garvey and Brock were the only players named on all 24 ballots.

Pitcher Mike Marshall of the Dodgers, the NL's Cy Young Award Winner, received one first place vote and finished third with 146 points and Cincinnati's Johnny Bench, the 1973 MVP, was fourth with 141 points. Another Dodger, outfielder Jimmy Wynn, pulled the remaining two first place votes and was fifth with 137 points.

Under the point system, a player receives 14 points for a first place vote, nine for second, eight for third and so forth down to one point for a 10th place mention.

In receiving the NL's most coveted individual honor, Garvey becomes the ninth Dodger player in history to be so honored but the first since Sandy Koufax in 1963.



Dodgers' Steve Garvey, MVP winner in the National League, is shown here with an ear to ear grin at press conference just after the results came in.

New OT rules: For the fans

Both the National Football League and the American Hockey League have adopted sudden death overtime this season, in an attempt to lessen the possibilities of a tie and keep the fans' interest until the last minute of a game.

The NFL instated the overtime rule before the start of the season. The rule states that sudden death will be in effect for all games (both preseason and regular season). The game ends with the first score by either team. If the game is still tied after fifteen minutes of overtime, however, the game ends in a tie.

The rule definitely makes football games more exciting, at least from a fan's standpoint. I was in the crowd of 67,740 at the Yale Bowl in New Haven to witness the second regular season sudden death game in NFL history. The game between the Jets and the Giants was tied 20-20 after 60 minutes of play, as new kicker Pat Leahy had a "sure" field goal (inside the 20-yard line) blocked by the Giants with 12 seconds to play in regulation time. The Giants won the overtime coin toss and Craig Morton marched the Giants to the 27-yard line of the Jets. The drive sputtered after Bob Tucker left the game with an injury and Pete Gogolak came on to attempt a 42-yard FG that would have ended the game. The kick appeared to be good, but officials ruled it was wide to the left. Gogolak later argued that the ball was a foot inside the goal posts when it went through and then hooked.

The Jets took over and Joe Namath, who sat back and split the opposing secondary time after time, with the help of an almost non-existent Giants' pass rush, led the Jets to the winning score.

Namath undoubtedly had his best overall performance of the season. He completed 20 of 31 passes for 236 yards, ran three yards on a perfectly called bootleg for his first touchdown since 1969, and converted a "third and inches" situation himself by running a quarterback sneak on a critical play in the final period.

The game was one of the most exciting contests in recent years, and the thrilling overtime session made it that much better. The fans had a chance to see a wild game and Namath at his best. You couldn't have asked to view a better match-up if you had written the script yourself.

Anyway, the AHL initiated its sudden death rule last night at the Richmond Coliseum where the Richmond Robins faced the unbeaten Providence Reds. The new rule provides for a five-minute sudden death period that will cut down on the number of ties and prevent games from dragging during the final minutes. True, the move by the AHL was made in hopes of improving the dwindling attendance figures, but don't be surprised if the NHL does the same in the next few years. The AHL is attempting to add the rule a month into the season, after experimenting with it during the pre-season and getting positive reactions. It won't take long for fans in the ten AHL cities to accept the new rule and just ask a few of those who saw the Jets-Giants game how they liked the sudden death addition in the rule book. I'm sure nine out of ten people will tell you they loved it — and, of course, that's what the change was intended to do — please the fans.

Jets' Weeb Ewbank decides it's time to call it quits

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. [UPI] — Weeb Ewbank, the only man to ever win titles in both the National and American Football Leagues, today announced his retirement as vice-president and general manager of the New York Jets, effective at the close of the season.

Ewbank, who won NFL titles with the Baltimore Colts in 1958 and 1959 and led the Jets to the Super Bowl in 1969, retired as coach of the Jets last season after 10 years, but maintained his role as general manager.

"There is no better time to make known your future plans than following a good victory over your neighboring competitor," said Ewbank, referring to the Jets' 26-20 sudden death victory Sunday over the New York Giants.

Patriots axe punter Barnes

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — The New England Patriots, confirming speculation earlier in the week, Tuesday placed punter Bruce Barnes on waivers.

Barnes, a second-year punting specialist from UCLA, averaged 35.6 yards per kick in 45 attempts this season.

Barnes was waived to make room for the addition Monday of linebacker Rodrigo Barnes, acquired from Dallas on waivers.

The Patriots also announced they would give veteran punter Dave Chapple a one-day trial Wednesday. Chapple played 2½ seasons with the Los Angeles Rams, leading the NFC in 1972, before being waived three weeks ago.

If Chapple is given a contract, New England is expected to trim a linebacker to get back to the 47-player limit.

JV footballers drop UConn for final win

By DAVE OSTRANDER

The University of Connecticut sub-varsity came to town Friday to take on the UMass second wave looking to make it a clean sweep over the Minutemen for the year. The Huskies had to settle for a split, however, as the UMass sub-varsity went one game over .500 with a 33-7 win over the fumbling and confused Huskies.

The UMass secondary capitalized on the poor Huskie passing attack, as they came up with four interceptions, three by defensive back Alex Dobbs, who was all over the field.

After three unsuccessful drives by UMass, quarterback Joe Harrington replaced John Czerapowicz, a regular tactic used by coach Bill Maxwell, and the offense started to move.

Fullback Steve Jacobs, the workhorse of the sub-varsity, carried for over 100 yards on the day, and was a key to the Minutemen's long drives to paydirt.

After grinding out almost 80 yards, halfback John Fernandez carried over for the touchdown.

UConn halfback, Herb DeGraffe, who displayed the moves of an experienced New Yorker in downtown traffic, was responsible for UConn's only points with a 30 yard run to set up the touchdown.

The Minutemen broke the tie for good when Joe Harrington displayed his aerial accuracy by throwing a 40 yard scoring toss to former high school teammate Dan Clerico.

Two more touchdowns were added under the direction of Harrington, with Jacobs and tight end Pete Rankowitz going over for the scores.

Going into the last quarter, John Czerapowicz once again came in to call the signals and this time successfully. In fact, he left nothing up to chance, as he did it all himself, running 65 yards in two plays to the UConn five. Fullback, Bob Wronski, carried five yards for the final Minuteman points.

Special credit for the big win should go to the whole offensive line for opening up the gaping holes for Jacobs, Wronski, Fernandez, and Steve Cirella to run through.

Especially tough were offensive captain Anton Hegg, center Greg Scanlon and guard Timmy Cripps.

This Friday the J.V.'s will travel to Durham, New Hampshire, to meet the Catamount sub-varsity. It will be their last game of this short six game season. Here's hoping for a win and a 4-2 record.

John McGrail laces up his shoe before the running of the New England Championships. McGrail was probably thinking about the New Englands, but now that race is history and the pressure builds up as the IC4A meet approaches.

Distancemen up for IC4A's

By SCOTT HAYES

"A great victor, in defeat as great; no more, no less, always himself in both." That quote from one of Stephen Vincent Benet's works reflects the attitude of the UMass harriers after finishing second to Providence in Monday's New England Championships.

There was a general respect for the impressive Providence team that finished first, but Randy Thomas and his fellow distancemen are looking forward to next Monday's IC4A Championships at Van Cortlandt Park in New York for several reasons. "I definitely think we have an outside shot an Van Cortlandt," explained Thomas. "We have the experience and it's harder to run as a team at the IC's because of the large number of outstanding runners," added Thomas.

The Minutemen runners will have to come up with their best performances of the season to win the IC4A's — much better than the overall team effort at the New Englands. Tom Wilson, the team's fourth man, is running well, but the key to team success at the IC's and the NCAA's will be the performance of the fifth man. Right now the number five runner is Tom Maguire, who has improved since the start of the season, but has yet to run a spectacular race that would classify UMass as a five man team, rather than a four man team.

Thomas went into Monday's race with plans to work the fourth mile, but Mike O'Shea ran a tremendous 4:30 third mile. "He blew by me at the two-mile mark. I was coming back with half a mile to go, but it was a little too late," said the UMass co-captain. Thomas finished holding off Tom Smith, Stetson Arnold and Mike Buckley, who were close with half a mile to go.

John McGrail, who finished sixth in the New Englands, agreed with Thomas about the strength of the Friars. "We ran our hardest, but Providence was a better team on that particular day," stated McGrail, who didn't expect Smith or Arnold to be that far up front in the race. McGrail also pointed out the Van Cortlandt Park is more advantageous to the type of team UMass has, and that Providence may have some trouble. The Frairs have four freshmen and experience will be a major factor at the heralded IC4A meet. "Van Cortlandt is a much different course. You have to know how to run it, and we have better hill runners than Providence," commented the sophomore harrier.

McGrail feels that he may have made a mistake in his strategy at Franklin Park. "I might have run the first mile too fast. I wanted to move on the third mile, but I was too tired," McGrail declared. The second year harrier tried to get out of the pack at the start of the race and as a result ran the first mile a little too quickly.

No tourney bid for booters

By DAVE EIBEL

Bids for the New England Regional soccer tournament were announced at noon yesterday, but the UMass Minutemen were overlooked in the voting.

Harvard, Brown, Connecticut, and Bridgeport are the four teams who will battle it out for the right to represent New England in further NCAA post-season competition, culminating in the national finals which will take place in St. Louis later this fall.

Connecticut had the best record of the four teams, 14-0-1. The only blemish on their slate was a tie with Harvard 1-1.

Brown had a record of 10-1, with a loss to UConn in Providence, October 24th by the score of 1-0.

Harvard's record of 7-3-1 included a loss to Tufts, a team which UMass beat 1-0 in Medford.

Bridgeport which had a record of 4-4-3 only two weeks ago is now 7-5-3 for the season. They tied New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, teams which the Minutemen defeated. Their biggest win of the year came against Springfield College last week by the score of 3-1, probably the game which made them a tournament possibility.

For the Minutemen, the fact they didn't get a bid, is bitter medicine. The Minutemen finished with a record of 8-3-1, which marked the winningest season in terms of total victories ever.

Up until last Friday's rain-soaked 5-2 loss to Vermont the Minutemen were almost sure choices to play in their first-ever post-season tournament.

However, perhaps the fact that two Ivy schools were represented on the committee gave Harvard a boost. Since UConn was a sure choice since they're ranked third in the country, the selection committee might have felt that two Ivy schools were better choices than two Yankee Conference schools, for post-season play.

Arafat advocates united Palestine in UN speech

Compiled From Wires

UNITED NATIONS — With United Nations headquarters turned into an armed camp to protect him, Palestinian guerrilla leader Yasser Arafat went before the General Assembly yesterday and urged creation of a Palestine state in which Arabs, Jews and Christians could live in peace.

"I have come bearing an olive branch and a freedom fighter's gun," Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, said in an unprecedented appearance before the U.N. General Assembly.

"I am a rebel and freedom is my cause," said the pudgy, five foot seven inch Arafat wearing a black and white checkered Arab headdress. But he added:

"The Palestinian revolution does not, under any circumstances, consider the Jews as enemies. Our revolution is not predicated on any racial or religious basis."

"When we speak of our common hopes for the Palestine of the future," Arafat said, "we include in our spirations all the Jews now living in Palestine and who accept to live with us in peace and without distinction or discrimination in the land of Palestine.

At the end of his speech, Arafat stood with hands clenched over his head like a victorious prizefighter while waves of thunderous applause from a standing ovation washed over him.

But the six front-row seats of the Israeli delegation were empty. Several delegations including the American delegation headed by Ambassador John Scali neither stood nor applauded.

Arafat, 45, spoke amid the heaviest security precautions in U.N. history. A total of about 1,000 police and security agents were deployed in a paramilitary operation which went into effect early yesterday morning when Arafat arrived at Kennedy airport and was taken to the U.N. in an Army helicopter.

New journalism major may violate input rules

By LARRY CARPMAN
Staff Reporter

A Student Senate committee, in a letter sent out yesterday, said the decision by the English Department establishing English as the sole track to a Journalism major "may have been in violation of established rules for student input."

The decision was made on May 17 of this year.

In a letter sent to all of the approximately 250 journalism students the Academic Affairs Committee called for a meeting to be held on Monday at 7:00 p.m. in Campus Center Room 173 for "students to develop their position on this matter."

In a recent memo to all members of the English Department, Professor Arthur Musgrave of the Journalistic Studies Dept. states: "The vote on May 17 was a vote to deny students their present right to register for a 15 credit major in journalism while meeting all the major requirements of Political Science, History ...or any other major except English. It was also a vote to deny students the right to take interdepartmental majors."

Musgrave further alleges the vote to be "injurious to society's need for better journalists and to be a highly expensive waste of limited funds for education."

Martin J. Miller chairperson of the Academic Affairs Committee said yesterday "It's a decision that's going to affect an awful lot of people."

"There's been a lot of complaints from students, said Miller "and students can have an effect on their education."

Meanwhile a Board of Trustees document endorsing a 1966 study by the American Council of Education outlines the Trustee policy on "university governance."

"Students share this concern (for learning and teaching) and they will be assured the opportunity of participating in developing academic policies and in evaluating degrees, programs, and courses," the document states.

At the same time the Academic Affairs Committee letter asserts: "Students were not consulted on this action nor were they asked to participate in any dialogue, which, according to University documents, should have taken place long before any vote on this matter was considered.

The Academic Affairs Committee also alleges the vote on May 17 was taken with only two of the five journalism faculty present.

Also, in a memo sent to all the journalism faculty the Academic Affairs Committee suggests "this meeting is designed to develop the student opinion and more accurately poll their thoughts on the Departmental action taken last May."

Budget request includes 437 new positions

By BILL DENSMORE

A 32 per cent increase in funds for academic support services, including 437 new faculty and staff positions, are contained in the $118 million fiscal 1976 budget request for the University of Massachusetts system.

Permanent salaries requested for 1976 — the single largest category in the budget — would jump to $78.8 million, a 10.9 per cent increase over this year.

The total budget request is 16.5 per cent over anticipated expenditures in fiscal 1975 — which began last summer and will last until after the end of the present academic year. According to budget documents, $8 million, or 47.6 per cent of the total, is needed "to meet continuing cost increases." The rest is "to fulfill commitments to the Commonwealth for program development," the budget says.

UMass President Robert C. Wood told a public hearing here Friday that the "most stubborn fact" of the budget for the Amherst, Worcester and Boston campuses "is the cumulative and future effect of inflationary pressures."

He told a hearing before State Sec. of Education Joseph M. Cronin that the University has cut funding in some areas below what was spent five years ago, "if you compare those dollars in terms of their purchasing power then and now."

The University's budget calls for a one-year freeze on enrollment at the 24,235 student Amherst campus, but an increase of 728 at Boston — presently with 7,605 students. The UMass Medical School at teaching hospital at Worcester would add 76 students for a total of 228.

Fuel costs skyrocketed from an anticipated $3.4 million in fiscal 1975 to a projected $7.5 million in 1976 on the Amherst campus, according to budget documents. For the Student Senate supports Hamlin residents' battle

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate, last night, voted to support a Hamlin House memo that the Office of Residential Life respond to Hamlin House demands by 10 a.m., next Monday.

Other motions passed by the Senate were: to have senators distribute detailed communiques concerning their activities to their constituencies, to accept a budgeting procedure for Fiscal Year 1976; to amend the SGA Constitution giving authority to the Governmental Affairs Committee of the SEnate and the Affirmative Action Officer for final approval of an RSO proposed constitution.

Also representatives of the Campus Center Board of Governors answered questions on the proposed Campus Commercial Bank and the Celebrity Series deficit.

Larry Gendron of the Commuter Assembly read an announcement condemning SGA support of "the end to mandatory dorm residence" demand passed Monday night.

If Hamlin residents do not receive a response by Monday, they asked Senate to take measures to guarantee their demands. Their six demands include campuswide priority on the second day of room choosing and a systems approach to the swing space problem.

The seven demands passed at the SGA town meeting Monday night will be received today by Chancellor Bromery according to Cindy McGrath, speaker of the Senate.

Student DC workers want equal pay

by DEBBI DIMASSIMO
Staff Reporter

Charges that student Food Services employees receive $2.00 an hour despite the fact that inflation has reached 12 per cent this year, were made by Ronna Feintzeig at a meeting of the Student-Workers' Organizing Committee, Tuesday night. About forty workers attended the meeting.

The newly-formed committee of representatives of workers at four dining commons will investigate the possibilities of securing bargaining power to fight for equal pay for equal work, better working conditions, and job security.

"Job security is the key," Alwin Schmidt of the Student Organizing Project said, "without a contract, students can be hired and fired indiscriminately and their working hours reduced."

Reading from a memorandum from a UMass Personnel Officer to John Corker, Director of the Campus Center, Schmidt said, "All employees on the University, including student workers, inasmuch as they are considered to be state employees, fall under the provisions of Massachusetts General Laws, Chapter 149, Sections 30A and 30B."

Charging that students have consistently been denied the rights of state employees. Schmidt pointed out that "The rights of 500 student-workers are in question."

Henry Doyle of the Student Organizing Project presented research on the Food Services budget.

"Forty-four per cent of the budget, which is funded by student meal ticket purchases, pays for full and part-time labor. Of this, 41 per cent goes to approximately 400 full-time employees, while only three per cent pays more than 500 student workers," Doyle said.

"If proper management techniques were used, a great deal of student monies would be saved," he added. He said two Munchys stores lose $8,000 a year while doing a $500,000 business.

Woman grad student sues Whitmore but cannot use university lawyer

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
Staff Reporter

Elizabeth Ebacher, a graduate student in human movement, is suing the university but she cannot use the services of the university lawyer. To defray court costs two graduate students are collecting donations for the Ebacher Defense Fund.

Ebacher is suing Whitmore for violations of affirmative action policy in the hiring of Dr. Gideon Ariel in the department of Exercise Science. Although she is a student, (she recently received her doctorate) and legal service lawyers are paid by student taxes, a student lawyer cannot represent her case against the university due to a contract clause.

"Besides the obvious discrimination in Elizabeth's case students on campus have no lawyer to sue the administration," says Susan Sherry, graduate student in Education and member of the defense fund.

"We have miled some 300 form letter to faculty members, mostly women in the hope of collecting at least $1,500," says Sherry.

The letters for funds were directed primarily to women since Ebacher charges Dr. Campney, head of the Exercise Science department, with discriminating against women candidates for the faculty opening. However, response to the mail campaign is slow. Ebacher further accused Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage with refusing to conduct an affirmative action search for the most qualified person for the job in violation of the federal law.

Ebacher charged Campney with the liquidation of two graduate assistantships to fund Dr. Ariel's position.

Rent strikers can appeal UMass withdrawal notice

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

The University Administration is preparing to implement the procedure of administrative withdrawal against people who are participating in the rent strike at University and Lincoln Apartments.

Director of Married Student Housing, Donald J. Pelkey, said Tuesday "as of now I have not put people who I know are on rent strike on administrative withdrawal." But he added that he will approach the matter in the very near future.

The procedure of administrative withdrawal was established by the University as a last resort to withdraw a student from active status for failure to meet academic or financial obligations. In the case of those people withholding rent from the University, administrative withdrawal would act as a means to compel payment of past due rent.

According to Pelkey, students who are two months behind in rent payment are notified by the office of Married Student Housing. After two unsuccessful attempts to collect rent, Pelkey may then recommend to the Registrar that a student be administratively withdrawn.

Pelkey called the process a "normal" one. "We have a rent delinquency list every year," he said, which usually decreases after students receive their scholarships and loan monies. "I know there's an increase in delinquent rent now, because of the rent strike.

A student to be placed on administrative withdrawal is given a 10 day period to appeal the decision. According to Tenant Association lawyer David Sheehan, students on strike should make an appeal to the Appeals Board upon receipt of notification that they are to be administratively withdrawn. The Appeals Board is composed of the Registrar, Bursar, Dean of Students, and the Staff Attorney.

In a memo to the Tenant Association, Sheehan stated recommendations of administrative withdrawal is invalid and should be appealed because:

1) The rent monies have been paid into an escrow account set up for the benefit of the University, and that money will be paid to the University when the rent dispute is settled.

2) The rent increases voted on by the Housing Committee were illegal because there was no effective representation of married students and therefore the vote passed on to the Board of Trustees for their approval was invalid.

3) The grouping of University, Lincoln, and North Village into the same fund is illegal.

4) The University, as trustee of the rent monies collected, is violating its fiduciary duty to the students by grouping all three complexes together, by raising the rents when there are other avenues of efficiency, and by not using the most cost effective system of management and repair of the three complexes.

"The University cannot interfere with your registration, right to transcripts, etc. throughout the course of the appeal. You should not allow yourself to be intimidated either by the University or the system established," Sheehan stated.

A meeting between Residential Life officials and the Married Student Tenant Association has been scheduled for Friday morning, to further discuss the rent dispute. "I'm hoping that this week's meeting will open up some avenues and shed some light on the whole situation. I don't want to fight the tenants, I think it can be worked out," said Pelkey.

"We've got a unique landlord-tenant relationship, being at the University," said Pelkey. "I imagine a private complex would just evict those people. We try to be flexible, and be a good landlord."

Pelkey said the Tenant Association "seems to be gaining momentum," and that if the association "becomes strong, and wants to represent all of Lincoln, University, and North Village Apartments, I would support it. I'd like to see a good strong tenant association."

The Tenant Association has scheduled a meeting with North Village residents at 8 p.m. tonight, to discuss their objectives. Organizers hope to incorporate North Villagers into the association, which now represents Lincoln and University Apartments.

In second proposal for fair employment

Students bring grievances to Board of Governors

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

Tonight the Student Employee Committee will submit their grievances against the Campus Center Management to the Campus Board of Governors.

The Board will evaluate the Committee's two rejected proposals — the reinstatement of hours to ten people working in the Coffee Shop and the stabilization of hours of all Campus Center student employees. These proposals were rejected by the management at Monday night's meeting.

The Student Employee Committee is bringing the motion to the Board of Governors with the belief that a final decision will be made to which both sides will have to comply, said Lisa Saunders, Chairperson of the Student Employee Committee, in an interview with the Collegian.

However, this raises a question, according to John Corker, director of the Campus Center. He asked "When a Board sets up policies, whose responsibility is it to carry out the policy, the Board's or the managers whom they hire?"

The Board can't expect to hold managers to a financial budget, then give students additional hours when its not financially feasible, said Corker.

"The board has to be aware," he said, "of the implications if it sets hourly schedules or decides whether to serve apples or oranges".

Corker said the Campus Center Business is a seven million dollar operation. It is his responsibility, given to him by the Board, to run the Campus Center soundly, he said, adding that if the Board does not like what he is doing, it should let him know, rather than making a direct decision on management.

Corker said, "I don't feel the Board should get itself into the position of making management policy decisions".

Saunders said the ten people in the Coffee Shop were protesting because their hours were reduced a half hour more than they should have been. Their hours were reduced from eight hours to seven hours instead of seven and a half hours.

"It's a hard struggle for some of these people," she said. "This proposal was rejected because the managers felt this would set a precedent for reinstating hours, arousing conflict from people in other areas such as the Hatch, Bluewall and Campus Center."

Saunders explained that the second proposal to stabilize student employee hours for the rest of the semester would guarantee that all Campus Center Student employees' hours will not be reduced anymore.

Corker said he sees these two proposals as one issue — is it right to limit students to seven hours because of potential overtime?

"The Committee representing the ten students," he said, "is saying that they do not feel any reduction is right, but I feel that the operations is 'hurting' and that this is a necessary measure for 'good management'".

"The students have a valid grievance but they just see one perspective while I have to look at the overall picture and therefore I am limited," Corker said.

He said the payroll is too high. According to him, the total payroll is higher and volume is up but a corrective measure must be taken because the net gain is lower than it should be for the semester.

The October budget was set for $66,000 to be spent for student employment while $116,000 has already been spent, Corker said. It is his job to run the Campus Center efficiently, therefore, the reduction of hours was necessary to the stability of the financial operation, he said.

"No students have been laid off in the past few weeks," he said. "The reduction of hours is necessary to eliminate mass layoff. They have asked students to reduce hours voluntarily, reduced hourly staff, and staggered shifts as other alternatives, he said. Since the protesting has begun."

Corker said he has been working with the personal and financial offices to allow overtime to be paid, but this will be a rare exception such as when a movie projector breaks down, requiring the person running the projector to work later.

Corker said the financial situation was a result of several causes: Since every person in Food Service Management is new, there has been a change in the organization structure and budget. No financial data was available until October, because of the changeover. Management knew sales were up but had no way of judging how many students to employ. Keeping people on the payroll, who were promised positions last year by former managers, for jobs now defunct, the increase in wages, the remodeling of the Hatch, and the failure of the Hatch Bar luncheons contributed to the drain in net profit.

Scribner proposes new solutions to problems of education

By KATHY SHEEHAN
MDC Staff

"Get rid of the concept of people as teachers in the school system and replace it with the concept of kids as learners," a group of about 40 persons were told last night by Dr. Harvey B. Scribner, ex-Chancellor of the New York City (NYC) School system, and now professor of education at the UMass School of Education.

Citing the troubles the NYC system has because of its tremendous size, Scribner outlined 3 of 10 chapters in his soon to be published book, "Ten Ways to Make the Schools Work Now--Instead of Professionals."

Speaking for the Center for Urban Teacher Education Program's (CUTEP) second colloquium series on issues in urban education, Scribner called on the educational system to make a radical change by implementing his Birthday Concept, Learning Center Concept, or his Most Wanted Teacher Plan.

The Birthday Concept would allow children to enter school on their 5th or 6th birthday instead of the traditional week after Labor Day. Conceived in a system of tutoring, the Birthday School would work in terms of individuals instead of third grades and fifth grades Scribner said.

The Learning Center would abolish the September to June school year giving the students freedom to come to the Learning Center any 180 days of the year. "There would be no more "classes" and no more competing among kids," according to Scribner.

This plan admits children need to learn at their own rate, and gives permission to families planning an outing on a school day.

"Parents and kids could select their own teacher under the Most Wanted Teacher Plan," Scribner said. The plan involves the whole learning community in setting up a classroom situation.

The plan would also change the traditional hierarchal salary scale. The most wanted teacher would be paid on a ratio of the number of students in the class.

Lucie Kelly, nursing teacher, says institutional licensure is dangerous

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

Lucie Young Kelly a nurse educator and spokesperson for nursing issues told an audience of 100 people last night in Mahar Auditorium that "institutional licensure is much more dangerous than individual licensing".

"Institutional licensure" refers to the licensing of institutions rather than of individual nurses. Nurses currently are licensed individually after passing a written examination.

Kelly, who is a registered nurse and who received her Ph.D. from the University of Pittsburgh School of Education, said, "Individual licensure is a committment to health care and to society.

"Under institutional licensure," she said, "lower personnel who don't have the proper education could work as nurses. Practically speaking, only the institutions would have control and could do anything they wanted to."

Kelly listed four problems inherent in individual licensing and then stated possible suggestions to alleviate these problems.

1.) There is no guarantee that once a nurse is licensed he or she will remain competent. A nurse is only required to send in an annual fee, and there is an automatic renewal. Kelly recommended a continuing education program.

2.) If someone is incompetent, they are protected by their co-workers instead of being brought up before a state board. Kelly urged more responsibility among nurses concerning this problem.

3.) Since people must graduate from a school of nursing in order to take the licensing exam, this tends to make it difficult for people to enter the field without having to repeat a lot of schooling. Kelly suggested giving an exam which would test how much these people know and eliminate the need to repeat courses.

4.) A lack of mobility from state to state. Kelly charged that this was untrue since nursing is the only health profession with a federal exam giving nurses mobility.

Arafat tells UN of need for Palestine state

The militant Jewish Defense League had publicly vowed that Arafat would not leave New York alive.

Outside U.N. headquarters hundreds of New York city policement kept rival crowds of pro-Arab and pro-Israeli demonstrators apart. Police arrested four people in two fistfights that broke out.

Arafat made a specific appeal to the American people for "friendship to the Arab world and more fruitful relations."

"I ask the American people whether the demonstrations of hostility outside this great hall reflect the true intent of American will," he said.

"What, I ask you plainly, is the crime the people of Palestine have committed against you? Why do you fight us so?"

Speaking calmly and clearly in Arabic, Arafat renewed his longstanding demand for establishment of a Palestinian National Authority. Nowhere in his speech did he specifically call for dismantling of the state of Israel although the Israelis and others believe that creation of such a Palestine state would mean just that.

"I announce here that we do not wish the shedding of one drop of either Arab or Jewish blood," Arafat said in his 92-minute speech. "Neither do we delight, in the continuation of killing, which would end once a just peace, based on our people's rights, hopes and aspirations, is finally established."

He said the PLO envisaged Palestine as "one democratic state where Christian, Jew and Moslem live in justice, equality and fraternity."

He said that "war starts in Palestine and peace starts in Palestine."

In the 35-page English translation of his noon address, Arafat said the PLO's three chief objectives are: self-determination for the Palestinian people, the right to return to their homeland and the establishment of a Palestinian National Authority over Palestinian territory "from which Israeli occupation is removed."

Arafat is the first representative of any group without official U.N. status to appear before the General Assembly.

Army releases report showing 28 officers covered-up My Lai

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Army Secretary Howard H. Callaway yesterday released part of the long-secret Peers report which concluded that at least 28 officers-two of them chaplains-contributed to the cover-up of the My Lai massacre.

The report, prepared by now-retired Army Lt. Gen. William R. Peers, said that the officers by either commission or omission helped cover up the slaughter of Vietnamese civilians in March, 1968.

Peers investigated the coverup after published reports brought the massacre to light, and announced on completion of his report in March, 1970, that he had found "serious deficiencies in the actions" of 14 officers from the rank of captain up.

Callaway, asked by reporters if he thought an incident such as My Lai might recur, said after a moment's thought: "I don't guess anything is going to prevent it. I do feel though that it isn't going to happen again."

He said the training of today's GIs takes My Lai into account and the men are more carefully schooled in their responsibility toward civilians.

Callaway said the Peers text had been withheld thus far to protect the rights of the accused. Army sources, however, said President Richard M. Nixon's administration had insisted on suppressing the report and that after President Ford took office the wheels immediately began turning to make the report public.

All 14 officers originally named by Peers were charged with crimes in connection with the massacre. Only Col. Oran K. Henderson, commander of the unit that made the My Lai sweep, was tried on cover-up charges and he was acquitted in December, 1971, after a four-month court-martial.

LaRue testifies Rebozo money used to aid Watergate burglars

Compiled From Wires

WASHINGTON — Former White House special consultant Frederick C. LaRue testified yesterday he used half of a $50,000 campaign contribution from President Richard M. Nixon's friend Charles G. "Bebe" Rebozo to assist the original Watergate defendants.

"In fairness to Mr. Rebozo, did he know these funds had anything to do with the Watergate defendants?" Assistant Watergate Prosecutor Richard Ben-Veniste asked.

"No," LaRue testified.

LaRue and former New York policeman Anthony Ulasewicz testified during the 33rd day of the Watergate cover-up trial about the hundreds of thousands of dollars paid to the original defendants after the June 17, 1972, Watergate arrests.

LaRue, who pleaded guilty in the Watergate cover-up in June, 1973—the first to do so—said he made a commitment early in 1972 for "help in a certain campaign."

Early in October, 1972, LaRue said, he got pressure from the campaign for assistance. He said former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, a cover-up defendant, recommended that he contact Rebozo for help.

LaRue testified that he flew to Key Biscayne, Fla., on Oct. 12, got a package with $50,000 in it, and returned to Washington. He said Mitchell told him to deliver $25,000 to the campaign and to keep the remainder in his fund.

Rocky defends self

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Nelson A. Rockefeller told senators yesterday he had to admit in humiliation and embarrassment that he erred in denying he had a hand in the publication of a book critical of a political opponent.

But, pounding the table, he heatedly disputed a senator's suggestion that his part in the publication of the book about Arthur J. Goldberg, his 1970 New York gubernatorial opponent, was comparable to the "dirty tricks of the Nixon era."

At reopened and nationally televised Senate Rules Committee hearings into his nomination to become vice president, Rockefeller defended the $2.5 million in gifts and loans he had given political associates during 15 years as New York governor.

FEA to control oil

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Federal Energy Administration has proposed to allocate distillate and residual fuel oils, as well as crude oil, among refiners and marketers to eliminate lopsided price differences.

Such differences exist between refiners or marketers who have access to domestic "old oil," which is under federal price controls, and those who cannot get "old oil" and must purchase new domestic oil or imported oil at higher world prices.

Saxbe backs evaders

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Attorney General William B. Saxbe yesterday ordered all U.S. attorneys to review the estimated 6,200 pending draft evasion cases and dismiss all that do not appear to justify prosecution.

Saxbe gave the 94 U.S. attorneys until Dec. 11 to complete the reviews unless a given office has more than 250 cases to consider. In that event, the deadline is Jan. 11.

"These instructions are in furtherance of the spirit of President Ford's clemency program," Saxbe said in a statement issued by his office.

UMW makes proposal

WASHINGTON [UPI] — With the coal strike already causing unemployment in related industries, union negotiators yesterday made a counter-proposal to the latest industry offer and said a settlement could be imminent.

"I think we may iron things out today," union secretary-treasurer Harry Patrick said following midday negotiations. "I'm optimistic. We're tying up loose ends."

But Arnold Miller, the United Mine Workers' president, cautioned: "The last inch is hard to come by. You get right down to the end and then the problems get knottier."

Quinn may appeal

BOSTON [UPI] — Attorney General Robert H. Quinn said yesterday he is considering an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court of a state Supreme Court ruling which he interprets as striking down a voluntary school integration program.

Quinn, in a State House news conference, offered the first clarification of Tuesday's ruling of the state Supreme Court in support of the high court's earlier order mandating forced busing for Springfield.

"I'm not so sure we won't carry an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," Quinn said. Quinn's term as attorney general expires Jan. 2 when Francis X. Bellotti assumes the office.

AIM attorney asks U. S. government to drop all Wounded Knee charges

The Progressive News Service is the result of many people's need for free access to the media on a regular basis. Anyone who wishes to write an article or a series of articles, should submit them to the Progressive News Service, c-o Veteran's Coalition in the Student Union, second floor.

By GAIL SULLIVAN
Progressive News Service

Today jurors from the Wounded Knee trial, lawyers, leading church spokespersons and political leaders met with the U.S. Attorney General to demand that the government drop all Wounded Knee cases and use its political pressure on the State of South Dakota to do the same. The meeting is part of a program called Jurors and Others for Reconciliation, which began days after Judge Fred Nichol dismissed all charges stemming from the Wounded Knee siege against Russell Means and Dennis Banks. I interviewed Mark Lane, Banks' attorney in the nine month trial and coordinator of the Reconciliation program, last week.

"The dismissal of all charges against Indian activists is a crucial move on the part of the government to seek a new climate for justice in the U.S. It is up to the U.S., which has broken all 371 Indian treaties and reneged on all promises made to the Indian people, to take the first step in establishing a trust which will enable Indians and non-Indians to reconcile their differences," said Lane.

The Reconciliation program has been gaining massive support around the country. It started with a letter to Attorney General Saxbe from 12 of the 12 jurors and 4 alternates of the Means-Banks trial. The letter stated in part, "It is in the spirit of reconciliation and redemption that we urge you to respect this suggestion and to join with us and other Americans in an effort to bind up the wounds that have been caused by this, our longest, and perhaps our least honorable, war."

Lane stressed the importance of the action by the jurors.

"This action, which is absolutely unprecedented, shows how deeply sensitized to the Indian struggle, the jurors have become. Further, it is patently absurd that after the leaders of the Wounded Knee siege are released, others should then be tried for following."

Judge Nichol also realized the significance of a decision by the jury in the Means Banks trial. When he dismissed the case he noted, "one reason this Court wanted this case to proceed to a jury verdict was because if the government could not produce sufficient evidence in nearly eight months of trial to convince you that Russell Means and Dennis Banks...were guilty, is it fair to say that the one hundred and some other persons should be tried?"

Because the government refused to allow eleven jurors (one was ill and not allowed to return) to decide the verdict, the jury was never permitted to reach a final decision. It was this which prompted the creation of the Reconciliation program — if the decision of the jury was not to be made in the jury room, it could be made, and announced, in public. Lane said, "who, better than the jury, could decide whether or not other Indian people should be tried for actions at Wounded Knee?"

Many have joined the jurors in their plea. The American Lutheran Church, at its national convention in Detroit, voted to support the Reconciliation effort and donated money to it. Lawrence Cohen, the mayor of St. Paul, which hosted the Means-Banks trial, has written to fifty mayors of large cities urging them to support, with him, the demands to dismiss all Wounded Knee and related charges. Deans of law schools, and law professors, as well as Congresspeople and other prominent figures have all been approached for their support.

Beyond demanding that all charges relating to the Wounded Knee siege be dropped, Jurors and Others request that the Attorney General initiate serious discussion regarding existing treaties between the Indian nations and the federal government, as well as discussion of reducing the control of the Bureau of Indian Affairs over the lives of Indian people. "Both of these issues were among the demands of those who liberated Wounded Knee and for which two Indian persons died during the siege, yet they are still unmet," Lane said.

The demands that the U.S. drop all charges has been made the more desperate by the recent conviction of four Indian men for conspiracy to interfere with federal officers in a Wounded Knee trial, as well as by the imprisonment of two Indians and a white supporter convicted for a pre-Wounded Knee demonstration in Custer, SD. The four convicted of conspiracy are the first of any Wounded Knee defendants to be convicted, and the action, by Judge Urbom of Lincoln, Neb., jolted the defense.

Lane said, "not only does the conviction prove the government's determination to win convictions against the Indian activists wherever it can, but it shows conclusively the dual system of justice that Indian people have faced. Although Russell and Dennis have been acquitted of this and a number of other charges, four people have been convicted for following them to Wounded Knee, because of the unfairness of the system and the lack of public attention paid to the non-leadership trials."

The four are waiting sentencing until after a hearing on the treaty issues to be heard by Urbom. Not so lucky are the Custer defendants, imprisoned since July. The defense fought desperately to remove their trial from South Dakota, based on existing prejudice. Their motions refused, however, they were convicted by an all-white jury of riot where arson was committed. Although the federal government does not have direct control in these and the other Custer cases, Lane explains that Jurors and Others feel that the influence of the U.S. Attorney General could be used to gain dismissals in these cases as well. "It is necessary to dismiss ALL cases, in order to establish the basis of trust necessary to initiate Reconciliation, for many of the defendants are the same." Jurors and Others for Reconciliation are waiting for the government to respond to their demands, to see if, as Lane put it, "there will be a show of good faith from the government."

From Campus to the politicians: The route a budget travels

There are at least five steps in the long path from conception of financial needs for UMass, and actual appropriation of the money by the state Legislature in Boston.

The entire process lasts more than a year.

First, according to established protocol, students, faculty and administrators informally discuss the importance of programs and how much money they should get.

During the spring heads of programs, for instance, an academic dean, submit a proposed budget for all the academic departments and programs under their control.

Second, the campus administration reviews all the budgets of the program heads, adjusts them and sends them to the office of University President Robert C. Wood sometime in the last spring.

Over the summer the President's budget staff works on the requests of, the Amherst, Boston and Worcester campuses and puts them into one packaged request by October.

Third, the total request of the entire University travels to the office of the Secretary of Administration and Finance, part of the staff of the Massachusetts Governor, where it is further reviewed and refined.

By February of the new year the Secretary's revised version is submitted to the Governor. The Governor normally approves the budget.

Fourth, the Governor formally presents the budget to the state Legislature, where it is considered throughout the spring by members of the joint Committee on Education. The Committee scrutinizes the request, and recommends that it be either approved or disapproved by the full legislature.

Fifth, sometime in the summer, (typically in late July) the full legislature passes the spending appropriation that approves the UMass and other state agency budgets.

So, while the President's office is now working on the fiscal 1976 budget, that budget, when finally approved, won't go into effect for nearly nine months. And initial work on it began eight months ago.

whole University, the fiscal year 1976 budget projects an overall 61 per cent increase in fuel costs over the previous year, tables show.

Funding for "academic programs", chiefly faculty salaries, would increase 11.4 per cent to $60.5 million in 1976. Funds for student services would increase 9.5 per cent and institutional support services would go up 13.5 per cent. At least half the increases requested is due to inflation, the budget document says.

The 32 per cent increase comes in "academic support" programs — to $10m — would include money for libraries, computer and audio visual services, and employees to run those and a myriad of other services on each campus.

The University has requested 92 additional faculty, 97 new administrators and 248 new employees for its three campuses in fiscal 1976 — a total of 437 new positions:

—There would be 218 new positions at the Worcester medical school — bringing the total staff there to 582 for 228 students.

—Eleven-hundred positions would be filled at the 7,605 student Boston campus — up 100 over fiscal 1975.

—Only 78 new positions are requested for the 24,235 student UMass-Amherst where enrollments are frozen. None would be faculty positions.

Which the UMass budget may appear to be setting a pattern of increasing costs, there are at least two factors which decrease the significance of the $17 million increased request for 1976.

The first is a report released this month by the New England Board of Higher Education — a consortium of public land-grant institutions which serves purely in an advisory role.

The report said the cost of attending a University in New England has risen 6.75 per cent a year at the same time the Consumer Price Index in Boston has risen only 5.5 per cent a year. Tuition costs at public institutions in the region have risen 11.3 per cent in the last four years, three-quarters of that because of inflation.

So while UMass' costs and budget go up, it is consistent with other states.

The other way the UMass budget looks reasonable is if it is compared with other states in the country.

Budget reflects priorities

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

If everything goes according to what the UMass administration plans, there will be 23,410 students on campus next year. To support them, the campus will expend somewhere in the vicinity of $81 million dollars to clean them, house them, feed them and -- hopefully -- educate them.

If that sounds like a simplistic way to describe a University, you haven't been fooled yet. It is.

The tricky part, of course, is how the University arrives at fall 1975 from fall 1974. Education costs money. For that reason a crucial route on the way to fall 1975 is the University of Massachusetts' budget.

news analysis

The entire lifestyle of the campus -- who gets what when -- is determined by a one-and-one-half inch thick document just completed.

Called "Maintenance Budget Request -- fiscal year 1976," the yellow-covered document is a bible for UMass administrators. It determines how many employees and faculty will work and what they will be paid.

But more importantly, when a budget is put together, everything falls into perspective. Each program gets as much money as it deserves in relation to other programs.

So a budget, more than just figures, actually tells a story of the worth placed on each program on campus and on the two other UMass campuses at Boston and Worcester. It is a blueprint for the future, and an indication of what directions the University will take.

Will non-traditional, off-campus programs be pushed, or traditional academic persuits receive funding? Which is more important, extra help for faculty members or better food in the dining commons?

Even if such questions are not answered verbally -- and the yellow book contains some of the answers -- the budget figures paint a picture that answers them.

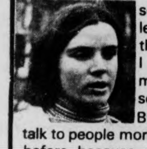
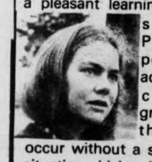
Growth is a key word when the purpose of attending a university is seriously discussed. Growth through academics, i.e. reading and writing, and growth beyond the textbooks and laboratories, i.e. interacting, experiencing and decision making. A sampling of students at UMass were asked if they thought important learning occurs outside the classroom.

The question: Do you acquire valuable knowledge from non-academic activities?

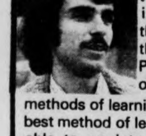


Eileen Fitzsimmons - Freshman living in JQA majoring in Nutrition. Outside the classroom, you learn a lot socialwise. I've learned a lot in the classroom. I was never much of a social person. But now I can talk to people more than I could before because you have to.

Bob White - Senior from Natick living in Northampton majoring in Plant Soil. Learning is the most important thing to me. I run cross country and that's pretty important. I'm a senior, and I just want to get out of here, actually.



Laura Eckert - Freshman living in Leach majoring in Art. The whole thing has to be both a pleasant learning and living situation Prime importance is academic and creative growth, but that can't occur without a suitable living situation. Living in a dorm is such a great strain... I feel I could get so much more done if I didn't have to cope with an unhealthy environment.



John Zarrella - Senior living in Sunderland majoring in Marketing. Academics are definitely not the most important thing. I believe the Outreach Program is one of the best methods of learning. I think the best method of learning is to be able to go into your job environment, if possible, and learn that way.

Ralph Hawkins - Grad Student from NYC living in Brett majoring in Sport Administration. There are some technical things, some very specific things you have to get in the classroom. They can give you all the facts and data, but in order to get a gut level feeling you need experience. I'm a believer in practical education, you need the classrooms too.

Hamlin getting screwed

To the Editor:

It would be easy to spew forth moral indignation in response to the letter that appeared yesterday from Ms. Marla Richmond. It seems obvious though, that Ms. Richmond is misinformed if indeed she is informed at all about the Hamlin relocation issue. To do so, however, would serve no purpose other than to justify her own ignorance.

The question before all of us is the question of just who will control the direction and quality of student life on campus. The Office of Residential Life, headed by Mr. Ken Dean, the only new face in this particular issue, is about to make its first nonfinancial policy decision in regards to residential life. What they have proposed [relocation of Hamlin residents on a percentage based priority] is no better than the random distribution of the same student by the computer.

Having been promised by Dr. Gage eighteen months ago that they would be helped in every possible way in their relocation, the Hamlin students have at best, been ignored. We presumed that the administration would act in good faith on the relocation, especially in the light of shady closing of Hills House. We have learned that is political suicide to presume anything when dealing with the administration. Just as they deceived students in the Hills issue, the administration is trying to screw students again.

The tactics are familiar by now though. They include procrastination, double talk, innuendo, and dishonesty. The students of Hamlin are not fooled by this though. We realize what has happened or more appropriately what has not happened.

The actions of the administrators involved have far reaching implications for all of us though. If students allow this, the first nonfinancial policy decision of the newly created office of Residential Life to go unchallenged, it will be an uphill struggle for all of us in the future.

We all have a vested interest in what happens here. If you don't realize it now, it might be too late later.

Fleet's fear of lost power

To the Editor:

In his November 13 editorial, Eric Fleet notes that while "those individuals being treated poorly have the right to organize in any orderly fashion they choose for the purpose of righting injustice," he states he cannot give his support to the unionizing effort underway at this time because of a fear that power in the hands of a small group of students "could become far more despotic than that of the University's."

I do not deny that there exists such a possibility and fully agree that it would be contrary to the best interests of students if it were to occur. However there are two major holes in his argument.

First, under the present conditions every dire consequence that he mentions is already legally possible, not at the hands of the students but by the actions of an administration that in no way must answer to the students. I do not suggest that the present administration does not have a real concern for students, only that the administration is presently subject to pressures from, and even replacement by, groups that have real power while students have none.

Second, his choosing to stand by and wait is exactly the sort of attitude that can lead to the situation he describes. To maintain the attitude that one is too pure to dirty one's hands with something that is sorely needed until one is sure that it suits one's lofty morals is a good way to make sure that wil' never do so.

If a student union is to work it must be democratic and represent the interests of all students. Unfortunately, democracy is not always the easiest form of decision making. It is much easier to make someone else make decisions for you. Of course this can mean that those who run your life may decide to build a gigantic white elephant in the middle of campus that costs millions of dollars more than it was supposed to, and then tack a fee on to your bill amounting to $30 or so each semester to cover their own incompetence. But you don't have to take an active role in running your life. Daddy will do it for you.

If Mr. Fleet fears that an elite group of students will control his life, then he should make sure that his views are represented when a union is formed by taking an active role. It is the students themselves who will ultimately decide what form a union will take. Any power can be abused if people do not care enough to protect against it. This not only includes a union of students, but even more certainly could include an administration that does not have to answer to students but to other interests that are both literally and figuratively miles from campus. If his fears ever became reality he would only have himself to blame. Fortunately I do not have such a low opinion of the majority of UMass students.

Cuba: ¿Quien la necesita?

To the Editor:

With the spirit of detente filling the air these days and the fact that the price of sugar is sky-rocketing, there has been much speculation both in the media and in diplomatic circles that maybe the United States should lift its embargo of Cuba and resume trade relations with the Communist Dictatorship that is in its 16th year of power in Havana.

Aside from the price of sugar, another argument that has been heard is: Since the United States is now on better terms with Russia and Communist China, why not Cuba? Certainly American business would find a way to capitalize on the new relationship.

But take a look beneath the surface. First of all there is the fact that Communism is entrenched within 100 miles of our coast line. That's fine if you believe in Communism; but what about anti-American subversion?

Castro hasn't had very much luck in spreading it among his neighbors, but he is still dedicated to that goal. I don't want to sound too much like a flag waver so here are a few other things to think about.

For example: What should be done about the approximately 3 billion dollars worth of American-owned businesses and property that Castro and his little band of conspirators stole? No compensation was ever paid to the owners, none of it has been returned, most of it has gone to ruin under mismanagement and now worth only a fraction of what it once was.

Also, since the U.S. embargo on Cuba began, our former "Cuban Sugar Quota" has been redistributed to some 30 other sugar producing nations. Should we now take our business away from these nations to once again do business with the likes of Castro? I think not. In economic terms, there is also this to consider: The Soviet Union is keeping the Castro dictatorship alive. It costs the Kremlin approximately 2 million dollars every day to keep this exhibition of a Communist failure on display. There is nothing the Russians would like more than for the United States to assume part if not all of this financial headache. That, we can do without.

Castro is one of the longest lived failures in the world today and he needs the United States a hell of a lot more than we need him. Detente would be wonderful; but for who? Let Castro wait until Havana freezes over!

Vets Coalition is for everyone

By JOHN O'KEEFE

Since its inception last March, the Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs has taken the lead in many areas of community development previously ignored by other campus governance groups. Our strength lies in several areas. 1) We are open to all members of the University and community, not just Vets. 2) We have a minimum of bureaucracy, with no hierarchy and only one paid staff position (office coordinator). 3) Our decision making process is collective with everyone equal and none more equal than others. 4) Our orientation, is towards giving people the tools and resources to develop their own projects as opposed to us doing it for them. 5) We are progressive, and in being so, look to find alternatives to the existing bureaucracies, status quo, and competitiveness in our daily living experiences. At present we are involved in a tenants rights program with the eventual goal being an active Pioneer Valley Tenants Union, with collective bargaining power. Other projects are a prisoners video-tape education program at the Union St. Jail in Northampton, an indepth evaluation of the Collegian with the emphasis on community control and responsiveness, a regional Veterans Conference, here, on Nov. 23, work on amnesty, benefits, discharges, and V.A. hospitals. We work with the Wounded Knee Support Group, the Progressive News Service, the U.F.W., Students Against Prisons, and many others. We attempt to help anyone with a problem, be it a vet, non vet, or non student.

We ran five people for the Commuter Assembly and, we work closely with them on all aspects of Commuter Affairs. Late night and weekend bus service will be a reality in a short time. The commuter assembly has started a 10 point program which deals specifically with alternative, integrated services. They are:

1) Voter registration on a continuing basis to give us input-control in our living areas such as Amherst-Sunderland
2)Food-coops—food stamps. Possible support of food coop distribution to apartment complexes or central locations for those without cars. Food stamps for all eligible
3) Tenants Union to protect tenants rights and fight rent increases.
4) Expanded bus service
5) Expanded car pool system
6) Day care-evening care-possible twice a month evening care so parents can have a night out.
7) Recycling in apt. complexes and other (Glass-Paper-Metal) locations where feasible
8) Media-continuous publication of a bi-weekly commuter paper to cover anything you want-as well as in depth investigation of store and apartment price rip-offs.
9) Co-ops-development of book, appliance, furniture, moving coops
10) Fundraising-so as to lower the Commuter Assembly tax of $10 per person.

We are not asking people to fit themselves into a structure based around utopian ideas. We are not inviting you to join endless, rap session committees. We are not asking a few people to put in great amounts of time. With a collective effort of many people and a division of labor to deal with work, school, and time realities, we can provide services, alternatives, self-education and more control over our lives. Since the bulk of our monies is for programs, we cannot pay salaries but credits will be available.

Any and all suggestions and ideas are welcome.

Apartment managers are lawbreakers

By RICHARD WRIGHT

When you open the letter and find those crisp and disconcerting words YOU ARE HEREBY FORMALLY NOTIFIED THAT YOUR TENANCY IS HEREBY TERMINATED AND YOU ARE DIRECTED TO QUIT AND PEACEABLY DELIVER THE PREMISES TO THE LAWFUL OWNER FOR NON-PAYMENT OF RENT, it can be quite a shock, especially when you had no hint that such a letter was on the way. And what really jacks you is that the management is the one who is in violation of Massachusetts law and not you, the tenant.

When anyone assumes a tenancy the law requires that the landlord must deliver a copy of the lease to the tenant within 30 days of tenancy. To not comply with this law is punishable by a fine and is a legitimate reason for withholding rent until compliance is met. This is just a typical example of the powerlessness of the tenant compared with the landlord. Where the landlord regularly forwards retainer fees to some local yokel attorney to handle the messy details of eviction, the tenant is stuck with the panic and hysteria of figuring out what he should do, who should he turn to, and what rights he may have when eviction is being threatened.

Oh, and then the real kicker, they always include a little phrase that goes: '...management prefers that you continue as a tenant if only you will pay your rent.' Ain't that a shame? First they kick you in the head, and then they give you an aspirin.

But the meaninglessness of the whole thing comes clear when you hit the part that reads '...If there is any reason why you believe that your rent should not be paid in full immediately, you should see a representative of management and state your reason in writing.' This is a real head spinner, because you sent in writing weeks ago just exactly what was on your mind, and since the landlord was forthcoming with the lease only four days ago you wonder how disorganized they must be to have allowed their legal eagle to regurgitate all this legal poop at this late date. And the real pip, is that the rent was paid in full in person to their representative, after they finally fulfilled their part of the bargain by delivering said lease. Signed, sealed, and all that jazz.

Have you been following all of this? Doesn't it really come home to you how powerless you are when they sign it very truly yours? Damn.

With stars in your eyes

Has the latest in current events got you down? Has it depressed you lately? Well, if you think that the rest of the world is in tough shape, just take a look at what the stars have in store for you today.

Scorpio — (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Today you have about as much sex appeal as a piece of burnt toast. Ultrabrite won't help either.

Sagittarius — (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Why are you smiling? Children are starving all over the world and all you can do is laugh.

Capricorn — (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your dominating personality will get you into trouble eventually. Remember, Richard Nixon was born under your sign.

Aquarius — (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) — This is Earth calling. Stop floating around and try and touch ground. Space is not always the place.

Pisces — (Feb. 20-Mar. 20) — We've had it with your wishy-washy attitude. Why not be aggressive? You won't make any enemies, you need friends for that.

Aries — (Mar. 21-Apr. 19) — If you continue to dive in head first today,you're going to wind up with one helluva bruise on your forehead.

Taurus — (Apr. 20-May 20) — Go ahead. Be as stubborn as you want today. See if anybody really cares.

Gemini — (May 21-June 20) — Tell your other half to get lost for a while. Really, two of you is more than the world could care for. Actually, no one can stand either of you.

Cancer — (June 21-July 22) — Why hide that true shell of calmness and prove how bitchy you really can be. Write some nasty graffitti on the bathroom walls.

Leo — (July 23-Aug. 22) — What have you to be proud of? No one thinks that you are good looking. Besides, all your hair is falling out.

Virgo — (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You are not as perfect as you think you are. Look at you, you slob. There is a spot the size of a pinhead on your shoe and there is dirt underneath the fingernail in your left thumb. Yecch, how could you be seen this way?

Libra — (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Try and make a decision today.

Birthday Today? Too bad. Your intense personality makes you totally unbearable to everyone. With the Moon in Scorpio, adding only to your aggressiveness, you shouldn't have even got out of bed this morning. You are a fluke of the universe. You have no right to be here. On top of it all, Mercury is retrograding, Jupiter is conjunct with Mars and Saturn is squaring Uranus, which means that if you happen to cross North Pleasant Street near the School of Ed. you will be struck by a green meteorite and bird droppings. Give up.

A lesson on teachers

While attending a conference this past weekend on Undergraduate education I was struck by a comment made by Professor Spivack of the English department. When asked what he viewed as the function of education he responded, "It is the conversion of the human brain into the human intellect." A sound statement. Initially I realized that some members of our faculty would not agree with his statement. They give their classes almost with a sense of machine-like precision. They attempt simply to disperse information for their students to take down and memorize. I realized further that this approach to education required minimal use of the mind. It treated the student merely as the personification of a tape recorder.

But then I thought of the many members of our faculty who would agree with Professor Spivack's statement. These faculty have dedicated themselves not solely to the task of disseminating information but to the much more difficult task of developing their students minds. They require in their classroom teaching and also in their testing that students be able to think, not simply to spitback information. There are professors on this campus who have dedicated their professorial lives to students. It is important that these teachers be recognized and fully supported for they form the core of our teaching university. It is important to realize that although I define these people as teachers I in no way mean to imply that they are not also involved in research. It is clear that research forms the core of any great teacher.

Great teachers rise in popularity, which many people would not expect for they are the most demanding workwise, because they captivate their students by their devotion to their subject. Students are impressed because it is clear that each one's subject is his or her life.

When I think of those teachers who are truly top notch, both those I have had and those that I know only by reputation, I think of, among others, five people: Albey Reiner, of Microbiology; Dean Alfange, of Political Science; C. Peter Lillya, of Chemistry; Robert Paul Wolff, of Philosophy; and Lee Beaty, of English. These five people are masters in their respective fields. They are keenly aware of students and their immediate needs and yet are primarily driven by the task of forcing their students to develop and use their minds.

Albey Reiner, in teaching his course in Microbial Genetics, attempts to produce students who can, given certain facts, manipulate their knowlege to produce an answer to a given question. His exams are very demanding: He gives eight questions while expecting no one to be able to answer all eight, although some do surprisingly enough. The questions deal with current problems in Genetics which are yet unresolved. On some of the questions partial solutions have only come in the last month or so. He teaches his course based on the forefront of the research field. He teaches people to think through problems, to use their minds, not just to memorize.

Dean Alfange in teaching his course in Constitutional Law requires absolute dedication to the class. Being unprepared is simply not acceptable. Students are forced to be highly proficient in the analysis of cases in law. He demands that students use their minds to the fullest extent possible.

C. Peter Lillya, in teaching his course in Organic Chemistry Mechanisms requires that students not only know a given set of chemical reactions, but given another situation, that they be able to manipulate their knowledge to produce a solution. His tests require a high degree of mental ability to understand and manipulate chemical phenomena.

Robert Paul Wolff, in his teaching of "Hume and Kant" and "Man and Society" requires a high quality of mental achievement. He demands that students both develop their minds in order to produce thought and also that they be able to express themselves "in English" in their written work. He demands written as well as mental precision.

Lee Beaty in her teaching of Expository Writing demands utmost precision and dedication to high quality written expression. She realizes that an ability to express oneself cogently is a great ability. She is very dedicated to producing students who have that ability and use it.

The University should be proud of these faculty for they and the many others like them embody the greatness of this university. It is time that we realized that we are a great university and that these faculty have in part brought us to this point. It is now our job to go forward to be an even greater university, the very best university we can be.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Collins speaks here at noon on Nukes

Newly re-elected State Representative James Collins will speak today at 12:15 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. His talk will deal with legislative aspects of the control of nuclear power plant construction in the state, with particular reference to the referenda on nukes in the Hampshire-Franklin District which received a substantial percentage of the vote in the Nov. 5 election.

The half-hour talk will be followed by a period of questions and free discussion.

This program is a continuation of a series of Thursday-noon forums, on issues of concern to the university community, under the sponsorship of the United Christian Foundation, an ecumenical campus ministry located in Hampshire House.

Alcoholism lecture held

Student Volunteer Services will present the third lecture in its series on Psychology - its Use and ABuse tonight at 7:30. The evening's focus will be alcoholism, and topics for discussion will cover a broad range, including: what is the illness alcoholism, its actual physical and psychological effects, existing rehabilitation programs and methodologies, and alcoholism on this campus.

The format will begin with the film, Time for Decision, and will be followed by a panel discussion. Members speaking will be: Dr. Chittum from the UMass Infirmary, William Rowan from the Veterans Hospital Program, Ann Demont from the Rutland Hospital Program, and Ted Smith, educational and personal counselor from Room to Move.

We are encouraging attendance and questions, as alcoholism is a very serious problem that is too often dismissed lightly. This exchange will take place in the Campus Center Room 101.

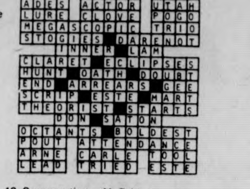
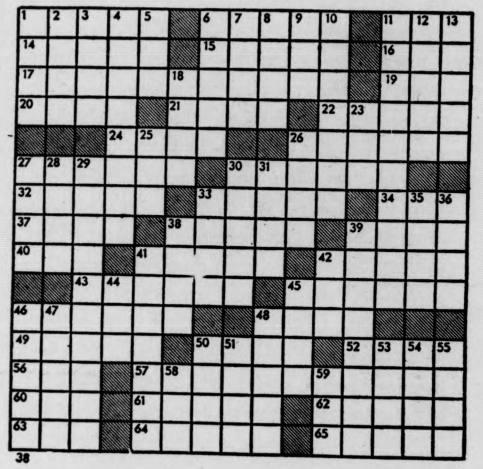
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved:





ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Even a superficial effort to comprehend the relationship between events on the celestial scene and events here on earth yields knowledge that is indispensable to this week's success. A willingness to cooperate on the one hand and the patience, peace of mind, and self-assurance necessary to allow each individual his own idiosyncracies on the other: these — though they appear at first to be contradictory attitudes leading to conflicting modes of behavior — are the keys to career advancement, social recognition, and a productive involvement in all leisure-time activities. This is an excellent week for eating your cake and having it too, for there is a little to stand in the way of giving and getting simultaneously — which is not the same at all (if you're careful!) as losing with the right hand what you gain with the left.

Know your own talents, employ them with timing and finesse, and all should end well this week. Ignore signs of fatigue, physical or emotional, at your own risk. During the early part of the week, concentrate largely upon your own ends; later on, you would do well to be generous, even expansive, with your time as you begin to take an interest in and to help others gain — or regain — goals of their own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — Any plans initiated by associates can be trusted to be well-laid. Even so, you would do well to investigate possibilities on your own. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — There is no need to be alarmed if you are not in the driver's seat this week. You can manage to reach your goals if you are careful to follow directions.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan. 5) — So long as co-workers exhibit mutual respect, there is no need for you to interfere in their differences. Live up to a reputation for being easy-going. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Take care that you don't become overly eager to push your career into a higher gear. Take your time, especially early in the week.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Be encouraging to those who would do things in their own time and way. You can expect others to make fewer demands on you toward week's end. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — A week for living and letting live. Don't be disheartened should a loved one not take advantage of a situation leading to gain. Build another's confidence.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 5) — Most important to success this week is a direct approach. Know what you want — and make an effort to communicate your desire to others. (March 6-March 20) — Don't llow trivia to take over, especially early in the week when you should be making workable plans. Disregard another's efforts to change your mind.

ARIES (March 21-April 4) — You might do well to consider reorganizing your life on two levels — where your career is concerned and socially. Timing is important now. (April 5-April 19) — Take notice of the individual as well as of the group; otherwise, you may find yourself pleasing on the whole but out of luck when it comes to advancement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 5) — Determine your goal for the week as early as you can. Care is vital to the successful conclusion of operations being tried for the first time. (May 6-May 20) — Exchange ideas with others in your field as often as necessary early in the week. Later on, you would do well to try to accomplish goals on your own.

GEMINI (May 21-June 6) — With many talents to choose from, it should not be difficult for you to establish a toe-hold on the ladder of new successes this week. Be self-sufficient. (June 7-June 20) — Present projects will not be able to stave off the attack which may come if you are not able to persuade others of their usefulness.

CANCER (June 21-July 7) — If you are tactful, this week could well be the one which sees you on your way to longed-for goals by unexpected advantages where your career is concerned. (July 8-July 22) — You can be responsible for the raising of another's opinion of himself. Ennoble yourself and your career at the same time. Move quickly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 7) — It is your attitude which makes or breaks you this week. Approach any new project with a willingness to cooperate completely with the knowledgeable few. (Aug. 8-Aug. 22) — Consider first of all the welfare of the individual. Groups concerns come in for their share of attention — but only after each member is seen to.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — You would do well to let the group fend for itself — at least for the first few days of the week. There is much to be said for striking out on your own. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Short-term goals suit the tenor of the week better than long-term ones. Don't allow yourself the luxury of forgetting what you're about.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Work at home must supplement work on the employment scene if you are to know the high degree of success the week holds out to you. Divide time wisely. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Take care that doing too much at the beginning of the week does not leave you too exhausted to do enough at the end of it. Guard your energy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — Should you be engaged in rearranging your life on any level, take care that you don't discard the basics. Keep a substantial backlog of essentials. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — You should be able to increase your earning potential considerably if you are careful not to put all your eggs in one basket. Be generous.

Conference express need for change

The "Conference on the Revolution in the 1960's" left both a reviving and reassuring feeling on many persons who attended the event. The keynote speakers were: Stanley Kinard, student at UMass, John Bracey, Chairman Afro-Am Studies Dept. Sonia Sanchez, Chairwoman for the Afro-Am Studies Dept., Amherst College, Askia Muhammad Toure, poet-writer, Ernie Malimato, Afro-Am Dept. at UMass, Muhammad Ahmad, organizer-writer, Joe Gonzali, poet-writer, and Robert Williams, Ex-president of the Republic of New Africa.

The program opened with Joe Gonzali, reminding us of phrases and slogans that were used to "inspire and motivate" the spirit of the movement in the 60's." Phrases such as "nothing can stop us!", "keep on pushing!", "move on up a little higher!"; were instrumental in giving purpose to the sit-ins and boycotts that were taking place in the South, during the period of human rights. As the late 60's came about, new phrases were substituted, bringing to the movement the awareness of a new era, the era of "Revolutionary Nationalism." These were the times of phrases like, "Black Power, Black is Beautiful, and Right On."

Joe Gonzali mentioned that these phases complimented the 60's as well as highlighted the "gains that were made." It was pointed out by Brother Joe that today, "the same people that were mouthing these phrases...became anti-nationalists to a tee."

Ernie Mkalimato, spoke of the development of the Black Panther Party. He mentioned that the start of the new awareness that later developed among people throughout the country, was actually developed from the student movements and especially the Black Student group at the Univ. of Calif. at Berkley.

Poet-writer Askia Muhammad Toure, dealt with the "Cultural Revolution of the Black Arts Movement in the 60's. He expressed that the Arts Movement was "developed by conscious young Black artist activist," who help to modify the world view of African people held captive in America.

Askia explained that the hard work and scientific study which many artist activists contributed, lead to the development of concepts such as "Domestic Colonialism" and the "Dual Nation Concept". These and other studies, which Askia verbally illustrated, were major research ideologies that set up firm bases from which to work towards social changes.

The frame-work and foundation of Revolutionary Nationalist organizations was discussed by Muhammad Ahmad. He spoke about two figures that stood out tremendously during the struggles of the 1960's, they were Malcolm X and Robert Williams.

The aim of Nationalist organizations according to Ahmad, was to move into level of "mass nationalist action." He stated that, "it was discussed in 1963, to move into the civil rights organizations and to move toward mass action." The results having been, mass demonstrations that took to the streets, which were calling for human rights and the end to human sufferings.

Sonia Sanchez began by reminding the Black students that we must give high respect to our elders. "If it weren't for them and their means of struggle for survival there would be none of us here today. Sonia explained, "because of them we are..."

Sister Sonia continued by showing us the era of the 60's and effects it had on her development and others. Recalling her experiences listening to Malcolm X, teaching about Black awareness, she said, "I looked up at that man...and for the first time in my life, I listened. And I went home and I remember saying to some people, you know, that man makes sense."

Sonia related many events that lead to various major changes which are responsible for the large number of Black people attending predominantly white schools. In speaking about Blacks in White colleges, she said... "some of you think you deserve to be here... The only place you deserve to be is among Black people, building and understanding that we are moving towards something call a Nation. She continued by saying, "One day when the time comes for us to move, we are going to need strong people, not weak kneed people!"

Stanley Kinard exchanged his experience with the audience by telling us that, "upon arrival to Amherst from New York, I experience what you could call a cultural shock, when I found that there were only 40 Black students here out of some 16,000 Whites."

Brother Kinard went on to explain the development of the student movement at UMass among Black students. He explained that after the death of Martin L. King, Black students at UMass mobilized and developed the Black Cultural Center at New Africa House and other vital organizations. He explained how the organized student movements lead to the creation of the Black Studies Dept.

Robert Williams told us that the 1960's are still with us. He stated that he was a living example of that fact in the face of evidence that even to date, the North Carolina State Gov't is still working to extradite him back to North Carolina for false charges dating back to 1961.

The most meaningful lesson I learned from brother Robert was his meassage about the "Dead panic expression", (the cool art of being silent), expressed one student.

Field stickers will lose five seniors

"We used to live on a golf course," she said. "where we could play different games."

She made the College I field hockey team this year and the College II team last year. Besides field hockey at UMass, "Space" plays for the lacrosse club.

Lori Nazar is the founder of this club. Last year she said that she decided there were enough interested people and so organized the club.

At 5'2", 120 pounds from Weston, Massachusetts, Lori says she can't remember having taken such an initiative before, but did not seem particularly impressed with her own achievement.

She coaches the lacrosse club and plays on it, while her Head of Residence from last year, Parnell Hagerman, schedules the games. Last year the club had a winning season.

Lori hopes to go into athletic training. She has made the College I field hockey team for the last two years and her sophomore year made the College II team.

Elaine "Slink" Senosk made the College II team this year. Rugged-looking at 5'3", 137 pounds, "Slink" is interested in outdoor education and pursuits. Last summer she went to Oregon with the Outward Bound Program.

"It was the best thing that happened to me in my whole life," she said. "It was great."

She would like to return out west and is going to apply to graduate schools there for an Outdoor Education Degree. But if a teaching opportunity comes up to keep her in New England, she will stay.

Wrapped in an orange slicker, which covered her firm 5'8", 140 pound body, Sheila Higgins from Livingston, New Jersey said she loved New England. She likes all outdoor activities, specifically hiking, camping, and biking.

Sheila spent her junior year at Chelsea College of Physical Education in England.

"I loved it," she said. "It was exciting and interesting. It was a different culture. There were fine teacher training programs."

The team's halfback plans on becoming an elementary physical education teacher and will do her student teaching next year.

Jean Kentfield also plans on becoming a teacher, but at the junior high or high school level. Last summer the 5'7", 155 pound goalie from Amherst worked for the Amherst Recreation Department.

"I found I have a lot to learn," she said. "I never worked with young kids before."

Cyclo-cross at UMass

You have probably heard of motocross — where daredevil motorcyclists drive their machines at breakneck speeds over the worst geography nature has devised and man has discovered. Well, there is a parallel in human powered sport. It is cyclo-cross. Cyclo-cross is a bicycle racing event run similarly to motocross in that it is designed to take in the worst of the road terrain available. The course usually will be almost totally pavement free and will test the cyclist's technical handling abilities, his endurance and the quickness of his reactions. All of this runs on the same theme as motocross.

However, there are major differences between the two sports. No motocross rider ever jumped off his machine, slung it over his shoulder and ran over an otherwise impassable obstacle. Cyclo-cross races are won and lost on the dexterity of the cylist to perform these feats. Unlike motocross, cyclo-cross is basically noise free and more preserving of the ecology of the land on which it is run.

All of this is by way of introduction to the first annual Orchard Hill Cyclo-Cross to be held on Sunday, November 17th. The races, promoted by the UMass Bicycle Club and Century Road Club of America, are being held to introduce the world of competitive cycling to the University community particularly as well as to the Amherst community as a whole.

Two races will be held. The first is an all comers race open to anyone wishing to try their hand at the combination cycling-running event. Any bicycle, from single to three to ten speeds, may be used as long as it is working safely, brakes braking, wheels turning, etc. Bikes will be checked. There will be individual and team prizes. Teams must have at least three members wearing similar sweaters. This will allow competition to see who is the fastest frat. or sorority on campus and the like or may settle once and for all who the fastest man or woman in the dorm might be. This race will go off at 12:30 but sign in and bike check time starts at 11:30. The race itself will be two circuits of the 1.5 miles course.

The second race is for more experienced cyclists, many of whom have raced in regular road competition previously. Some of these people will be experienced "crossmen" whose specialty is this type of event. All entered in this event must hold a U.S. Amature racing license. The race will be 12 miles long or eight circuits of the course. The race will start at 1:00 p.m.

The course, being held on Orchard Hill near Dickenson Hall Dormitory in the north eastern corner of the University campus is a fantastic one for spectators. Two-thirds of the course can be seen by standing near the observatory at the top of the hill and the other third (the uphill portion) can be viewed by walking only a couple hundred feet down the opposite side of the hill. Spectators will undoubtably find this an even more fascinating afternoon than watching the pro bashing of heads.

The prize list of $200.00 should be an added stimulus for the competition and more fun for spectators and first time participants.

For more information contact either Mike Zibit, Dickenson Hall, UMass, 546-6567, or Doug Dale, Peloton Bike Shop, 549-6904.

Booters snubbed, reasons unclear

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

As you probably know by now, the UMass soccer team was not selected to participate in the New England Division I soccer tournament.

Obviously, the team's reaction was one of disbelief and anger. Coach Al Rufe was extremely displeased with being ignored in the selections. "It was a most unfortunate decision, especially since two of the three committee members hadn't seen us play," he said.

UConn was seeded number one in the tournament and Brown was seeded number two, both obvious choices. The committee decided that Harvard would be seeded number three and that the fourth and final spot would be decided between UMass and Bridgeport.

Why UMass was not picked is not clear. There were no reasons given by the committee.

The fact that Irv Schmidt, coach of Springfield College, was the only member of the committee who had seen UMass play didn't help their chances at all.

The selection committee changed two of its members because of conflicts of interest. Joe Maroney of UConn was replaced by Schmidt because his team was in contention for a bid. Roy Zeigler, from BU was replaced by Bill Killen, coach of Yale, because he gave up his soccer coaching position for the basketball coaching job.

Whitey Burnham, who is the assistant athletic director at Dartmouth, was the member who wasn't replaced.

The two Ivy league members did not see UMass play, of course, they saw Harvard because Harvard is in their league. Schmidt and Killen weren't appointed to the committee until at least Nov. 5. Why they were appointed so late isn't known.

Gary McKenna, a member of the UMass soccer team, said that the team felt it was cheated. "Bridgeport played in 8 games that it didn't win," he said. "We beat Harvard in a scrimmage this year, also. The committee was obviously against us," he added.

NO MORE KICKING is the story of '74 for the UMass soccer Minutemen after they were ignored in post-season bid-giving by a three-member board. In action here Tom Coburn shows good aerial control as he tries to kick the ball over the fallen UNH goalie in last Saturday's 4-2 UMass win.

Rufe said, "If they only gave us a chance, I know that we could have given UConn and Brown a good game. We have the potential to beat both of them."

It seems that Harvard was picked because of its past reputation. Also, Bridgeport may have been picked because it has participated in tournaments in past years and has done well. Unfortunately UMass has never played in a tourney nor does it have a good soccer reputation. There are no reasons to be left out of the tournament but they may have decided the issue. How else could a decision be made without seeing one of the teams involved?

Comparisons of records against common played teams don't reveal any damaging evidence against UMass, either.

Rufe said that he would like to see more committee members in the future. Also, "At least one should oversee the Yankee Conference teams; one, the Ivy schools; and one, the independents. That way all the teams would be covered," Rufe explained.

Bridgeport may also have been picked because it had a much tougher schedule, which allowed the committee to overlook its mediocre record of 7-5-3. UMass' schedule consists of only 12 games (an increase of 2 over past years). Next year the team adds Harvard to its schedule but that one change may not be enough.

The loss to Vermont probably sealed the booters' doom. With such a limited schedule, losses cannot be ignored as they were in Bridgeport's case.

Frosh Harriers 2nd in JV NE's

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

The freshmen cross country team assumed the somewhat frustrating role of runner-up in Monday's junior varsity New England Championships, despite an exceptional team performance.

The harriers, paced by Bobby Neil, ran as closely-knit team and fought to stay together throughout the 3.2 mile race. Although the first-year runners raced aggressively, they could do no better than second place, a fate shared by the varsity runners due to the outstanding showing of one other team. In the varsity meet, Providence College ran an almost unbeatable race and in the junior varsity championship, Northeastern captured first, second and third to edge UMass by six points for the team title.

Kevin Maguire took first place in 15:15, while teammates Larry Greer and Kurt Stolle finished second and third. Two runners separated Northeastern's trio and a pack of five UMass harriers. Neil placed sixth with a time of 15:35 and was followed by teammates Frank Carroll, Dave Kramer, Jim Scheer and Dino Lamacchia. Pat Rafferty of Providence detached Rolf Meyer from the group of maroon uniforms by finishing eleventh. Meyer ended up in twelfth place with a time of 15:49, just fourteen seconds behind Neil.

The freshmen runners displayed the tight team effort that the varsity squad desperately needs, but Northeastern's 1-2-3 combination was just too much to overcome. The Huskies totalled 34 points, while UMass had 40 points and Providence finished third with a team total of 79.

Stickers say goodbye to five

By LINDA MACKLER
Sports Staff

Although UMass should still look forward to a successful field hockey season next year, they are going to severely miss their five starting seniors. Sheila Higgins, Jean Kentfield, Barb "Space" Martell, Lori Nazar, and Elaine "Slink" Senosk will be graduating this May and leaving many empty spaces on the team.

While the five players were changing in the locker room after an intersquad hockey game on Tuesday afternoon, they spoke about field hockey, UMass, and their personal ambitions. All five women played field hockey in high school. If there are local clubs or associations available where they live, they all want to continue playing field hockey after graduation.

They said they have learned a lot this year from Coach Carol Albert, who they all agree knows field hockey very well and who put an incredible amount of work into her coaching responsibility.

Elaine Senosk, said field hockey is her favorite sport.

"During a game," she excitedly explained, "you keep 'putting out.' You go and go. You're always going. There are few time-outs. The whole team is involved at once."

This season's right halfback, Lori Nazar, said that she will miss field hockey next year.

"In high school," she reminisced. "I was interested in field hockey and it became basically a social thing. That's where your friends were."

All five players said they had come to UMass for its physical education program. Most of them agree that both the p.e. and women's sports programs have gotten better since their freshman year, but still need improvement.

Sheila Higgins and Jean Kentfield both said that in the last few years a volleyball team and a lacrosse club have been established. Sheila added that the women's sports teams have received new uniforms, new equipment, and more money for transportation to games and tournaments. Further expansion is required, but the seniors said they feel the University is aware of this and will continue to contribute.

Goalie Jean Kentfield said that she thinks there should be more coaching courses.

"The classes," she explained, "teach playing and skills, which help you to coach but do not teach you to coach."

Lori Nazar compared the UMass program to Springfield College's and said she found UMass gives a much more diversified background and preparation.

"The P.E. program offers a lot," she said. "You can come out knowing exactly what you want to do."

Barb "Space" Martell is the only senior completely satisfied with both the physical education and women's sports programs.

"I transferred from Moravian College in Pennsylvania," said the 5'3", 115 pound athlete. "The physical education program was terrible, it didn't exist. The sports program here is very good, the best I've ever seen."

"Space" is the only senior who is not a physical education major. She is a math major, who said that next year she is planning to enter the business world and return to Chatham, New Jersey, where she graduated from high school. But she has always been interested in sports.

Burned again

Well it has happened again.

Just like last spring when the Lacrosse team bypassed in the post-season tournament choices by a committee that had never seen them play a game, a similar occurrence has deproved the Soccer team of a post season bid.

After finishing one of their best seasons in years the Soccer team lost out to Connecticut, Brown, Harvard, and Bridgeport in the race to make the tournament by being one of the top four teams in New England.

The choices were made by a three man committee made up of Irv Schmidt, Springfield College's soccer coach, Whitey Burnham, former soccer coach at Dartmouth and now the Big Green's assistant Athletic Director, and Bill Killen, the Yale soccer coach.

Of these three men, two of them, those being Burnham and Killen, never saw UMass play a soccer game this season. Schmidt was the only member of the committee that ever saw the Minutemen play. How is it possible that these people could come to a fair decision with no concrete idea of how all the teams in contention play?

We only need to look at the facts at hand to see how bad the burn really was.

UConn and Brown were definites all along. Everyone expected them to be the 1-2 teams in New England and that is not where the problem in the decision lies.

Harvard was voted the number 3 team in New England. The Crimson's claim to fame is that they tied top-ranked Connecticut 1-1. Of course that game was played in a rainstorm and the field was in such condition that UConn was nowhere even near their true caliber of play.

Harvard was beaten by Tufts 3-1 before the regular season started the Minutemen easily defeated Harvard by a score of 3-1. This game was so close to the start of the season that it could almost have been a regular season game. The Minutemen played this game without the services of their leading scorer, Tom Coburn, and also without three other starters.

The 2 committee members that did not see the Minutemen play were from Ivy League schools. Harvard, of course, is an Ivy League school.

Looking at Bridgeport, a team with an overall 7-5-3 record, we see a squad that tied both Rhode Island and New Hampshire, 1-1. UMass beat both of those teams fairly convincingly. The Rhode Island game was a tough game that the Minutemen won in the end by a 2-1 score. Against New Hampshire, UMass was almost able to score at will as they easily defeated UNH 4-2.

The only thing that Bridgeport had over UMass is that they defeated Springfield while the Minutemen tied SC. If the committee's decision to take Bridgeport over UMass was based on that, then the decision was even a poorer one than it appears.

So again an excellent UMass team gets left out of post season play and a chance at a national title. Again it appears that the decision is, if not a bad one, definitely a questionable one, regardless of local biases.

Is it fair that 2 Ivy League people were on the committee when Ivy League teams were in contention? It appears not. And the situation is made even less fair when those members did not even see UMass play.

It is time that these know-all committees started to take UMass a little more seriously than they have in the past.

Let's hope it doesn't happen again.

Ellsberg, the man

Opening doors to humanism

by Frederic C. Weiss

Where once he lectured defense department bureaucrats, now he spoke with students. Five years ago, he was helping plan a war against Vietnam; Now he tours the country, warning about the abuses of power and the need for universal peace. "What the Watergate papers and the Pentagon Papers prove is that our leaders have been lying to us", Daniel Ellsberg, told a group of 1100 who jammed into the University of Massachusetts Student Union last Friday afternoon to hear him speak on "American Politics Since Watergate".

The audience listened to this man; the man who gave up a secure existence in the established world of Defense Department flow charts and Rand Corporation paychecks for a world full of uncertainties and doubts.

This man. But who really is Daniel Ellsberg? Clear blue eyes that are burning just the same. A frail body and gray hair that seems to be thinning prematurely. His motions seem like puppetry, as he awkwardly rebounds intense stares around the room. A soft spoken tenor, he sounds more like a professor than an organizer. In his manner, there is no sense of the "danger" that the Nixon bunch warned us about.

Yet quite simply, Daniel Ellsberg gave one of the most dynamic presentations heard at UMass in a long time. His lack of "professional skills" in the art of public speaking could only help him. Ellsberg spoke up from the heart, sometimes with humor, other times near tears. Yet those in his presence could almost feel the energy coming out of his body and his soul.

There was no "prepared text" given out to the press ahead of time. Rather Ellsberg depended on his own knowledge, his own observations and his own thoughts on the present and the future of this country.

Yet perhaps, if he hadn't given up the Pentagon Papers, he might still be throwing the bull around with his cronies down at the Rand Corporation Coffee shop. Perhaps between trivialities and the discussion of point spreads for the Packers-Giants game on Sunday, they would discuss how to level a village, or how many bombs to drop next week. Point spreads. Bombing statistics. In the Rand Corporation they are the same — simple statistics. If he had stayed at Rand perhaps nothing would have changed. He'd still be friends with "the guys" (as it is now, Ellsberg has been totally cut off from everyone that he has known at Rand, "They're scared to get in touch with me" he said rather sadly.). If he hadn't given up the Pentagon papers, perhaps nothing would have changed except the compromises of the soul, compromises that would have decayed the brilliant mind hiding behind the clear blue eyes. Yet as Ellsberg stood before the UMass audience, it was apparent that this was a man of history, someone who had truly affected it.

The students at UMass listened to Ellsberg with real interest. Not because he is brilliant. Not because his observations are keen and relevant. Rather he is listened to because he gave up the Pentagon Papers. In doing so, in following his conscience, despite charges that he was a traitor, Ellsberg's act was in the great tradition of Americana, for in retrospective almost all of our early hero's were lawbreakers to someone. Daniel Ellsberg is the man who played Hamlet for a time, threw down the skull just in time to avoid being another Albert Speer.

He warned the audience about the multinational corporations that were determining our national policy. Reading from the New York Times, he parodied Nelson Rockefeller, much the same way that Will Rogers used to work over Coolidge, or Mort Sahl doing the early Nixon.

Yet Ellsberg didn't come on as a comedian. The humor was used to point out the irony of the American dilemma, where men like Rockefeller who hire the best advisors that money-can-buy have given the United States a disastrous set of national priorities. His tone was sardonic as he read aloud the frustrations of Rockefeller at not being able to get involved because the Senate has not yet confirmed him to be the next Vice President. As he spoke, Ellsberg's voice kept a sense of cool, a poise.

There was sensitivity in his delivery, but underneath lay a real bitterness of the kind one feels when one has believed something till it is proven to be a lie, and then watches others scream that it is still truth. Citing the absurdity of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's proclamation that "we are in peace", Ellsberg went on to say that with such delusions, Kissinger was giving us an "invitation to join him in a garden of psychosis".

Noting that men like Kissinger are fond of using words like "we" for everything (i.e. Kissinger's "we should come to peace with our self-doubt"), Ellsberg went on: " 'they' do everything to keep us from knowing what 'they' are doing. 'We' are all a part of it, or at least this is what they are trying to make us believe!"

"Kissinger is inviting us to be accomplices with him in murder around the world. Murder is coming out of the closet. Look at Colby (William Colby, the head of the CIA). The CIA is inviting us to look into what they do. Colby is basically saying, 'Yes this is what murderers look like! Isn't it great that you let me in the classroom. You really do like and benefit from what I am doing. I'm keeping the price of oil relatively down as low as possible!' " Throughout his comments on Colby, Ellsberg's voice was softly sardonic, his words coming out like spikes of ice. There was little anger, rather a sense of real sadness.

Terming the Watergate Papers, "political pornography" ("The political version of the story of O"), Ellsberg compared them to the Pentagon Papers by pointing out that in both cases, "our leaders were lying to us. In both sets of papers there is proof that our leaders were breaking the Constitution, lying to the people, and then lying about their lying." Ellsberg also pointed out that in both cases, people were being kept from knowing the truth through an abuse of the national security classification system: the system that he violated in releasing the Pentagon Papers.

Ellsberg released the papers because he wanted the American people to know what our government was doing in Vietnam. As to charges that he was aiding the Russians and the Chinese, Ellsberg pointed out that "The Russians and the Chinese basically knew everything that was in the Pentagon Papers. Our government was not concerned with what they knew, but with what the American people knew."

Why did Ellsberg turn over the Pentagon Papers? "In the fall of 1969 I

Cool screaming of absurdity bittered by truth

realized that the war was getting bigger, and I wasn't doing anything about it, so I did what I did."

Ellsberg hoped that if the American people could see what their government was doing, maybe there would be a change in U.S. policy concerning Vietnam. In a small talk after the speech, he shook his head and went on, "You know, there are literally thousands of people today in a similar position that I was in, who have access to Pentagon Safes. These guys could break some important stories, stories that the American people should know about. However, despite exceptions like the Chilean leaks and the Cambodian bombings, unfortunately by and large my act has gone largely unimitated."

Can individuals make a difference in effecting U.S. foreign policy? Ellsberg pointed out that among the many things coming out of the Watergate affair is the fact that the Administration was terrified about the Anti-War movement, and obsessed with the movement far beyond White House official comments or even the relative strength of the movement itself. Ellsberg pointed out that the Administration was planning a massive offensive on North Vietnam, due for November of 1970, but called it off because they did not want to play into the hands of the thousands of War protesters marching on the capitol. In his attempt to diffuse the war protesters, Nixon called off the offensive. "This is the reality that the administration was doing — they were paying attention to you, even though they said that they weren't listening. They told you: Waste your lives — In fighting the despair, your lives were not wasted!"

Ellsberg explained that had the Nixon offensive taken place, and we did invade the North, "we would have been fighting everyone in North Vietnam, that would have been like going into a meat grinder. He felt that we would have eventually used nuclear arms on the North. The Demonstrators shifted the bombing of Hanoi and the mining of Haiphone by 2½ years. Saved 100,000 lives, maybe millions."

Through his presentation, a true feeling, a "love" for this country came through. A love of the Constitution (he continually mused about a "Constitutional Crisis") and a feeling of despair over our economic and political priorities. At one point he started referring to an article in the Times entitled "Dr. Dan, successor to Thieu". As he spoke of Dan and other South Vietnamese leaders who were tortured, frustrated and compromised until they gave in, he was filled with anger and bitterness. At another point, referring to a former South Vietnamese Ambassador to the U.S., a Friend of his who had tried to work within the Thieu regine until he became so disillusioned that he left the government and the country, Ellsberg tried to quote him, but was tearful and too choked up to speak.

He tried nevertheless to paraphrase the words of his friend, "I have compromised myself... I'm not compromising. I can resist both sides. I cannot be part of this while my country is being blown to pieces."

Ellsberg went on, "Whatever our intentions earlier, we are now involved in genocide." Why hasn't the war stopped yet? "Because there are powerful groups in the U.S. who don't want the war to end. Men who want to prevent changes of the status quo, in Italy, Germany, Spain. They want the world to be run by people who may not be bad guys... patriots who have felt both the carrot and the stick, and realize who runs the world... men who think well and talk well." A second delay, and then emotional emphasis, "If it means torture... we do that. If it means assasination... we do that. We keep nations from moving to the other sides... We don't have a lot of localized interest. Even where we don't have interests, we oppose change, because it sets a precedent set all over the world.

He spoke on. Urged people to join the Vietnam Peace Committee (to which he donates all his speakers fees). Spoke further about the dangers to our own Bill of Rights by multinational corporations. At one point he even got nostalgic; "Between the age of religion and the age of making money, there were thirty years in which men worked to improve the rights of men." Ellsberg hoped that there would be a sense of energetic renewal in the project that the "founding fathers" took up with such dedication.

After his speech, he had hoped to meet with members of the UMass Economic Dep't., alternate economists that were better than the best Rockefeller could buy. But as he entered the Suffolk room of the UMass Student Union, only Mike Best, a member of the Department of Political Economy, was there to greet him. In addition to members of the college press there were other students who waited around long enough to get into the small room.

It was here that Ellsberg was at his best. Outside, during the speech he seemed to be a man of history. Influential because of his sincereity and historical mission. Never condescending, never elitist, he said what was on his mind.

Yet here in this little room, Ellsberg was even clearer. His emotions now settled, there was a spontaneous (albeit distant) warmth to his presence. "I want to learn from you people", Ellsberg told the group. The conversation went both ways. Best, an intense a man who in his own sense is a man of mission, spoke on the movements in current international economics. Both men agreed that there was a danger of a "future Middle East War, fought in the name of Israel, but basically to get at Arab oil". Ellsberg went on quietly, almost wistfully, shaking his head, "It is amazing just how calm the country is about this. They are getting us ready for a war, and they say it so calmly."

Insisting that he wanted to learn from the audience, he really seemed to care. Listening to all questions, even those questions that were "statements" (a question that is longer than the answer will be).

"You know, when I first was against the war, I did not feel that the corporations controlled U.S. foreign policy. This is because I knew corporate powers who sided with the doves, and were against increasing our commitment. Yet the commitment grew. I didn't feel that corporations were the major force behind the U.S. policy thrust. But now I am beginning to disagree with that assumption. Corporations are very much tied into our current policies, especially regarding our support for South Vietnam."

Ellsberg told the small group that we "have to find a way to make these corporations more open to the people. They must be more accountable."

Someone asked him another question about Watergate, and then he remarked, "You know, I am not about to say that everything about John Dean is good. There are a lot of things about his character that I don't like. But you have to give him credit for doing what he did. He knew what went on within the White House, and I believe that he sincerely thought that his life was in jeapordy once he spoke on Watergate. He felt that his life was in real danger. It was only after I heard this that I realized that my life too had been in real danger. I didn't think that it was possible when I broke the Pentagon Papers story."

A few more questions. Queries to the group about his speech. Did they like it? Yes. Why? Numerous reasons. There was a real energy in the room. As if those witnessing the event could feel that here was a man who was still finding himself; through books, articles, speeches, travel, and simple conversation. Dan Ellsberg was really there. He cared. He was real, and people could relate to both his inner struggle and personal growth.

His driver finally succeeded in getting Ellsberg's attention. Time to go. As he got ready to leave, he stuffed a copy of The Washington Post and several books into a battered old brown briefcase. "Is that the same one that was used to cary Rand documents, and eventually the Pentagon Papers?" A wry grin, a quick affirmative. Where once the plans for war were carried, now books of peace.

THE APPRENTICESHIP OF DUDDY KRAVITZ

Screenplay by Mordecai Richler, from his novel; directed by Ted Kotcheff; starring Richard Dreyfuss, Jack Warden.

This film has two unique qualities which single it out from the police story—satire-sequel—natural disaster movie market today. For one, the story takes place in Canada (when was the last time you saw a Canadian movie?) and second, it makes an honest attempt at understanding the psyche of the Jewish religion. Morally, the Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz sparkles, but as an entertaining film I have to call it second rate—for reasons I will have to outline.

Richard Dreyfuss is Duddy Kravitz, a pushy, money-centered young man who will stop at nothing to achieve success. He is the solid replica of the stereotyped Jew, the type non-Jewish people enjoy ridiculing. What is important in the film, though, is that Duddy's character is so expertly documented and portrayed that for once we are given both sides of the story, and we see that in fact Duddy is no Shylock, but actually an obsessive-compulsive personality with a mad desire to impress those around him.

The source of Duddy's restless urges is his grandfather. In the miniscule, fenced-in back yard of his Montreal Jewish ghetto home, Zeyda tells his grandson that "without land, a man is nobody." It is this doctrine which Duddy imprints on his mind and strives to reverse. Soon he is off working as a waiter at a lavish, predominantly-Jewish resort in the country. It is there where life takes a new turn. He makes contacts with the wealthy members, finds romance with Yvette, a non-Jewish chambermaid, and spots a huge lake out in the woods which he promises, of course, will be his someday.

Within half a year he has obtained two partnerships: 1) with an Italian alcoholic movie director who will film short documentaries of weddings and bar mitzvahs of the club members, and 2) with Virgil, an epileptic young man who sells him "illegal" pinball machines. By now Duddy has his own office in Montreal, and the growing respect of his father and uncle. But his grandfather? That we don't know yet.

Duddy breezes along across the face of the dollar bill, stopping only for visits to his family and blind love with Yvette. But then Virgil, who has agreed to transport film equipment and other materials for Duddy, suffers an epileptic fit at the wheel of a truck, becoming paralyzed in a road accident. Kravitz, totally responsible for Virgil's mishap, is forced to go bankrupt. He learns his lesson from the incident, but he forgets it fast because soon, after borrowing money from his father and neatly forging one of Virgil's checks, he purchases the country lake he has desired for so long.

But his grandfather remains unhappy. It is one thing to live your whole life talking about a dream and another thing to have someone else hand you that dream. Duddy has achieved his goal, but he has impressed no one but himself.

Not since Patton or Serpico have I seen one actor who has been able to carry an entire film as Richard Dreyfuss does. He portrays young Kravitz to the letter, even throwing in such details as nervous hair-itching and a patented annoying laugh. The supporting acting is excellent, too. Jack Warden, as Duddy's father, is well-realized, constantly seen hanging out in the neighborhood delicatessen. Joseph Wiseman (the original Dr. No), plays his uncle with prophetic grace. The cinematography is also nice, particularly of the sprawling, Berkshire-like Canadian countryside, which is contrasted subtlely with the compactness of Montreal.

But there is one major directorial flaw which stuck in my mind throughout. The pace of the film is identical to Duddy Kravitz' character, meaning that no scene is longer than two or three minutes. Normally I enjoy a movie which moves along fast, but I would call this one jerky; the fact that Duddy is in every scene, bargaining and swearing and barely giving the other characters time to talk is enough to give you an ulcer. Sure, it enables you to fully get into the Kravitz character, but do you want to? I would have preferred watching the action from above, perhaps through the eyes of his best friend or family. Serpico gave you Al Pacino acting his heart out in every scene, but his character was more controlled, mellower, easier to take a large dose of. Duddy Kravitz does not become annoying, mind you, as he is extremely fun to watch, but limiting the screenplay to a direct progression of his actions is an assault on your brain if you are not expecting it.

But then you are expecting it, since you have just read this review. Therefore I recommend that you see Duddy Kravitz, if not for the enlightening statements on religion, values, and friendship, then for Richard Dreyfuss in possibly the best screen performance this year. The film made me feel giddy, but not totally for the reason I described. The ads for the movie say "there's a little Duddy Kravitz in all of us." This is true, but there are some persistent types who have too much of it. I know, because I lived with one my freshman year.

The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz

About the Amherst Film Cooperative

by Zane Grey

Exit Smiling, a classic from the silent era of film directed by Bea Lillie, is one of the films screened last year by the Amherst Film Cooperative—quite a treat by itself for Amherst's hard core film-lovers. But the AFC's dedication to authenticity insisted that this rare visual be aurally augmented with organ accompaniment by an individual as proud to state his age—eight-four, as well as his former profession—organ accompanist for silent films.

Such things are considered important to the discerning membership of the AFC, a group of people joined together to satisfy the social and aesthetic needs of true film lovers. Though one lone film fanatic cannot afford the expense to view such celluloid gems as Holiday (a 1938 release featuring Cary Grant and Audrey Hepburn in a humerous love story, screened last October by the AFC), a cooperative has the ability to lay out the ninety dollar rental fee to afford the individual such luxuries. It is for this reason that the Amherst area has seen the likes of such sparkling gems as Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, Lady from Shangri-La and Passion of Joan of Arc.

Perhaps several of you had noticed the perfectly garish, yet appropriately so, posters announcing the screening of Cover Girl (1944, with pin-up girl Rita Heyworth) only to find that when you arrived at Thomson 102 (AFC's usual place for screenings on the U Mass campus), the film was cancelled. This was one question put to John Morrison, a spokesman for the cooperative whom I met one evening to discuss the cooperative. He explained that several years ago, when the Cooperative was a RSO group working from the U Mass campus only, it managed to loose a large sum of money in providing its service, and mistakenly was under the impression that the loss would be absorbed. Unfortunately, RSO DIDN'T like absorbing the loss, and the coop was forced to dissolve. But before long, it appeared again, as strong and full of vitality as the perennial re-releases of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. The organization had changed its objective and market, seeking now to serve the wider film-loving population in the five college area. Today, though it is as active as ever, screening 20-plus films per semester at all of the five colleges, it has had difficulty in getting auditoriums at U Mass ever since its run in with RSO.

If the spirit moves you, you may become involved in the Amherst Film Cooperative in several different capacities: You may join their ranks by paying $3.00 (quite reasonable considering you are allowed unlimited attendance to any showing of any one of their films on any of the five college campuses) and donating three hours per month of your time. Or, you may go a la carte. In exchange for 75 cents or so, you may pick and choose the films you have time for, or are particularly interested in seeing.

If what this organization offers sounds of interest to you, do yourself a favor and dial 253-7525. The person at the other end of the line can answer all your questions about membership series tickets, programs or whatever.

To the real film fanatic, the AFC offers the opportunity to work with others in promoting the art of film. And to the person who wants to pick up on the past celluloid that has become the bedrock for contemporary film-making, the AFC is a source for those films that don't make the air on all-night television.

THE APPRENTICESHIP OF DUDDY KRAVITZ

Screenplay by Mordecai Richler, from his novel; directed by Ted Kotcheff; starring Richard Dreyfuss, Jack Warden.

This film has two unique qualities which single it out from the police story—satire-sequel—natural disaster movie market today. For one, the story takes place in Canada (when was the last time you saw a Canadian movie?) and second, it makes an honest attempt at understanding the psyche of the Jewish religion. Morally, the Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz sparkles, but as an entertaining film I have to call it second rate—for reasons I will have to outline.

Richard Dreyfuss is Duddy Kravitz, a pushy, money-centered young man who will stop at nothing to achieve success. Kravitz, totally responsible for Virgil's mishap, is forced to go bankrupt. He learns his lesson from the incident, but he forgets it fast because soon, after borrowing money from his father and neatly forging one of Virgil's checks, he purchases the country lake he has desired for so long.

But his grandfather remains unhappy. It is one thing to live your whole life talking about a dream and another thing to have someone else hand you that dream. Duddy has achieved his goal, but he has impressed no one but himself.

Not since Patton or Serpico have I seen one actor who has been able to carry an entire film as Richard Dreyfuss does. He portrays young Kravitz to the letter, even throwing in such details as nervous hair-itching and a patented annoying laugh. The supporting acting is excellent, too. Jack Warden, as Duddy's father, is well-realized, constantly seen hanging out in the neighborhood delicatessen. Joseph Wiseman (the original Dr. No), plays his uncle with prophetic grace. The cinematography is also nice, particularly of the sprawling, Berkshire-like Canadian countryside, which is contrasted subtlely with the compactness of Montreal.

But there is one major directorial flaw which stuck in my mind throughout. The pace of the film is identical to Duddy Kravitz' character, meaning that no scene is longer than two or three minutes. Normally I enjoy a movie which moves along fast, but I would call this one jerky; the fact that Duddy is in every scene, bargaining and swearing and barely giving the other characters time to talk is enough to give you an ulcer. Sure, it enables you to fully get into the Kravitz character, but do you want to? I would have preferred watching the action from above, perhaps through the eyes of his best friend or family. Serpico gave you Al Pacino acting his heart out in every scene, but his character was more controlled, mellower, easier to take a large dose of. Duddy Kravitz does not become annoying, mind you, as he is extremely fun to watch, but limiting the screenplay to a direct progression of his actions is an assault on your brain if you are not expecting it.

But then you are expecting it, since you have just read this review. Therefore I recommend that you see Duddy Kravitz, if not for the enlightening statements on religion, values, and friendship, then for Richard Dreyfuss in possibly the best screen performance this year. The film made me feel giddy, but not totally for the reason I described. The ads for the movie say "there's a little Duddy Kravitz in all of us." This is true, but there are some persistent types who have too much of it. I know, because I lived with one my freshman year.

About the Amherst Film Cooperative

by Zane Grey

Exit Smiling, a classic from the silent era of film directed by Bea Lillie, is one of the films screened last year by the Amherst Film Cooperative—quite a treat by itself for Amherst's hard core film-lovers. But the AFC's dedication to authenticity insisted that this rare visual be aurally augmented with organ accompaniment by an individual as proud to state his age—eight-four, as well as his former profession—organ accompanist for silent films.

Such things are considered important to the discerning membership of the AFC, a group of people joined together to satisfy the social and aesthetic needs of true film lovers. Though one lone film fanatic cannot afford the expense to view such celluloid gems as Holiday (a 1938 release featuring Cary Grant and Audrey Hepburn in a humerous love story, screened last October by the AFC), a cooperative has the ability to lay out the ninety dollar rental fee to afford the individual such luxuries. It is for this reason that the Amherst area has seen the likes of such sparkling gems as Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, Lady from Shangri-La and Passion of Joan of Arc.

Perhaps several of you had noticed the perfectly garish, yet appropriately so, posters announcing the screening of Cover Girl (1944, with pin-up girl Rita Heyworth) only to find that when you arrived at Thomson 102 (AFC's usual place for screenings on the U Mass campus), the film was cancelled. This was one question put to John Morrison, a spokesman for the cooperative whom I met one evening to discuss the cooperative. He explained that several years ago, when the Cooperative was a RSO group working from the U Mass campus only, it managed to loose a large sum of money in providing its service, and mistakenly was under the impression that the loss would be absorbed. Unfortunately, RSO DIDN'T like absorbing the loss, and the coop was forced to dissolve. But before long, it appeared again, as strong and full of vitality as the perennial re-releases of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. The organization had changed its objective and market, seeking now to serve the wider film-loving population in the five college area. Today, though it is as active as ever, screening 20-plus films per semester at all of the five colleges, it has had difficulty in getting auditoriums at U Mass ever since its run in with RSO.

If the spirit moves you, you may become involved in the Amherst Film Cooperative in several different capacities: You may join their ranks by paying $3.00 (quite reasonable considering you are allowed unlimited attendance to any showing of any one of their films on any of the five college campuses) and donating three hours per month of your time. Or, you may go a la carte. In exchange for 75 cents or so, you may pick and choose the films you have time for, or are particularly interested in seeing.

If what this organization offers sounds of interest to you, do yourself a favor and dial 253-7525. The person at the other end of the line can answer all your questions about membership series tickets, programs or whatever.

To the real film fanatic, the AFC offers the opportunity to work with others in promoting the art of film. And to the person who wants to pick up on the past celluloid that has become the bedrock for contemporary film-making, the AFC is a source for those films that don't make the air on all-night television.

That Championship Season

That Championship Season directed by John Ulmer written by Jason Miller with Joseph Warren, Eddie Jones,
John Towey, Ed Rombela and John
Hallow Stage-West Theatre,
West Springfield

reviewed by Frederic C. Weiss

A fading small town politician. A drunkard. An anachronistic old man. One man who has "made it", but is miserable. Another who is bitter because he never has "made it". All brought together by one thing in common: A silver cup that symbolizes the glorious season that they spent together in 1952, the year that they were the Pennsylvania basketball champions.

Behind this rather common theme of the annual reunion, Jason Miller's That Championship Season is packed with a great deal of emotion and provides a real tragic look at the American system, where, as Vince Lombardi once smirked, "winning isn't everything, it is the only thing." The commaradic of the championship has been used as glue to hold these men together for twenty years. However, the play, taking place in 1972 shows the audience that the silver cup has become as much an albatross as an inspiring symbol.

Meeting at the Coach's house, former golden boy George Sikowski is planning to run for re-election as Mayor of the town that he represented so well on the basketball court twenty years previously. George might have had a great running hook shot, but as a mayor he's a hack. Worse still, his fellow teammates seem to realize this fact. However the mystique of their common experience, plus the fact that most of their fortunes are tied into each others common success makes it hard for any of the individuals to break away from the team.

"Nothing changes boys. Nothing but the date", their old Coach assures them. Yet things have changed. As the evening goes on, the contradictions between the frustrations of their every day lives become magnified through a myriad number of scotch and waters. Eupheric. Nostalgic. The Coach tries to get them to remember "how great they were". Nothing changes but the date. Nothing changes but the date.

George Sikowski is trailing in his bid for re-election. Needing the financial help of his former teammate Phil Romane, a rich industrialist, Sikowski decides that the reunion is the time to remind Romane, where he came from, and who his friends are.

James Daley, another member of the team is principal of the Junior high school. A bitter person, he is haunted by what he feels was the change he never got. Tied into Sikowski's organization, he serves as his campaign chairman.

His younger brother, Tom Daley, the former playmaker of the state champ team has become a hopeless alcoholic. Yet through bloodshot eyes, he sees the reality of the day much clearer than the rest of the men.

The play is both entertaining and depressing. Representing most things that are truly tragic about our country, the production is most compelling. Eddie Jones, in the role of George Sikowski, is a high energy actor who tends to put just a bit too much time into the part during the first and second act. Through this he loses some of his credibility as a "real person". Seeming to be more of a mimic than a bum mayor, Joseph Warren is perfect as the Coach. While his style seems almost reminiscent of a vaudeville actor in some parts, he can carry it off because the Coach is such an anachronism that belongs in vaudeville; if only his story wasn't so tragic.

John Hallow, as James Daley, listens as Joseph Warren, playing the Coach, describes the Big Game in a dramatic moment from "That Championship Season" which opened Saturday Night, and plays thru November 30, at Stage-West in Srpingfield, Mass.

John Harlow is really competent as the frustrated junior high school principal. If he weren't so still during some scenes, if he could only be more relaxed in his role, perhaps he would have been outstanding.

Playing the part of Phil Romane, the successful industrialist who is continually looking for new thrills to justify his existence, Ed Rombela is excellent. Rombela mixes a sense of poise with a precision timing in the delivery of his lines. Rombela seems to have convinced himself that he is Phil Romane. On stage, it is as though he had been there his entire life.

By far the star of the show is John Towey, playing the role of Tom Daley. As a youngster, Daley was the quickest on the team. He could dribble, set up those plays, and really get a team going. But life has been a confusing line of cities and honky tonk bars for Daley. Now Daley has returned home for the reunion, bringing with him a sense of cynicism from the real work that continually breaks through the fantasy of "that championship season" as it seems to obsess all of the others at the reunion.

Towey, brings a sense of sensitivity and real emotion to this most delicate role. His intonations are perfect, and his facial expressions are compelling. The tragic hero of the production, Towey gives the part of Tom Daley all the attention it deserves.

The clock moves on. More drinks are poured. Acid indigestion claims more than one victim. The night moves on, as the tensions that tie these men to their own levels of mediocrity and prejudice rub against each other, the show picks up a real intensity. Contemporary topics are shown in perspective: Sexuality, adultery, racism, anti-semitism, right-wing paranoia, and a watered down nostalgia, are handled with taste and sensitivity. A realistic portrayal of fading men, most of whom at the age of thirty-nine, seem to feel that life is all over.

John Ulmer, the Director of the Stage-West production, has done a fine job in coordinating the skills of the various members of the cast. When you are dealing with a one set stage (throughout the entire play all that you can see is the living room of the coach's house), the lines meaningful, and the actors credible. For the most part Ulmer has done his job well, and for this must be given credit.

That Championship Season should be seen. Besides for being a very entertaining play, it is a powerful trip into the lives of these five wasted men. A poor man's Carnal Knowledge, the show gives you the view of what happens to men who lose sight of their dreams and sense of self: men whose entire lives are still moving around a faded newspaper clipping, a maudlin memory, and the constant playback of the cheers of the crowd. The influence of the Coach over these men's lives is enormous. Not hate, nor fear, or even adultery, should be allowed to break up the team. "You need each other boys" the Coach laments. "Alone you're nothing. They'll get you the way they killed McCarthy and Kennedy". The coach believes that Joe McCarthy was a saint, killed by the international conspiracy of bankers and Jews.

Comparing his boys to a fine piece of Swiss Clockwork, the Coach can't seem to realize that the clock is rusty. His life being almost ever, he lives for his boys. Yet like misdirected love by an over-protective parent, the coach's influence seems to be more destructive than inspiring. If you can kill someone with love, the Coach seems to be doing it. The imagry, of a small town in Pennsylvania, with its bleakness and boredom, is captured so well by Jason Miller's script. Without leaving the Coach's living room, you are given a full view into the continual trivialities that seem to make life so worthless for these men. Sex, power, and even friendship have become commodities to the ex-jocks. There is really very little happiness. In ways the imagry in That Championship Season is as similar and as haunting as John Updike's Rabbit Run and Rabbit Reddux, stories of a former basketball star trying to come to grips in a new life of lower middle class annonymity.

Phil Ramane, the richest and best looking of all the former jocks, breaks down at one point and says, "The only time that I have ever been happy in my entire life was when we won the championship." Rallying around him in an act of reassurance of both the myth and their "love" for him, the others seem to be continually trying to resolve their own lives and their doubts.

Few of these doubts seem to be resolved. But as the play goes on, there is one thing that defeat or misery cannot take away. It's the Silver Cup that represents That Championship Season.

This play will be at Stage-West in West Springfield through Monday November 30. It is a show worth catching.

What? Sip Bacardi before you mix it?

Sure. It's surprisingly dry, not sweet. Light-bodied, not heavy. Delightfully smooth. And so good mixed, it's got to be good un-mixed, right? Try it.

Chapter 1

It had rained all afternoon and well into the evening. A thick shroud of gray mist hovered over the earth and slowly wormed through the thin screening of the slightly opened window. Within an hour's duration the entire room was consumed in a blanket of fog.

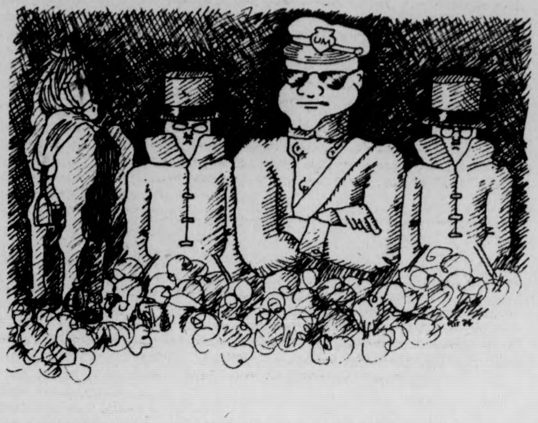
The student, number 6008893, tossed about in disturbed slumber. His head moved from one side of the pillow to the other and he let out hushed, indistinguishable murmurings.

The foreign sound of hooves clumping on pavement suddenly aroused him and he sat up in his bed and stared into the muddy thicket of fume. Again the sound; it came from the hallway just outside of his room. It was definitely a horse, for as it haulted it cried out as horses do.

"Whoooa! Whoa, Thunder!" came a deep Teutonic accented voice. "Whoa, boy!" Number 6008893 listened intently as the rider dismounted and approached his door.

Gradually the door creeped open. The first glimmer of light stabbed at the student's eyes and he raised a hand to bar the intrusion. A human figure took its form before him and was soon joined by two others, one at each side.

He rose from his mattress and reached for the lamp. It switched on and three official looking gentlemen stood in the center of his room looking ominously down upon him.



The man in the center was a university police officer baring all the uniformed attributes including gum chewing, arms folded across his breast, and dark glasses. The other two were dressed like clerks wearing long black overcoats and black banded top hats; both with their hands from sight within the deep trench coat pockets.

"What is the meaning..."

"Number 6008893?" queried the officer. "Yes," retorted the bewildered student. The rear of the horse came within sight outside of the dormitory door. "This is not a stable," began the student.

The officials began to roam about the room and handle several of his personal objects. "What do you want? What's going on here, if I may ask?"

"You may ask anything you please...ha! What's this?" demanded the policeman pointing to the student's stereo. "That's my pornograph..ah, no, I mean my phonograph, my stereo!" The other two immediately whipped out small notebooks and set to writing with great enthusiasm. "Porno...graph...' mumbled one as he escribed.

"Listen, tell me what's going on here. Who are you?"

"You are the student, number 6008893. We are the men from RUMP!"

"Rump?"

"That's right. The Royal Umie Mounted Police!"

"Police! Police! What do you want with me...listen, if it's about my roommate, well he's in Boston now, and I don't know what he's been up to. Subersive leterature? Politics? I know he's part of some group called SGA, I don't know what the intitals stand for..."

"We're here for you, Mr. 6008893. For you!"

"But, but..ah, this is hopeless!" 6008893 moved to his cabinet and started to dress. "Why are you dressing," asked the officer. "We're not going anywhere ...you're under arrest."

The student slumped down into his desk chair and sighed. "But, what have I done?"

The officer immediately displayed a copy of the Collegian's editorial page and pointed to a column baring the student's name and photo. "Did you write this?" he demanded. "Ah, yes, why, yes, I believe so. What's wrong?"

"Did you get that down?" he threw to the clerks. They nodded in affirmation. "What's the charge? Why am I under arrest?" he exclaimed.

The officer turned to him and uncrossed his arms: "Rhetorical homicide!".

"Rhetorical..."

"We know ya never got along well with English, or is it good with English? We know that down at the department. Both Lazar and Kostek testify to that. Well, the language has turned up dead. You're under arrest for the premeditated murder of the English language!"

"Murder? English..."

"Your record shows that you've assaulted grammar twice in the last month alone. What you've done to journalism is a crime against humanity! You are responsible!"

A sudden clap of thunder and the student leaped from his seat. Alone, standing in his room alone. It was day break. He plugged in the coffee and opened the windows wide.

He breathed deeply of the fresh morning air and then turned to his door to fetch the morning papers. The soothing sound of the coffee perculating pleased him. He opened the door.

In the corridor he found his bearded friend, the janitor, standing against the wall scratching his head in wonder. Their eyes met and the custodian spoke:

"Ah, gee, ah, man, ah. What kinda party did you guys have last night?" He pointed down the hall. "I mean, where'd all this hoss shit come from?"

Holly Near – gently reaching

by Ellen Gavin
Progressive News Service

Prior to 1971, Holly Near, noted anti-war singer and songwriter, had never participated in an anti-war demonstration. While campuses across the nation were exploding with student revolts primarily inspired by American atrocities in Vietnam, Holly was "sitting it out". Raised on a small farm in Ukiah, California, Holly's parents had been union organizers in the south until the McCarthy craze hit, causing them to relocate. Her parents did not push their politics onto her however, and Holly is grateful for that to this day. Consequently, after an active high school career (she was even voted Football Queen, an honor which has inspired one of her more whimsical songs) Holly's politics were primarily "emotional".

"I felt something internally, yet I didn't know what to do about it. I was afraid of violence, and I found no gentleness among active political people I encountered. I was against the war in Vietnam because I felt that people should not kill each other; I related to the Vietnamese only as victims, and not in terms of leadership and inspiration they were providing for all people struggling for self-determination."

Searching for a worthwile activity in which to invest her talents as a singer and a songwriter, Holly joined the Entertainment Industry for Peace and Justice, a group of anti-war entertainers based in Hollywood. "Our goal was to take over the media", she says with a laugh. Oversized egos, power trips, and all the interpersonal hassles which resulted turned Holly off. "We hadn't done our homework; we tried to organize without having any politics, any history, any analysis, and as a results, we fell apart."

Shortly after this, Holly was invited to join the Free the Army tour of the Pacific rim with Jane Fonda, Donald Sutherland and other anti-war entertainers. Holly was delighted by the opportunity to use her craft to do something she cared about, and after some consideration about the dangers, Holly accepted. She was scheduled to go first to the Philippines, where Marcos was in dictatorial control, and martial law was in effect. Holly tried to prepare herself for the cultural and political shock, but she was in for quite a lesson.

"When I was first invited to join the Free the Army show for its Asian tour, I remember going though all my sheet music to find appropriate songs. There were labor songs, civil rights songs, and a few anti-war songs with lyrics like "Gonna lay down my sword and shield...", or John Lennon's "Imagine there's no countries... nothing to live and die for...". I chose a few and headed for the Philippines.

After I was on the tour for a while, I began to see why all my choices were wrong, even though I had been perfectly willing to sing them. Take the song "Imagine". How to you sing "Imagine there's no countries" to people who are willing to die for independence? And when a Filippino woman looked at me with tears in her eyes and said, "We can't lay down our sword and shield. We are not fighting for money and power. We are fighting for our lives"... well, "Lay Down Your Sword and Shield" went right out the window."

Holly returned form the FTA show with somewhat shattered ego, but nevertheless, with a new sense of purpose: she was determined to write songs which would have meaning to her. She had always written from personal experience, but never about politics, and now this was her chance to combine the two in a real way. To describe her new frame of reference, Holly describes an incident on the tour, when a Japanese man takes her on a tour of Hiroshima Peace Park. After examining the crater, "I wept with shame when he said, 'You were not alive when this happened, do not feel guilty. It is for you to make sure it never happens again." For Holly, that had been a personal political experience.

So Holly began to write songs coming out of her personal political experience. She wrote songs inspired by Vietnam: the strength of its people, the horror of U.S. involvement, the excitement of the burgeoning G.I. movement. Holly has said that through her understanding of Vietnamese culture, as well as the role of the United States government in Vietnam, she has come to understand her role as a white woman. And by recognizing the strength of the Vietnamese women and understanding the obstacles they are overcoming in their struggle for liberation she has gained strength to fight for her liberation as a woman. "Look at what they've been through. Vietnamese women came through Confuscianism which told them that they should be concerned first, with their fathers, then their husbands, then their sons; they came through colonialism; and now they've come through this imperialism which has been laid on them."

Women in Vietnam are now fully participating, and most importantly, they have organized into strong unions. Unlike American women who actively participated in many facets of American society during World War II and then were sent back into the home when it was over, Vietnamese women will not allow this to happen.

As an artist, Holly has gained much of her identity as a performer from the model presented by the Vietnamese "culture workes". Vietnamese people neither recognize nor promote "stardom". Appreciation and recognition, yes, idolatry and superior treatment, no. Holly remarked, "Stardom destroys artists. In America stars are valuable, they are rare things, so they can demand a lot more money for that reason. But no human being can take what being a star does to a person." It is for this reason that Holly has not recorded with a major record company; she is hoping to avoid their opportunistic and exploitative tendencies, as well as the commercialism involved in the promotion of artists. Her album, recorded by Redwood Records, in California, can only be obtained through the mail.

Holly Near doesn't claim to have any clear-cut assessment of the present state of affairs in this country, nor does she have any predictions of the future. But Holly believes that the Vietnam war was an eyeopener for the American people. With the government's cult of secrecy being exposed through the Pentagon Papers, the Watergate affair and more recently the uncovering of the CIA's activities in Chile, people are beginning to question, and search for answers to those questions. "They are where I was at during the sixties, they are looking to fill in the gaps. And we must tryto show them in a way that they can relate to, try to reach them in a gentle and respectable fashion. The upcoming Bicentennial is the perfect opportunity for Americans to take another look at their revolutionary past, using it to help direct their future."

CANTAMOS—POCO
Epic PE 33192

This latest album from Poco is their eighth for the Epic label in a five year career of making bouncy American music. I was one of many who assumed that when founder Richie Furay departed from the group last year for stardom with Souther, Hillman and, Poco would have lost the cornerstone to their musical touch. (Remember, Jim Messina was an original Poco musician). With the 'superstars' departed, it seemed no one could keep the band together.

This album proves there was no cause to worry, AT ALL. Cantamos is as excellent an album as the group has ever done: tuneful, moving, optimistic, and bright. If you were lucky enough to have seen the band at any time then you know how well they communicate the joy they feel as they make music. This feeling dominates all the cuts on the album. Each tune is strong and individually impressive, so for me to single out any merely reflects personal taste. "Western Waterloo" seems like a Poco version of Zep's "Stairway to Heaven" in country rock style. The vocals, always a highpoint of Poco, reach soulful limits on "All the Ways". But all the songs are favorites here. Now if Epic records would only do their job and promote the band as they should, we'd all recognize the virility and accomplishment of Poco. NO RESERVATIONS. A plus.

THE RAMBLIN' MAN — WAYLON
RCA APL1-0734
BOB NEUWIRTH — Asylum 7E-1008

Both Waylon Jennings and Bob Neuwrith are artists that Billboard would label country-rock. They make a good contrasting pair if you want to find out where that form of music is these days. The album covers of both are low-key, frontal photos of each, though Neuwirth's is taken by a Polaroid SX-70, which gives you an idea where this country boy's roots are. And the album credits for each are simple, merely a list of personel involved in the makings. Except that Neuwirth's credits read like a telephone directory. People as diverse as Ian Matthews, Booker T. Jones, Dusty Springfield, Don Everly, Richie Furay, Cass Elliot, and more are somewhere on this album. Thirty-five people helped make this one of the most listless listening experiences I have had. Neuwirth's one claim to fame is that he co-wrote, "Mercedes Benz" with Janis. Assuming the Lord hears both versions, Neuwirth will be lucky if he gets a used three-speed bike. It amazed me to see so many good people so completely obscured in eleven short songs.

Waylon Jennings is able to accomplish more with but half the staff and no big names. But then you'd expect him to know what he's doing by now. The title cut and Gregg Allman's "Midnight Rider" get a good treatment among other good songs. Smooth enough to keep his old fans happy. This album can have an appeal to who appreciates the music that is currently coming out of Nashville.

Waylon gets a B, Neuwirth should drop the course.

THRUST — HERBIE HANCOCK
(Columbia)

Continuing in his successful efforts at reaching a wider-based record buyer's market, Herbie Hancock once again offers us a collection of electricity-spitting funk over-kill.

Thrust displays the same basic form and theory as his previous disc, Headhunters (the largest selling jazz record ever) — 2 long, loosely strung-together tunes per side, one hard-and-heavy (for dancing the bump), and one slower and a twinge more delicate (for a closed position two-step). Taken as another dance album, you might say that Hancock and compardres-in-funk Bennie Maupin (saxo and clarinets), Mike Clark (drums), Paul Jackson (bass), and Bill Summers (percussion) have put their best foot forward.

However, some listeners still look back on the old output Hancock was responsible for, when a reasonably steady rhythm was not an end in itself, but merely a bedrock for improvisation cum exploration. In the old days, Hancock would go as far to use those undance-able rhythms and meters, as in Maiden Voyage or King Corbra. Ah well, he has gone through many musical styles in the dozen or so albums he has put out.

Those who dug the cool, highly structured notes found on his earlier efforts were probably disappointed with his next bombshell, Fat Albert Rotunda. Those of you who dug the pop, big band arrangements of Rotunda probably didn't relish his next venture into free-form, space joy-stick improvisation, documented for example, on Crossings. And those of you who did like the Crossings genre probably don't like his recent output. Probably some of you don't like any Herbie Hancock at all, but are asking why this reviewer has the right to shoot off his mouth about what a musician performs. Good point.

As far as individual musicianship, Herbie's solos are, at times, fresh and selective. His old style seems to have been re-discovered, including the rhythm and chordal patterns of Rotunda, bringing to mind how he used to preface all his solos with high-on-the-keyboard triplets, like he was waiting for his ideas to gel before he started to wheel. He does that here on "Palm Grease".

Maupin plays a nice alto on "Butterfly". He and the band play all the right notes, just not enough of them. Understatement is extremely obvious on this album.

Not really impressive, but as was Headhunters, Thrust is worth a listen.

A "Hancock is still decent on keyboards" b-.

Too Good to be Bad

slumming

by Sir Real Mike Kostek

In Concert:
Frank Zappa and The Mothers Of Invention
Wet Willie
Orpheum Theater, Boston
9 November (10 p.m. show)

A strange show, for a number of reasons new to the Frank Zappa situation, reasons which combined with Frank's ill status to a performance best described as slumming.

Before we deal with this new information, we come to the pitiful case of Wet Willie. Truly a junk band, Wet Willie plays a graceless bland of Southern funk blues rock with the care and subtlety needed to entrance the casual thirteen year-old.

Cheap cheap cheap seems their motto as they pack unyeilding musical incompetence and brutal stupidity into a bothersome business closest to audible yap. Your correspondent missed not the chance to join in the chorus of lusty boos that filled the 'tween song air. "Lord have mercy" intoned the scrump lead singer. He'd better ask. Clayton floated out a headline: Wet Willie Piss Poor.

Below the Salt features quite a crew of people whose strident musical tastes border on the mad. Nuts.

Sokol, ever the accountant, muses that it has been 367 days since the last Zappa convert in Boston, Kostek sits poised with pencil and pad, mentally hauling around his twenty-two Zappa-Mothers albums. Michelove goes for another week without bread or water to pay for her ticket. Oldtimer Jeff Clayton waxes philosophical as he takes a break from his 22-hours a day studies at Harvard to see his old Guru. Paul Kontrimas is present with 20 or so rabids who had begun partying the day before and came to the show in a bus. The figure dashing up and down the aisles, jumping up and down with the FREAK OUT sign is of course Mike Tiberio. Prompt police action put an end to such nonsense.

The Mother people.

Sad to say, even such low guttersnipe class as your humble Salt staffers showed shone like beacons in the dull doldrums of the rest of the crowd, most of whom looked like they were congratulating themselves for getting to the Orpheum and actually sitting in the right seat.

Frank was feeling down all night, but still played for over two hours, half of which, incredibly enough, was in the solo-improvisation musical realm. And while Clayton pegged it as "some of the most inspired farting around imaginable," the show was oddly uninspirational to those who find the band-ness of these Mothers their most intreguing aspect.

The material was very similar to last year's go, and that in itself is disappointing. While things never slowed to a dangerous low level, there was not enough exhileration in general to compare favorably with past shows.

Hopefully, this was one night's constipation, but judging by Zappa's continuing musical course (Over-Nite Sensation, ', Roxy and Elsewhere) of the past two years, he appears to be rapidly exhausting the possibilities of this accessable surreal-rock genre. Tyla waited all night long, but Frank never surprised even her once.

The only-human Frank Zappa was less than healthy for his two shows at the Orpheum last week, resulting in a good deal more instrumental and far less vocally dominated material than is usual for Zappa-Mothers. Probably the result of the recent boost in popularity and record sales for both Zappa (Apostrophe) and the Mothers (Over-Nite Sensation), the group stayed away from new material, mostly favoring the primarily barbaric crowd with drawn out versions of recent favorites, "Yellow Snow", "Camarillo Brillo", and "Penguin in Bondage" (during the first show) and "Montana", "Pygmy Twylyte", and "Cosmik Debris" (at the later show). Even with extended soloing, the material came across with a tired tint and lacked the spontaneity which these same pieces exuded only months ago.

With Zappa's talking and singing at a minimum, the instrumental talents of Chester, George, Ruth, Tom and Napoleon were brought forth a bit more blatantly than usual, and were stunning. And, of course, there was a light show, bad enough to be a joke but good enough to give an idea.

Most totally healthy musicians are unable to pull off two distinctly different two hour shows in one night, but Frank once again proved that he can do it in any state of health. Let's just hope that he doesn't get tooooooo popular.

IN CONCERT: DAVE MASON — POCO
Springfield Civic Center
November 10

High School Madness. Concert, schmoncert — both groups (lessee, I've played these tunes 500 times in the last three years) tired, uninspired — What made it all worthwhile, in a necrophiliac sort of way, was to be verging once again on adolescence, this time from the other side.

The high schools of Springfield had emptied their contents into this hall, this night and how strange to be sitting — twenty-three years old, avant-national-guarde music snob, clutching my reporters' "Working Press" pass, leather coat — peering around at the peer-group made manifest and manifold: The consciousness I had lived six years ago assembled, put on parade. I was sick; dull eyes with no one looking out of them — resigned to the meaningless? You wanted to grab them by the shoulders and tell them to wake up and do something stupid, something crazy or just goddamn it live a little. I guess really what I'm struggling at, and Lord knows it's nothing profound, is, what a long, hard road to ourselves it really is and how it tears you to know there's no way to spare anyone else what you've been through just getting to where you are.

Not much of a concert review, but not much of a concert — so I thought I'd use the space to reveal the meaning of life (I'm always willing to get in on a profitable trend).

I'VE GOT THE MUSIC IN ME — THE KIKI DEE BAND (Rocket)

Kiki Dee and her band are introducing themselves to the American audience as the opening act in Elton John's current American tour. If the album is an indication of what the concert-goers may expect, she will be neither a boring nor terribly exciting act. (It is of course to the star's advantage not to have a dynamite opener, tho' because Kiki Dee is recording for Elton's new Rocker label, he will win either way.)

On the positive side, Kiki Dee has going for her a good rock voice, quite similar to Dusty Springfield's, and rock has seen too few new strong females in too long a time. On the negative side is the material with which she works. There are a few good cuts here, but just a few. The material is written by various members of the band; democratic but with not terribly original results. Gus Dudgeon's production touches are evident throughout. With material to match her potential, Kiki Dee could do a lot more than merely warm up an audience.

A room for improvement C.

IN CONCERT: ERIC ANDERSEN
Chapin Auditorium, Mount Holyoke
November 8, 1974

An audience of about 250 half-filled Chapin Auditorium last Friday night to hear Eric Andersen. For most of my adolescent years, he was the singer-songwriter who best reflected the innocence and ideals gathered in growing up and clashing with the reality of adult life. Or as Joni Mitchell observed, "All romantics meet the same fate someday.."

It was, I think, 1966 when Eric's first album came out and the album notes told of his influences — Leadbelly and Rimbaud. Typically ridiculous juxtaposition there, but for Eric, relatively true. His authored material at that stage is best typified by the Impressionist imagery of "Violets of Dawn". But other of his songs from that time, innocent and idealistic then and now, stand the passage of time well, notably "Close the Door Lightly" and "Cross Your Mind" which he did for us.

In a musical scene, Eric Andersen is a folky predecessor to Jackson Browne. The one major difference between the two might be that Jackson is moving toward rock instrumentation while Eric has stayed with basically folk music styles. Accompanied by Howie Emerson on guitar and dobro and bassist Tony Brown (who is also on Dylan's coming album), the three performed a loose and relaxed three hour set, broken only by a short intermission. They did songs from almost all the albums Andersen has recorded, drawing mainly on his last album for Columbia, Blue River. Also well received were "Rollin' Home" and "Thirsty Boots" songs you may know from Peter, Paul and Mary and Judy Collins, respectively.

The rest of that verse from Mitchell's "Last Time I Saw Richard" says that romantics are someday "cynical and drunk and boring someone in some dark cafe", an almost apt description of the show. The performers were having a good time, drinking a bottle of wine and whispering little asides to one another, but as the evening wore on, this became boring, even annoying. I went there prepared to like the show, so I did, but I feel that had I been seeing Andersen for the first time, he would have strained my limits.

BARBOLLETTA — SANTANA
(Columbia PC 33135)
Playing time: 50:05

Is it true that Sri Chinmoy took away whatever it was he'd given to John McLaughlin and gave it to Santana?

This is the kind of album you have to hate on first hearing and never play again, because this ingratiating music will get its hooks into you forever the second time through. On his other new release (with Alice Coltrane), Illuminations, Santana really reached inside himself for the first time in order to give shape to the musical concept he and Ms. Coltrane were dealing with, and found himself playing from a place which may have changed his approach to his instrument forever; there is new kind of sureness and intensity to his style. It's strange to hear, on Barboletta, much of this same depth of expression contrasted with the easy, rhythmic grace that has always been his trademark. This works beautifully in the instrumental passages, which are as light and brisk as an autumn day, but this contrast becomes sadly unbalanced on those tracks which feature vocals.

To begin with, there is no one in the band who can write lyrics which amount to a hill o' beans; Santana does most of the writing, and his efforts are mainly recycled Chinmoy-isms which, placed in the context of the band's street-rhythm vitality, sound painfully self-conscious and "heavy". Even a good vocalist would have trouble giving such lyrics enough life to be listenable, but Leon Patillo, Santana's choice for this album (and what a follow-up to Leon Thomas, for Chrissakes), is in no danger of falling into that category. He sounds like a remnant of the days when all a band needed for a hit single was a vocalist with a high, funny-sounding voice. His phrasing is terrible and his one composition, "Mirage", is easily worthy of T.J. and the Shondells.

I think Santana could be a lyricist (if we must have lyrics) worthy of his own music if he would stop parroting his master's aphorisms and try to relate the experience in a simpler, more personal way. "Life is Anew" comes close, sometimes. Perhaps it could even be inserted into his contract — we could call it the 'Santana Clause'. Splat. And thank you, sir.

Anyway, on the basis of the music alone this album would rate a B plus, but its lyrical limpness takes it down a couple of pegs. This album is about half instrumental so let's make it an 'Eric the half a' B.

NO OTHER — GENE CLARK (Asylum 7E-1016)
Total playing time: 44:06

It was Gene Clark who wrote several of the mid-sixties Byrds classics, and it has been Clark's voice which has graced not only the music of the pre-"Eight Miles High" Byrds, but also the more country-folk music of the New Christy Minstrels and Dillard and Clark. While the other ex-Byrds have remained musically conspicuous, either with C, S, N & Y, S, H & F, or the sadly defunct Burritos, Clark has been something of a musical nomad, only occasionally surfacing with a song of his being recorded by someone else, or with a solo record of his own.

No Other is Clark's third album (counting With the Gosdin Brothers) and his first in over three years. Within the primarily country-folk-rock ballad oriented framework of his songs, Clark expresses a gloomy, questioning, and even nihilistic attitude. He looks at man as "life's greatest fool" and ponders the existence of fate, time and ultimately, reality. Throughout No Other, I'm reminded of the Byrds existential dilemma of "100 Years From Now" from Sweetheart and Johnny Rivers' (of all people) distress over man's inability to fulfill his great potential, as expressed in his "The Way We Live".

No Other features Clark's voice as strong, yet searching. The playing by the impressive line-up of back-up musicians (including Jesse Davis, Butchie Trucks, Chris Hiliman and Russ Kunkle) complements well. Long-haired folk-rock.

SMILEY SMILE & FRIENDS—BEACH BOYS (Brother 2MS 2167) time 25:19, 26:50

A glorious repackaging of one mislaid rock landmark masterwork and its beautifully lighthearted successor, Smiley Smile, a 1967 child, is sheer joy in its taste, fun and simply delicious bits of life. Friends, 1968, seems giddy and blissed out by the newly found Transcendental Meditation, yet still shimmers with a life-view that is most compelling in its crafted balance.

Slapping these two together with intelligent artwork and a steal price tag ($7.98 list price-$5.00 in decent stores) makes for one of those rare occasions when the record company approaches the level of the art presented.

A 'heroes & heroes' A-

SUPER-SONIC SOUNDS-SUN RA (Impulse AS-9271) time 48:34

Wonderful stuff recorded in 1956, featuring Sun Ra and the Myth-Science Arkestra working in big band forms and managing to levitate the stodgy idea of the big band into something closer to a Big Bang. Early space music from one of the master musicians of the age.

PVDC — it pays for itself

Pioneer Valley Dinner Club

Restaurant discount books have been available in most major cities for years, and now there's one for the Amherst area. The Pioneer Valley Dinner Club represents nineteen local restaurants offering 31 discount coupons valued over $60. For $7.50, you can be a booklet-carrying member of PVDC, and if you eat out regularly (no pun intended) the club can save you some money.+

PVDC is the brainchild of three Amherst students. Being frequent restaurant-goers themselves, they decided to see if there was a demand for a dinner club in the area. After surveying the collective stomach of the UMass student, they found that the typical UMie eats out at least one night a week and spends an average of $4 a meal. So, they proceeded to enlist the support of local restauranteurs and came up with the Pioneer Valley Dinner Club.

PVDC supplies each member with a discount booklet and an information sheet about each restaurant represented. The information sheet provides a short description of each restaurant, its location, hours and average price for both lunch and dinner. The restaurants that comprise PVDC are as follows:

Amherst Chinese Food, The Bamboo Hut, Beardsley's, Campus Pizza, The Gold Mine, Goten of Japan, Mill Valley Grist Mill, Henri's, Inc., Home Comfort, The Hungry U, The Lighthouse, The Lord Jeff, Rachid's, The Stables, Wiggins Tavern, The Wine Chariot, The Wok, Zelda Bloomdido and Zorba's Taverna.

The Dinner Club will be worth your while if you plan on eating at many of these restaurants during the next year. All coupons expire September 1, 1975 and they all have a maximum dollar value. The average value per coupon is $2, but there are some stipulations. Many coupons are only good on weekdays or specify that they can be used for lunch only. Some discounts are given as a percentage of the entire bill with a maximum dollar value. For instance, if the coupons state 10 percent of the bill with a $2 value, you'd have to spend $20 to receive the full discount. In cases like this, it would be worth your while to bring three or four people so that you wouldn't have to order the most expensive entrees.

"...the support of local restaurants..."

For those that like to drink their meals, there are some good coupons for liquor. Henri's offers two cocktails for a nickel when two or more dinners are offered, and Rachid's offers a split of Cold Duck for a nickel — no other purchase required.

If PVDC sounds good to you, the mailing address is: The Pioneer Valley Dinner Club, 21 West Street, Hadley, Mass. 01035.

The $7.50 membership price will pay for itself if you like the restaurants on the list and you know how to use the coupons to their maximum value. If Burger King is your bag, stick to the coupons in the Collegian.

+Since this article was written, I received a phone call from the PVDC people. I explained to them that $7.50 was a little steep for most students. They agreed to lower the price to $5 if, believe it or not, you clip this article and send it to them with the five bucks. Five bucks is definitely a good price. Remember, this offer is good for one article and one article only...Madison Avenue wins again.

An Asimov Galaxy

Reviewed by Richard J. Valcourt

THE GODS THEMSELVES
by Isaac Asimov
288 pages
Doubleday

Isaac Asimov certainly has enough gall for twelve people. Not satisfied with being driven to exhaustion by his many and varied other duties (lecturing, polishing off book after book, and writing for God-knows-how many magazines), he has decided to write a novel of striking originality and (literally) dimension-spanning scope. This is Asimov's first science fiction novel in sixteen years, and since his fiction seems to be getting rarer and rarer these days, it serves as an extra special treat.

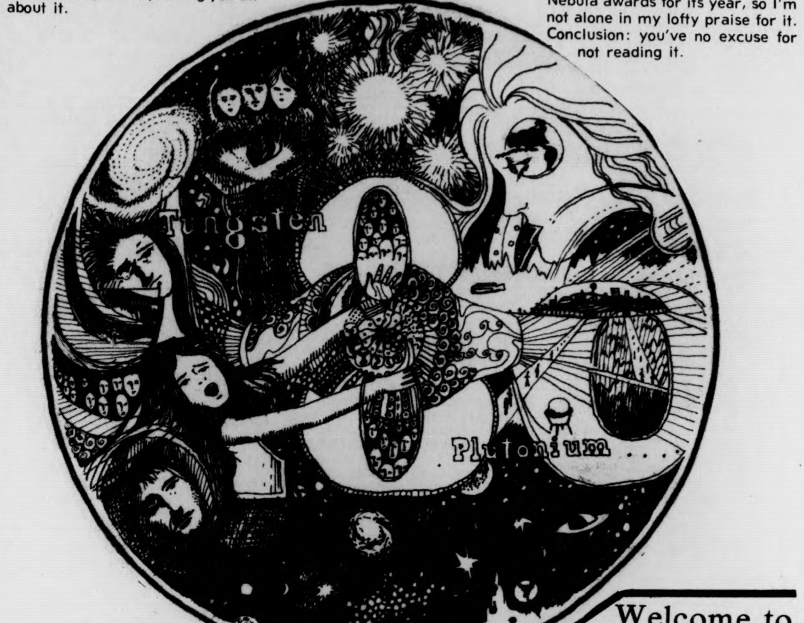
Perhaps the lay-off has tamed Dr. A a bit, because instead of entirely altering the flow of time as he did in his much earlier END OF ETERNITY, he "merely" almost destroys the galaxy.

And what is the cause of all this mayhem? Well, it seems that good old American know-how is the culprit. A device called an Electron Pump is built, with a bit of help from aliens inhabiting the "para-universe" (it was their idea to begin with), and it soon proves to be the energy panacea so desperately needed by the Earth. More of an inter-dimensional matter transmitter than anything else, it allows an exchange of two very important substances: they get our Tungsten 186, and we get their Plutonium 186. Each element in its own world is stable, but transporting them to other universes with their slightly different "laws" results in a radical change. Each metal begins to decay at an ever increasing rate, and thus they can be used as radioactive fuels. With this ostensibly inexhaustible supply of fissionable materials, has man finally seen the end of the energy crisis?

Nope. Like all energy sources, this one also pollutes, only this time it's "law pollution". The natural laws of each universe seep into one another through the connection created by the Electron Pump, with the end result being that the para-universe is slowly cooling off, and ours is slowly heating up. The effects are more immediate and deadly for us, however, because in twenty or so years, the sun will heat up sufficiently to "go nova" (explode). This in turn would cause a spreading of para-universe-law throughout our region of the galaxy, producing a series of stellar explosions. Eventually, all or part of the galaxy would be converted into a Quasar, which is something that makes an H-bomb look like a small campfire.

The reason that the solution is not as easy as turning off the offending Pump is because only a few people know about these deleterious effects. It isn't easy to convince the rest of humanity that their benevolent energy savior is really a two-faced villain who's about to shoot them in their unsuspecting backs. I said earlier that Asimov almost destroys the galaxy. The story does have a ending which does not result in the annihilation of all life, but I'll be danged if I spoil it by telling you all about it.

I can't resist briefly mentioning the concept of "melting", surely the strangest part of the book. This is how the Triads derive a sort of sexual pleasure from one another. When the mood suits them, they undergo a bizarre physical assimilation, literally "melting" into a single being, forming one from three. If the melting is "good", a child is produced. Strange... and mind-boggling (I can see it now: "The Sensuous Triad").



The novel is structured in three parts. The first concerns the discovery of the Pump and the subsequent efforts of one man to stop the impending doom. He fails to halt the pumping.

The setting for the second part is in the para-universe itself. Here, Asimov has created a fascinating new life form: the Triad, which is actually a symbiotic grouping consisting of one Emotional, one Parental, and one Rational. This entirely alien culture is beautifully handled, and is in many ways the best thing about the book. Here, also, a young Emotional realizes the danger of the Pump. She is concerned not so much about her world as she is for the other (our) universe, since she has been able to deduce the coming Quasar effect. Her futile efforts to aid the "other creatures" are genuinely touching, and at the end, there is a bitter irony involved in finding out that she was partly responsible for the invention of the Pump.

The third section takes place on Earth's colonized moon, and even though it contains the book's climax, it is curiously calm and subdued. This is not to say that it's bad. Witnessing Selene Lindstrom, a lunar-born girl, eventually discover a solution for the Pump problem, is thrilling, but since the events take place at an almost leisurely pace, the reader isn't left gasping for breath.

The book is vastly different from any other novel Asimov has written and the changes appear to be mostly stylistic. The "old" Asimov wrote fast-moving action novels with several plot twists per chapter. These were fine, but if read one right after the other, they became somewhat tedious. The Gods is slower, smoother, and concentrates much more on character development than previous works. The protagonists, even the aliens, are shown to be genuine beings with feelings and individuality... and problems. The reader is able to establish a rapport with them, unlike in Asimov's earlier books, where all you could do was watch and wait and guess. Reader-to-character empathy is quickly established, and it doesn't let up until the end. As a matter of fact, it continues well after you've finished the story.

The book is not particularly recent (published in 1972), which means that it's already out in paperback. It won the Hugo and Nebula awards for its year, so I'm not alone in my lofty praise for it. Conclusion: you've no excuse for not reading it.

Welcome to Fred Weiss' Book World...

by Horatio Alger, Jr.

In the near future the Below the Salt bookspot will review The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence, by Victor Marchetti and John D. Marks. The book set off a battle through the course, on the question of what Marchetti, a former CIA agent could write about and could not. Some of the sections were censored by the court, and these parts are conspicuously left up to the reader's imagination, by blank pages and spaces.

Thanks for the great response on the question of "who is "deep throat" in Woodward and Bernstein's All the President's Men. The only answer given, (and it was suggested even before press time) was by Robert Griffith of Jeffrey Lane in Amherst. Griffith suggests that it was Richard Kleindienst, former Attorney General of the United States. Griffith says that it is Kleindienst because he had connections in both the White House and the Justice Department, and also points out that the man received a relatively light prison sentence.

ELVIS RECORDED LIVE ON STAGE
ELVIS PRESLEY
(RCA CPLI - 0606)

Looking at the list of songs on this album, minds slide back to scenes of braces and late babysitting nights glued to the television; one ear tuned to a best friend on the telephone and the other absorbing every low note Elvis spoke or sang. He was great then. Recordings of the little girl fantasies he inspired would be infinitely pornographic. The music was uncomplicated, based mainly on that special voice and simple rock and roll rhythms. Spines tingle merely thinking about new live versions "See See Rider", "Love Me", "Long Tall Sally", "Whole Lot-Ta Shakin' Goin' On", "Jailhouse Rock", "Hound Dog", "Blueberry Hill", "I Can't Stop Loving You" and "Can't Help Falling In Love". Expectations run high.

The voice is tired and sounds as old as memories. The only songs that are complete are over-done gospel numbers and Coca Cola commercialish "Let Me Be There"; everything else is a medley and or lacking in spirit or vocal arrangement. The moments that move are too few to merit a whole album and are merely flashes of better times. If you saw the last Elvis On Tour movie, this album would be a waste of listening space. It would be better to remember the pre-acne years in peace then to have them almost destroyed by what Elvis has become. Nothing old, nothing new, all is borrowed, I feel blue.

Freedom of the Press

by Luis Manuel Medina

STEVE TRIPOLI — Ex Editor-In-Chief of the COLLEGIAN "Governments have the power, and the Press have the voice." The right to write for minorities needs to be protected." "In the COLLEGIAN, the great direction is to make a truly multicultural newspaper."

SHARON HUGHES — Former Assist. News Editor COLLEGIAN. "There are stereotypes about journalsim duties, between men and women. Freedom Of The Press On Campus. It has been very little pressure for the most part, any pressure is very subtle, not verbal pressure. The COLLEGIAN is a very stratified type of institutionalism it runs like a bureacracy. I was part of it, too. You can accept responsibility without being elitist."

MARTHA CREEGAN — Student legal services. Former SGA's senator. Relation Of Media To Government. "Media can be used as an effective tool by the government to inform the people, but that depends on the accountability of the government to the people. It would also be used as a screen by the government to protect itself from criticism." "Privately owned media seems to present a unique problem in that itself makes the final decision what will and will not be printed. It can therefore become a discriminating education tool. But, at the same time if it is owned by an irresponsible government, I hate to think what Richard Nixon would be doing now."

LINDA MATYS — Former teacher of journalism. Valley Advocate Editor. "What freedom of the press means in this country is something for everybody, but not necessary in on publication, communist, enviromentialst John Birchers, have their own publications and it's legal. The large newspapers as they become larger and monopolistic should become more responsible for the people. There always is room for the newspapers to crusade on one side of the issue if there is no way for people to find out about the other side. All types of publications are justifiable because of the American journalism historical structure newspapers. There is no government control in newspapers as in radio or T.V., the more newspapers the better."

MICHAEL KOSTEK — BELOW THE SALT Editor. ART MAGAZINES AND THE PRESS. "I feel good presenting a fine art — real world magazine every week." "Advertising is necessary given the current situation." "Journalism is a social responsibility; if you see something wrong; write it. I believe if you are not part of the solution, you are part of the problem. The purposes of Journalism is to advocate, to report accurately, to be a watchdog of daily life."

GIB FULLERTON — Production Manger Valley Advocate. "The most improtant aspect of journalsim or any type of media are the readers. Advertisers are more concerned in selling, not molding public opinion."

ELEANOR GATES CRUM — UAP's Chairwoman. "Poor communication or the lack of it is a deadly cancer." "Love for one's fellowmen, tolerance forgiveness and desire to cooperate are excellent constituents of good communication. If nations and their people would promote equality, if they would communicate with charity, clarity, and unselfishness, recognizing the rights of others and the worth of man, ours would be a better world — relatively free of the deadly cancer of poor or no communication."

compiled by Jeffrey Polman

AIRPORT 1975 ++

The latest things today in films are disaster movies and sequels. This one's a disaster sequel, and it certainly suffers from its lack of originality. Charlton Heston again, folks, with another splurge of Middle America entertainment. At the Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

APPRENTICESHIP OF DUDDY KRAVITZ +++

Reviewed in this issue on p. 5 At the Campus Cinemas.

CHEERLEADERS +++

A better than average skin flick, that is, if the average is Pippi Longstocking. It's fun, though, and that's what counts, right? Don't forget to bring your overcoat. Billed with Oh! Calcutta! at the Campus Cinemas.

DAY OF THE JACKAL ++++

Excellent suspense tale about would-be assassin of deGaulle. Based on Frederick Forsyth's novel. Character of "the Jackal" is a chiller. 11-15 and 11-16 at the S.U.B., 7, 9, and 11.

DEATH WISH (1974) +++

People are raving about this new Charles Bronson movie for some reason, and a viewing should explain why. It deals with a wealthy architect who takes the law into his own hands and calmly shoots muggers off the streets after his own wife and daughter are assaulted. The question is: how do you stop the growing crime rate in a big city, through the police, or through personal protection? The film favors Bronson's actions, and usually the audience follows suit. The idea is cute, but the portrayals of the muggers are too stereotyped and West Side Storyish. Still, the acting shines and the New York City photography provides a spellbinding background for the shenanigans. Michael Winner directs his first winner. At the Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

FLESH GORDON +++

Sharp spoof of both the science fiction genre and the foreplay flicks. Enjoyable sets, special effects, and humor make this a big surprise. Complete with phallic-shaped ray guns and spaceships. Campus Cinemas.

GONE WITH THE WIND ++++

The old classic which has stirred up the legions of decency in the Thirties. The big breakthrough in color film. It won a slew of Oscars. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE GROOVE TUBE +++

Good satire on television lunacy and idiocy. Initially a sleeper of a film, but is fast gaining recognition as one of the best spoofs of the last few years. At the Mountain Farms Four.

THE HARDER THEY COME ++++

Powerful, fascinating drama of racial strife, with Jimmy Cliff. This film has been playing in Boston for goodness-knows-how-long. Vincent Canby of the N.Y. Times says about it: "a cult film, which has more guts, wit, and humor than most movies you'll see in any one year." 11-17 in the C.C.A. at 7 and 9:30.

HARRY AND TONTO ++++

A contemporary saga of an old man and his cat who travel across country searching for a new outlook on life. Slight rip-off of Steinbeck's Travels with Charley formula, but when was the last time you saw a decent film about old age? Art Carney, as Harry, will most likely win an Oscar because he's getting old. But he also does a fine job. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

LADY SINGS THE BLUES ++++

Diana Ross won an Academy Award nomination for her role as the legendary Billie Holiday, and the film which supports her is superbly constructed from all cinematic ends. A must. 11-16 in the C.C.A. at 7 and 10.

THE LONGEST YARD ++

A fleeting macho action flick where Burt Reynolds shows his cell block how fun it is to be in prison. Eddie Albert acts as warden, for all you Eddie Albert fans. Robert Aldrich directed. At the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield.

OH! CALCUTTA! ++

Built up as one of the raunchiest films in a while, but it isn't. Based on the fleshy Broadway play, it teases more than it exposes. But it's teamed with The Cheerleaders at the Campus Cinemas so you might as well take it in.

PERSONA ++++

Bergman at his most personal, and surely his most dramatic. Story concerns two women and their relationship. Need I say more? The world's greatest filmmaker incorporates his skill in portraying the human psyche, as well as laying bare his actors and emotionally stripping the audience naked. With Shame at the Amherst Cinema.

SCARECROW ++++

Don't miss this one. Al Pacino and Gene Hackman, two of America's finest actors today, excel in this little-known film about two "hobos" in their search for a plentiful existence, in Pittsburgh. Jerry Schatzberg directs a sleeper masterpiece, and Pacino and Hackman turn in a couple fabulous performances. You will not be dissatisfied. Winner at the Cannes Film Festival a few years ago. 11-14 in the S.U.B. at 7 and 9:15 p.m.

SHAME ++++

Another Ingmar Bergman classic, about the effect of war on human beings. Liv Ullman and Max Von Sydow star in a gut-ripping drama, replete with grisly scenes of death and destruction. This and Persona viewed in one night at the Amherst Cinema could be hard on your brain, but if you're into Bergman or if you can appreciate good filmmaking you won't want to miss them.

THAT'S ENTERTAINMENT ++++

A collection of musical moment from nearly 100 great MGM films produced between 1928-1959. The singing of Liza Minelli, Frank Sinatra, Judy Garland and "more stars than there are in heaven". Also the offstage music of Cole Porter, the Gershwins, etc. as Frank Sinatra says, "You can wait around and hope... but you won't see the likes of this again." Playing at the Mountain Farms 4.

THE TRIAL OF BILLY JACK ++

Sequel time again, kiddies. This time it's courtroom adventure with Billy and his organic disciples. If you liked Billy Jack you'll probably like this, but I thought Billy Jack was out-of-date vomit, so perhaps you should see this yourself and judge. It has just been released, partly for commercial reasons. If you don't believe me, check out the jacked-up prices when you see it. Playing at the Mountain Farms Four.

THE WIZARD OF OZ +++++++

In short, Dorothy and Toto and the Scarecrow and the Tin Woodman and the Cowardly Lion and the Wicked Witch of the West, not to mention Glinda and the Guardian of the Gates. If you haven't seen it yet you must have been raised in East Antartica. But this time it's in color and without interruptions at Mahar TONIGHT at 7, 9, and 11. It's a twister, it's a twister!!

Dorsh calls dormitory rules unconstitutional; asks end to it

By KATHY SHEEHAN
Staff Reporter

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
Collegian
TELEPHONE 545-3500
VOLUME CII, ISSUE 49 AMHERST, MA. FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1974

William M. Dorsch, attorney for the UMass Legal Services Office (LSO) has called the mandatory dormitory residence requirement for UMass students under 21 years of age unconstitutional under the Equal Protection clause in the United States Constitution.

In a letter to William Searson, general counsel for the UMass Board of Trustees last Tuesday, Dorsch formally demanded on behalf of six student clients, that the trustees rescind the mandatory residence requirement because it "violates their (the students') right to Equal Protection as guaranteed by the United States Constitution." And Dorsch feels the University has no legitimate defense in "infringing on the students' rights to choose their residences."

Citing relevant court cases, Dorsch said he read the decisions of these cases to mean the University has no justification in requiring students to live on campus because UMass "may incur financial difficulties as a result of dorm vacancies."

CC workers get hours back

By JUNE VALLIERE
And P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporters

Coffee shop employees will have their hours reinstated. This proposal, unanimously voted in, at last night's Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors meeting, will be effective immediately.

The follow-up motion, to ensure that student employees will be guaranteed protection from any further cutbacks and lay-offs for the duration of the semester was tabled.

Several members of the board felt it was unfair for students to pay for management's errors in this matter. Howard Levin, Vice-Chairperson of the Board of Governors, said that because it is nearing the end of the semester, and these students are in financial need, the best solution is to reinstate hours to students in the Coffee Shop in order to "satisfy people at minimal cost and maybe to boost morale." He said this mistake should be kept in mind for next semester and rectified.

John Corker, Director of the Campus Center gave his reasons for rejecting the proposal. He said, "One of the concerns I raised was, are we dealing with a bad decision that was made?" If it's bad, shouldn't it be a concern for all?"

In response to Corker's argument concerning the arousal of conflict in other affected areas in the Campus Center, such as the Hatch, The Blue Wall and the T.O.C., Milton Kerstein, member of the Student Employee Committee, said that these other people would have complained if they felt this cutback was unfair.

Kerstein said that he had talked to other people in these areas and they said they felt unaffected by the cutback.

The proposal for stabilizing student hours has tabled because the financial budget for the C.C. had just been received in October, and the board decided it did not have enough information to make a valid decision.

Lisa Saunders, Chairperson of the Student Employee Committee said she would drop the proposal if Corker would give the Committee a written guarantee protecting students from further cutbacks.

Kerstein added this motion was brought up as future insurance against lay-offs, next semester. He said previous verbal agreements had not been kept.

Corker promised that there would not be any layoffs next semester but that he could not guarantee there not be a cut in hours.

This motion was tabled with seven in favor, four against, and three abstentions.

Other motions passed at the meeting were the increase in rates at the Print Shop effective Nov. 18, alteration of Coffee Shop hours, and the closure of the Hatch Bar during lunch hour beginning in two weeks.

Next semester, the Coffee Shop's closing hours will be changed from 1:30 to 1:00 from Sunday to Wednesday.

Hatch Bar will be closed at lunch time due to lack of student interest. During October losses were estimated at seven dollars per day.

Corker said all attempts will be made to reschedule bartenders in another area or to give them hours but there would not be a loss in the number of hours.

inside:

Campus crime is on the rise, which is probably no news to anyone, but see page 10 for the inside scoop.

weather:

I'd like to tell you that today is going to be nice and sunny, but you've probably already noticed that it's cloudy out, so I won't. I'd also like to tell you that it'll get warmer into the weekend, but that wouldn't be true either.

Everybody deserves a little sunshine every day, so if it doesn't look like it's coming out of the sky, look elsewhere. Happy trails.

Bromery: Dorms voluntary by Sept. 1975

The campus administration is working towards making residence in dormitories completely voluntary for all students by next September, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said yesterday.

Speaking at a regularly scheduled twice-monthly press conference, Bromery said:

"My goal is to shoot for it as fast as we can," Bromery said. "I'm shooting for September of 1975...but that's dependent on whether we can get some legal changes."

Bromery said the most difficult legal problem is assuring that "debt-service" on the dorms -- essentially mortgage payments -- can continue to be met even if as many as 1,000 student decide to live off campus instead of in dorms.

The University's fiscal 1976 budget request works for students, Chancellor Bromery says in press conference. Story, pg. 9.

Tables showing spending on the Amherst campus are reprinted on page 7.

"I think we'll work out the legal problems -- probably by September 1975...we're not sitting back on our thumbs doing nothing," Bromery said.

Bromery said he was concerned that if a large number of students -- up to 10 per cent -- decided to live off campus he fears they will make it difficult for married students and young faculty to obtain good housing.

He also said he fears that with a potentially greater market for private apartments, developers would once again consider Amherst prime area for putting up housing complexes. "You only need 10 per cent of the students out there and it would change," he said, adding that bus schedules would also be effected.

Richard Wright lecture series continued with third presentation at Herter Hall

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

The third lecture in the "Richard Wright's Lecture series was held last night in Herter Hall. Prof. Sylvia Wynter, Jamaican-Cuban poet currently on the faculty of the Third World College of the University of California at San Diego, was the guest lecturer.

Prof. Wynters characterized Wright as a man greatly influenced by western art and in his admiration for western culture did not see its implications.

Remarking on Wright's move from the South to Chicago and to New York, then finally to Paris where he died, Prof. Wynters said, "his life was shaped and patterned by the pain of these disruptions...His life, she continued, was native to exile.

Wright was greatly influenced by the communist party, and even after breaking with the communist party maintained certain ways of thought of the party. The communist party's influence was to be reflected in his later writing on Africa in which she said "Wright was to foster the idea of a tragic elite which was to save the African world." "In his idea of the tragic elite however he did not see the movement of the masses. Prof. Wynter continued, "however right he was or however wrong, in any issue all his life he was totally committed to the liberation of all Black people and in deed to the liberation of all oppressed people."

"Wright," she explained, "was angered by the gods of the African people," he made clear his contempt when he wrote "the best thing the missionaries ever did was to reduce four hundred gods to one." In fact she continued, "he began to argue that it was these innumerable gods which created the mental habit which was the cause of Africa's defeat."

Miss Wynters presentation was well received. It generated some penetrating questions which was accompanied by a healthy discussion with different members of the audience.

"Miss Wynters discussion of Wright once more reinforced the need for serious analysis of the Black artist by serious Black critiques," asserted one participant.

Further lectures in the series will include John Henry Clark tonight at 8:00 p.m. at Amherst College. On February 4, James Baldwin will be at the Univ. of Mass.

For those who missed Miss Wynters, she will be at Hampshire at 7:30 on Sat. night. Check all time and locations with the various area information offices.

After only two debate tournaments UMass I.E. team won eleven trophies

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

11 trophies on display in 126 South College attest to the speaking skill of the UMass Debate Union's newly formed Individual Events Team (I.E.team).

The team, whose name is longer than its history, was started at the beginning of this semester to give the Debate Union more versatility, and to interest a wider range of students, said Mike McCambridge, one of the team's two coaches.

Jean Gaumer, the other coach, said, "It's pretty amazing when one considers that we've only been to two tournaments."

The I.E. program consists of after dinner speeches, extemporaneous speaking, impromptu speaking, informative speaking, oral interpretation, and persuasive speaking.

Occasionally the categories of original poetry, dramatic pairs, and rhetorical criticism are added.

Some tournaments may have special events, such as epideictic speaking, which is the reciting of eulogies.

The first tournament the I.E. team attended was at Plattsburg University in New York where six trophies were won.

Jill Peltin and Nick Burnett took first and second place respectively in after dinner speeches, while Paul Goslin won first place in epeictic speaking and fifth place in persuasive speaking.

Goslin and Peltin took third place and fifth place respectively in the pentathalon, which depends upon the total number of points totaled by participating in five events.

Over 100 people from colleges throughout the east attended the tournament.

The I.E. team also attended a tournament early this month at Bridgewater, Mass.

The team took home four individual trophies plus a team "sweepstakes" trophy for fourth place in the tournament. The "sweepstakes" trophy depends upon the total number of points accumulated by the team.

"It's pretty incredible that we won that 'sweepstakes' trophy, because we were the smallest team participating. We only brought four people with us, while some schools had up to 35 participants," Gaumer said.

The other trophies were won by Cathi Eppinger for third place in impromptu speaking and fourth place in oral interpretation, Nick Burnett for second place in after dinner speaking, and Martha Seif for fourth place in informative speaking.

Over 150 people, mostly from the Boston area, attended the tournament.

The I.E. team has not been the only source of success for the UMass Debate Union.

At a novice debate tournament at Wake Forest in Winston-Salem, North Carolina the team of Bill Dale and Rosanne Hynes compiled a 5-1 record. They defeated Alabama, Emory, George Washington, North Carolina, and Virginia, losing only to West Georgia.

Their record was good enough for the octafinal elimination round where they beat George Washington by a 3-0 decision. They then hit North Carolina, the eventual tournament winner.

They dropped a 3-0 decision, but still took fourth place in the tournament.

Anyone interested in the Debate Union should see Prof. Matlon in 126 S.C.

Campus play explores HUAC

The play, "Apology For Larry Parks" will play tonight and tomorrow in the South College Studio Theater. The Friday and Saturday curtains are at 8:00 and 10:00 p.m. Admission is $1.00 at the door with the box office opening two hours before each performance.

Don Nigro, a graduate student in theater at the University of Massachusetts, is the author of Apology For Larry Parks, the University Theater's opening production of the 74-75 season.

Under the direction of Professor Gary Stewart - with whom Nigro collaborated on the script - the play deals with the fantasies and nightmares of a "Hollywood star" confronted by a moral and political dilemma for which his life and art has left him unprepared.

The "star" was Larry Parks, of The Jolson Story and its equally successful sequel Jolson Sings Again; the dilemma resulted from a supoena issued Parks by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

The others, including Dalton Trumbo and Ring Lardner Jr., refused to testify on Constitutional grounds and were cited for contempt of Congress, convicted, and sent to prison.

Anti-inflation rally

There will be an Anti-Inflation Rally tonight at 8:00 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

There will be a nation wide Anti-Inflation Demonstration tomorrow. People from the University should meet at Court Square in Springfield at 2:00 p.m.

Dental clinic director appointed

By LANA FISCHER
Staff Reporter

The appointment of Dr. Henry Lubin as new director of the Dental Clinic scheduled to open December 15 was announced by Barry Averill, director of University Health Services at a recent meeting of the Student Health Advisory Board (SHAB).

Averhill said Lubin is one of the leaders of a dentist cooperative for the Martin Luther King Health Center in Bronx, New York City.

Averhill requested that five members of the SHAB work with dental issues in order to "help make adjustments so that the Dental Clinic may work more effectively".

The floor was then turned over to a representative of the DES subcommittee that had worked during the summer to write a pamphlet informing the student body and faculty at UMass about DES, the drug believed to be the cause of vaginal cancer in women who have used it. Five recommendations were made to the Student Health Advisory Board and they are as follows:

1) No research be done on UMass women concerning the effects of DES without their consent.

2) DES or any related drug be administered in the University Health Center only after the user has given her (written) consent, and only after she has been adequately informed about the drug(s). Also, a woman who has the necessary skills will be the counsellor.

3) DES information provided for UMass women students and staff at the University Health Center.

4) Information on the optimum screening procedures be given and be open to suggestions by the SHAB.

5) Whether or not the student health fee will have to be increased and ways of obtaining maximum funds for DES screening.

The meeting then turned to Larry Gendron, President of the Commuter Assembly, who explained to the SHAB a bill concerning exemption from the Health Services fee which he said he had presented earlier to the Student Government Assembly and the Town Meeting.

He proposed that certain people be qualified for exemption from the Health Services fee, those being "people who live 20 miles or more from the University, people who have other services such as Medicaid for those on welfare, and people who live at home and have a private physician already."

He said they would only be exempted if they so choose but "they should not be penalized by paying an extra fee". Instead of paying the regular fee he proposed that the exempted students pay a mimimum fee. In the case of emergencies where they are injured on campus they would be billed for the services, he continued.

Barry Averhill responded to this by saying that there are automatic waivers for students who live 30 miles away from the University which has caused a $60,000 deficit already.

He went on to say that Medicaid won't make a contract with the University Health Services that would transfer Medicaid fees to UHS in order that welfare recipients may receive care from UHS.

Larry Gendron, when asked if he knew how many people would be eligible for exemption, said he did not know.

"We have to figure out specifically how many people qualify" said Gendron.

The SHAB "as a consumer service group" voted to help the Commuter Assembly with the research and help absorb the costs involved.

The board then responded to a letter sent by Cindy McGrath, President of the Student Government Assembly, to the SHAB which requested that the board help establish a physician at the infirmary at all times, a bill passed at the last SGA meeting.

Various reactions such as the passing of the bill being irresponsible because it was not based on facts and that the SGA had not confronted the SHAB first led the board to a debate over the real function of the SHAB and its relation to the SGA.

Benefits, hazards, decisions featured in nuclear seminar

By BOB PAQUETTE
Staff Reporter

Nuclear energy is the topic of a new course to be offered next semester by the Environmental Science Department.

Dr. Richard E. Webb, who has a Ph.D. in nuclear energy, will be teaching the course, which has as its full title: Nuclear Energy: Benefits, Hazards, and the Decision Process Examined.

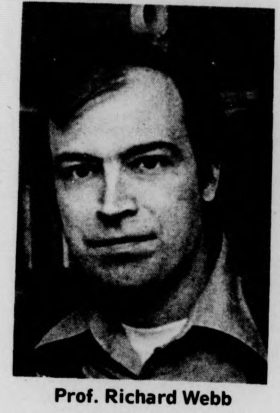
Dr. Webb was formerly a junior engineer in the AEC (Atomic Energy Commission) and was jointly responsible for the Shippingport pressurized water reactor. He was a reactor engineer at the Big Rock Point boiling water reactor, and he had contributed a great deal to public hearings on nuclear safety.

Since Dr. Webb has been challenging the safety of nuclear plants, the Government would not fund his research projects. When he decided to try acquiring the money at different universities, they would often refer him to their nuclear engineering departments. However, since the departments also depended on federal funding, they also turned down his requests.

After checking with about 50 universities across the country, "UMass came through" for Dr. Webb. The university offered him a post at $7,500 a year for both teaching and research, which Dr. Webb accepted.

The course itself will discuss the potential benefits of nuclear energy, with attention given to the hazards and uncertainties of nuclear power.

"The most dangerous factor involved is the explosion potential," said Dr. Webb. "A heavy release of radioactivity could be severe enough to rupture the protective shell around the plant."



Prof. Richard Webb

Dr. Webb said the consequences of such an explosion are "mind-boggling." The explosion from just one of the advance type of breeder reactors could result in the forced abandonment of land totaling about one-half of the land east of the Mississippi River.

Dr. Webb stated there were two elements to consider: the first is how severe would the explosion be, and the second is what would the contamination level be?

As it stands now, Dr. Webb does not consider nuclear power to be safe, and that perhaps nuclear power will not be necessary with proper applications of conservation. But, referring to the government's reaction to his work Dr. Webb said that reason "shouldn't cause them to kick me out".

The course will also cover options to nuclear energy, and the constitutional issue of nuclear power plants. Dr. Webb points out that Congress was never given the power to promote manufacturers through public speaking. As a result, he had introduced a Senate resolution to debate this issue, which Sen. William Fulbright had shown a great deal of interest in.

In addition to the course, Dr. Webb is also working on a book which will hopefully teach the dangers of nuclear reactors to the public by expressing the hazards in layman's terms.

Anyone concerned with the dangers of nuclear power plants, or in the theories of alternate uses of power should consider applying for this new course.

Students must pay SGA book loans

Students who have outstanding book loans due to the Student Government Association as of October 9, 1974, must pay them. Unless his loan is paid back in full or a valid reason for tardiness is forwarded to this office (420 Student Union) by December 1, procedure for Administrative Withdrawal will be commenced.

New professor shocked at nameless students

By FRANCES BROCK
Staff Reporter

"I was shocked that students who came to see me during my office hours did not introduce themselves by name," said the new University professor of Sociology, Dr. Alice Rossi, in a recent interview.

This is Dr. Rossi's first teaching job in a public institution. She feels the large scale of the University is probably the reason for students having the attitude that teachers won't remember their names.

Before coming to the University, Rossi taught at Goucher College in Maryland. She said she felt she had outgrown the school after five years and disagreed with its single-sex policy.

Rossi, who's concentration is Development Sociology and Feminist Studies, is a strong advocate of co-education. She said it was not natural for the sexes to grow up independent of each other.

Rossi has written a number of articles and books, her most famous being, The Feminist Papers. She finds one of the problems that women face is their not preparing themselves in such fields as science and math. Jobs are available to women in these fields, she said, "but the pool to choose from is very small."

She is happy to see a growth in adult education in the country because it has helped to train women in the available fields.

"Graduate schools have yet to learn that lesson," said Rossi. She said graduate schools train students to be in academics and there are not enough academic jobs to go around.

She continued by saying that instead of restricting the number of students that come into a school, the schools should change their training. "Academe doesn't know what is going on in the outside world."

Dr. Rossi feels the Women's movement is greatly affecting women in the working class. She said there were many factors contributing towards more women preparing themselves for jobs, such as the economic crunch.

Many women who hold jobs would prefer not to, she said, but "a job does change a women's perspectives."

According to Rossi, women with jobs enjoy the responsibility of carrying some of the weight. Not having a mother around all the time to cater the children, she feels, is a good influence on developing independence in children.

Rossi said she hasn't really become well acquainted with the campus yet. She said she has barely gotten to know the names of all the people in her department.

"There are thirty-five people in my department," she said, "which is about one-third of the entire faculty at Goucher."

It has been a "major change," she said. But she added that the area "seems to be a desirable place to work and live."

State representative Collins

NUKE vote shows concern

By SANDY CARLIN
Staff Reporter

State Representative James Collins said yesterday in a talk sponsored by the United Christian Foundation the referendum results regarding the dismantelling of a nuclear plant in Montague and the delay of construction for a plant in the area showed that, "The people are concerned about the health and safety effects of nuclear energy."

Collins, a Democrat re-elected to his second term in Hampshire-Hampden district, said the referendum results were an indirect endorsement of the newly formed state commission to investigate nuclear energy of which he had been a prime advocate.

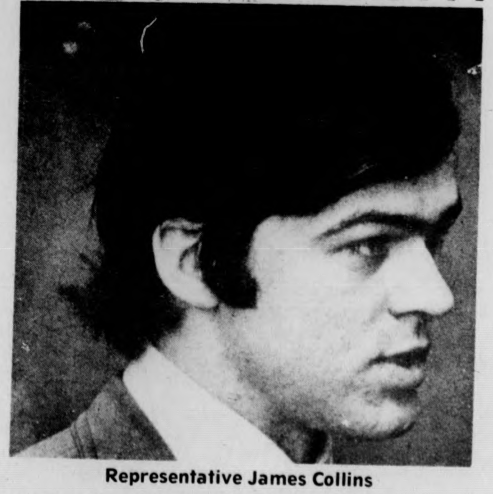
During his talk, Collins outlined three proposals that the commission, of which he hopes to become a member, should investigate.

Collins said the most important part of the commission will be "the assessments of the pros and cons of nuclear fission as a power source to be done in an impartial and objective manner."

Collins stressed the need for a "fair and unstacked commission" in order for the Commission's results to be taken seriously.

Collins also said the state should develop a "capable system of monitoring nuclear plants and nuclear transporters".

Collins said "As of now there is no agency to which accidents concerning nuclear power can be reported. We must develop a policy where the state would show concern, responding to accidents."



Representative James Collins

"The state should have the major input in terms of nuclear energy especially in terms of how much energy a particular state needs," he said.

"A major problem in the commission, however is a lack of funds," cited Collins. "We need more federal help if we are to investigate alternate forms of energy....Right now we are straight-jacketed."

Collins also spoke about the limited power of the state regarding nuclear energy, and the high costs of energy.

Suggests changes in 25th amendment

Ford urges confirmation of Rockefeller

PHOENIX [UPI] — President Ford said yesterday it is time for Congress to "fish or cut bait" on Nelson A. Rockefeller's nomination as vice president, and urged a new law or consitutional amendment to speed up vice presidential confirmations.

In words that were close to anger, Ford said in a prepared speech to a convention of the professional journalistic society Sigma Delta Chi that it took him only 11 days in office as President to nominate Rockefeller for the vice presidency but that three months later Congress still has not said yes or no to his choice.

Ford suggested that Congress have a deadline set in which to confirm a vice president.

Ford arrived here Thursday afternoon from Las Vegas, Nev., where he announced in a speech to the National Association of Realtors a $300 million federal program to aid home buyers. On arrival at Luke Air Force Base, Ford formally placed on active duty the first of more than 700 new F15 jet fighter planes.

Speaking as the Senate Rules Committee continued hearings on the Rockefeller nomination in Washington, Ford said: "I believe the time has come for them to fish or cut bait in this matter."

He said House Speaker Carl Albert and Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield have assured him "they will make every effort to bring the nomination to a floor vote" before the lame duck Congress ends in December.

Ford said this cooperation is what the Consitution demands and the people want.

"I am as convinced as ever that Gov. Rockefeller is the right man for the job and I am anxious to have him as a working partner in the government," Ford said.

"For the future, however, I will propose to the next Congress a reexamination of the 25th Amendment, which has been tested twice in as many years, to see if the provisions of Section 2 dealing with selection and confirming a vice president when the office is vacant cannot be tightened up either by another constitutional amendment or by public law," he said.

"There should be a specific deadline both for the president to nominate and Congress to confirm a vice president," Ford said.

Under the Ford plan, if Congress does not approve one nominee by deadline time, it must automatically begin confirmation hearings on another nominee.

UMW officials meet to vote on contract

Compiled From Wires

WASHINGTON — The 38-member bargaining council of the striking United Mine Workers assembled yesterday to vote on a proposed settlement that UMW President Arnold Miller predicted would be approved by the 120,000-member union.

Initial reaction to the tentative new contract appeared cautious among the rank-and-file members, who went out on strike Tuesday.

The bargaining council must approve the package, which provides substantial wage and benefit increases to soft-coal miners, before it can be sent to the coal fields for the first full membership vote on a coal contract in at least half a century.

The ratification process is expected to take 10 days. Union officials said if all goes according to plan, the nationwide coal strick which has already idled 20,000 workers in the steel and railroad industries might be over before Thanksgiving.

Union mines produce 70 percent of the nation's coal.

The tentative agreement was announced by Miller Wednesday after two months of bargaining. He called it a "very good settlement — one I think I can sell to the membership."

The proposed new three-year contract would provide wage increases of 9 per cent the first year and 3 per cent in each of the next two years. Miners would also get cost-of-living raises in the second and third year. They now earn $42 to $50 a day.

The package also includes a number of new fringe benefits, guaranteeing sick leave for the first time and an increase in pensions from the present $150 a month to $250 at the end of the contract

Miller said yesterday he believes the new contract with coal operators will help save the lives of miners — 39 of whom died during the negotiations.

Under the agreement, reached Wednesday and being submitted to the union membership for ratification, helpers will be provided on each piece of digging machinery in underground mines, and more help will be provided on each peice of digging machinery in underground mines, and more help will be provided for operation of shovels and draglines in surface mining.

The two sides also agreed that a miner who feared for life or limb could leave his work place, and provided for regular inspections of mines.

Fulfilled commitments to burglars

LaRue says he knew payoffs bought silence

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Fred LaRue, who inherited the task of passing cash to the Watergate burglars, testified yesterday he had no doubt the money was meant to keep them quiet so the truth would never come out.

That truth, LaRue told the Watergate cover-up jury in his soft Mississippi drawl, was that the 1972 campaign to re-elect Richard Nixon was responsible for the bugging and was buying the silence of the men who carried it out.

"My understanding was that the payments were to fulfill the commitments that had been made to the defendents," LaRue said when asked by the prosecution what the purpose was.

"My understanding, for feeling, was that if these commitments were not kept, these defendants might disclose certain information they had that would lead back to the Committee to Re-Elect the President."

"During the course of your whole participation in the Watergate affair did you ever find out who made these commitments?" demanded Mitchell lawyer William G. Hundley when it was his turn to cross examine.

"No, I did not," replied LaRue, who earlier testified he had been told of the commitments by bugging conspirator G. Gordon Liddy.

But he said he had discussed the "commitments" to the burglars with Mitchell many times after the June 19, 1972, bugging arrests and that it was Mitchell himself who authorized a final $75,000 payment to conspirator E. Howard Hunt Jr. on March 21, 1973.

That payment was one of the most controversial of the Watergate case. Earlier testimony and White House tapes indicate it had Nixon's blessing and was made after Hunt demanded $135,000 with a threat to reveal "seamy" things he had done for the White House unless the demand was met.

LaRue testified that White House counsel John W. Dean III called him the morning of March 21 to report that Hunt was demanding $75,000 for legal fees and $60,000 for family support.

LaRue said he called Mitchell and told him that Hunt was demanding $75,000 for attorney fees. He quoted Mitchell as replying, "Under those circumstances, I think you ought to pay it."

LaRue said he did not tell Mitchell about the $60,000 Hunt was demanding for family support and immediately made arrangements to deliver the $75,000 to Hunt's attorney that night.

Arafat flies to Cuba; PLO remains at UN

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, pleased by his unprecedented U.N. visit, flew to Cuba yesterday, leaving a nine-man delegation to press Palestine Liberation Organization demands for an all-embracing state of its own.

The burden of the Arab campaign for such a state before the General Assembly fell upon Lebanese President Suleiman Franjieh who asked delegates in a low-key speech to help the Palestinian people "recover fully its national rights."

Shafiq el Hout, the PLO delegation spokesman, said Arafat was pleased by his reception in the world organization and more than satisfied with the security arrangements, the tightest in New York history.

He said between 200 and 300 messages were received by the PLO delegation from all parts of the United States, approving Arafat's Assembly appeal Wednesday for a Palestine as "one democratic state where Christian, Jew and Moslem live in peace, equality and fraternity."

Hout also said a 10-member delegation of Congress conferred here yesterday with PLO representatives, their first official contact with United States other than security arrangements for their visit.

He said the PLO, while disapproving of U.S. policy in the Middle East, sought to work out relations with the United States.

The Congressional visitors included four senators and six representatives, including a woman member, Hout said, but he did not name them.

The U.S. Mission said the members of Congress were in New York for a three-day visit to acquaint themselves with policies of various U.N. delegations, including that of Israel.

Offshore oil pushed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton said yesterday "the keystone to meeting the nation's energy needs" for the next 15 years lies in tripling present U.S. offshore oil and gas exploration.

Morton argued against proposals by state officials that the leasing of untapped "frontier" areas in the Alaskan Gulf and off the Atlantic Coast be delayed until after the states involved complete studies of the potential impact.

By tripling the current rate of 3 million leased acres a year, Morton said, the United States can reduce its reliance on high priced imported oil and protect itself against the possibility of another Arab oil embargo.

Lebanon bombed

By United Press International

Israeli heavy artillery shelled the south Lebanon market town of Nabatiyeh yesterday, killing or wounding more than 15 civilians. Israeli troops crossed into southern Lebanon, killed five Arab guerrillas and blew up three buildings.

The action was in response to Arab guerrilla attacks on northern Israel with Soviet-built rockets Wednesday night and followed Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat's speech at the United Nations.

Dukakis won't appeal

BOSTON[AP] — Gov.-elect Michael S. Dukakis is opposed to appealing the Springfield busing case to the U.S. Supreme Court, a spokesman said yesterday.

Press aide David Sugarman said Dukakis does not favor an appeal because he "feels it would further confuse the situation."

The position taken by Dukakis adds to the likelihood that mandatory busing will continue in Springfield on a long-term basis. Some Springfield School Committee members have urged city officials to file an appeal, but no action has been taken.

Nixon goes home

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — Richard Nixon, shaky and pale, went home from the hospital yesterday and his physician expressed concern that a court-ordered checkup by outside doctors could endanger the former President's recovery.

Shortly after Nixon's departure, Dr. John Lungren, the physician who has overseen his treatment, was asked about the imminent examination by three specialits appointed by Watergate coverup trial Judge John J. Sirica.

Lungren has said Nixon's blood pressure shoots up markedly when exposed to almost any stress.

Prices climb 2.3%

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Spurred by soaring food prices, the Wholesale Price Index spurted upward by 2.3 per cent in October, signaling more higher consumer prices in the weeks ahead.

The Labor Department announced the index for October stood at 170.0, which meant that wholesale prices last month were 70 percent higher than they were in the base year of 1967.

Education

OH program offers alternative

By JERRY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

The Orchard Hill academic program is an attempt to "change the container of knowledge" and provide new means of education, in the eyes of Michael Wolff, Master of the Hill.

wolff calls UMass a "commuter university" because students "have no feeling of being a part of an organization where they are nominal members" and are essentially commuting to classes whether they live on campus or not.

He continued, "You can either live with the divisions or repair them -- we're (Orchard Hill) doing a little of both."

A majority of faculty and students are separated and students feel divorced from education in a system that is too formal, based on divisions, and accepts little student input as to what is taught and how, he explained.

"It's very difficult to get together on a shared task" he explained. Students have "a low expectation" of the University's ability to provide a relevant education, the faculty and administration must deal with the state legislature's rulings, and the local community is often upset with UMass.

Conditions like these tend to divide people into conflicting groups such as the Student Organizing Project, talk of a faculty union, and the local community looking out for its own interests.

Though the Hill wants to serve the students' more immediate interests and needs, "confrontations won't work," according to Wolff.

He continued, "Students need faculty and administration services in finding what they want."

In his view the Hill is a "collaborative prototype" that is trying to help departments "broaden their views".

This is done by using department faculty to teach cross-listed sections of University courses on the Hill and to teach courses dealing with issues and problems rather than strict disciplines.

Allen Davis, Assistant Director of Orchard Hill Academic Affairs, says of these latter, interdisciplinary courses, "We try to draw education from students' own sense of what's important."

Though there aren't many problems in this respect, Davis explained that faculty has always been a problem. At one time the Hill tried to use community people who were qualified but out of work. This failed because they had "much less University identity and in the end it didn't force the University to deal with it (the problem)."

It was also hoped, at one time, that the Hill might hire their own faculty and set up their own dean and dining commons. This too proved unfeasible due to economics, "less student energies as the Vietnam War ended", and ceilings on future growth, Davis said.

Echoing Wolff, he continued, "So we must help the University departments become more relevant. They are supportive but don't think much about Orchard Hill because it's hard to attend to in a normal way."

He explained, "Departments react to activism and we have no power. We just want to be noticed and loved."

The faculty resident, Wolff hopes, will help in the future, and Jim West and Larry Marcus of the Orchard Hill Student Affairs office are looking at possibly having an artist or poet in residence.

Turning back to courses themselves, Davis said, "This is a crucial, transitional year. We're going from an academic program of traditional but socially relevant courses to a program as a whole."

Wolff hopes to "pull things together" into a program of courses with a common perspective. He hopes to develop a Hill identity by coordinating residential aspects with academic ones and eventually bringing the Hill and it's "reservoir" of resources out into the community.

The program will lean towards urban or community affairs and Wolff looks toward the "development of an urban consciousness".

"We hope to have the Hill sufficiently together by the spring to invite people in and promote beneficial interaction between the students and the commonwealth," he said.

Wolff sees eventual ties with and work in the Springfield metropolitan-suburban area.

Residents surveyed about Central life

By JUDY STUDLEY
Staff Reporter

"Well, it isn't Southwest" is the way most residents of Central seem to view their lifestyle.

In a recent telephone survey the residents were asked what they considered to be the good and bad aspects of their area, and what improvements they would suggest.

A freshman from Brett called Central, "nice, traditional and comfortable."

A senior who has live in Central for 3½ years said it was "like a quiet, country place."

Over one-third of those interviewed listed the quietness as one of the better qualities of the area. Only one person, a freshman living in Baker, complained about the noise levels in her dorm.

Some cited the smaller size and the wide-open spaces between the dorms as contributing to the quietness.

Reactions were varied. A senior in Brooks who has lived in Central for four years, said "It's quiet if you want it to be, but there's always a party around, too." On the other hand a senior living in Gorman said Central was "just a place to live."

Many cited "location" as another good feature of Central. Not surprising, though, was that the farther up the hill the dorms were located, the more the people complained about the climb.

All but one person living in Van Meter complained about it. One freshman girl living in Van Meter South jokingly suggested "lowering the hill."

Surprisingly only one-fifth of the people questioned mentioned anything about the friendliness of their fellow residents.

To remedy this situation, a freshman from Van Meter South suggested more dorm activities to "bring more guys and girls together."

A few residents listed apathy and government inefficiency as their primary complaint against Central. While one junior from Gorman said there were many organizations in Central that "try to make it a little more human," he also felt that no central type of government worked.

A senior from Van Meter North said the area doesn't do enough about racism, sexism and campus affairs in general. She mentioned Butterfield as being particularly apathetic toward campus happenings.

By far the largest complaint lodged against Central was the condition of the rooms and dorms. Over half the people questioned said some improvements or outright renovations needed to be made.

A sophomore living in Brooks complained "Wheeler is better kept up than Brooks." Another Brooks resident said the University should concentrate on the upkeep of the dorms.

A junior from Van Meter North, said new furniture at least should be put in. Other complaints involved the size or the color of the rooms. No one from Chadbourn or Greenough, the area's only renovated dorms, complained about the conditions.

There were no complaints about the food served at Franklin Dining Commons, either. But, one girl from Gorman, explained it candidly; "you just naturally assume it's bad."

More parking space was a Chadbourne freshman's suggestion. She also wanted to see more things like stereos available for rental for dorm parties.

Dynamic Sex Machine ignite 'Jazz-Bump' sound

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Our band which electrified the entire campus center complex is off to a good start in the Amherst and surrounding areas, agreed members of the "Dynamic Sex Machine." From September throughout November the musical sounds of the group have played before capacity audiences at the Blue Wall, the Hatch, and the Top of the Campus.

An analytical description of the "Sex Machine's music would be to explain it as a kind of "intricate Jazz-Bump" music. "We gear our music to whatever the audience desires." He continued, "Our musical sounds and our innovated funky beat induces the listeners into an involuntary vibrant participation."

According to Avery Sharpp bassist and manager of the band, "By gearing our music to the audience as well as ourselves, the audience can still get their beat (which is more or less for the dancers), and at the same time the musicians can get a chance to express themselves in different mannerisms of improvisation, which lends an ear to the music critic."

The Dynamic Sex Machine band has been in existence for little over a year, and is comprised of five members, they are Ray (Doc) Moore on tenor sax and the group's choreographer, John Walker on trumpet (John Walker is also the orginator of the "Jazz Jam Sessions" held in the Hatch), Roger Parker, in the rhythm section and also the newest member of the group; (he also has appeared as a male vocalist for singer Natalie Cole), Alvin (A.T.) Terry drummer and Avery Sharpp who compose the nucleus of the "Sex Machine" band.

Avery, expressed that he was getting professional experience by "gigging" with groups such as the Archie Shepp Workshop, the John Walker Quintet and the Voices of New Africa.

When asked what inspired him to pursue a musical interest Shepp replied, "a few years ago, I heard a man called Ron Carter, I like the different intricate sounds which he developed with his electric and upright Bass guitar. I have started playing the upright bass or the acoustical bass within the past few years. The person who inspired me to this aspect was a man by the name of Reggie Workman.

The future plans of the group as Avery expresses, "is our hopes to move to the Boston and New York areas within the next year. The main goal of our group is to have complete communications with each other while learning the many ranges of music and to learn together and communicate the existent of everyday life."

The Dynamic Sex Machine will be appearing this week, Nov. 14-16 at the Steak Out, located in Amherst.

The shoe that works with your body.

This shoe is different from any shoe you've ever worn. It's the EARTH* negative heel shoe. The shoe designed to work in harmony with your entire body.

The heel of the Earth® shoe is actually lower than the toe. This allows you to walk naturally. Like when you walk barefoot in sand or soft earth and your heel sinks down lower than your toes.

The entire sole of the Earth shoe is molded in a very special way. This allows you to walk in a gentle rolling motion. And to walk easily and comfortably on the hard jarring cement of our cities.

But remember, just because a shoe looks like ours doesn't mean it works like ours. So to be sure you're getting the Earth brand shoe, look on the sole for our Earth trademark and U.S. Patent #3305947.

Your body will thank you.

Shoes, sandals, sabots and boots for men and women. From $23.50 to $42.50.

Budget for UMies: Bromery

By DONNA RUSCO
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said at a press conference yesterday that the fiscal 1976 budget actually works for the students.

"I'd like to think the division between service areas just happens to be in the administration — it's all to serve the students," he said.

UMass-Amherst budget request for 1976—pg.7

Asked if he thought the budget for the Amherst campus places too little emphasis on students, Bromery responded: "I'm hearing the students (in the Collegian) — they think there's too many of us administrators telling them what to do. I don't think we want to increase that."

The budget for the Amherst campus requests $1.9 million in additional funding for academic support and academic service programs, but only an additional $98,000 for student services.

It also allocates 39 new staff positions for academic support and academic programs, but only two new positions for student services like financial aid, the Campus Center, the dormitories and the dining commons.

Bromery also said the 78 new non-faculty positions requested in the budget for the Amherst campus does not reflect an administration view that the faculty are overworked and need more assistants.

"We believe the faculty here are working doing the wrong things." They're doing a lot of paperwork the staff should do for them." What we want is to get the faculty back to doing what they do best — teaching."

Referring to the recent complaints from students on mandatory dorm living and meal tickets etc., Bromery said that "every issue the students have raised we (the administration) have been in the process of working on changing."

"But," he said, "our problems are legal and fiscal."

"We're in a state of turmoil but that's what the university is all about. Lots of changes have taken place and will continue to take place. I would encourage this kind of ferment. When people say students are apathetic, this proves it's just not true."

UMass crime up 50%

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

Crime on the UMass campus has jumped 50 per cent this year according to both David Johnston, director of the Department of Public Safety, and Captain Robert Joyce, of the same department.

"Actually, crime has increased 100 per cent, when you figure only 50 per cent of the crimes on campus are being reported, and take into consideration the 50 per cent increase," explained Joyce.

Crimes such as larceny, breaking and entering, and malicious destruction are among those that have increased, according to police records.

Larceny is still the largest crime at UMass. Although the rate of theft looses in state property has dropped, there has been an increase in theft losses of private property, said the Department.

In 1973, losses of personal property totaled $136,484.00. This year, losses total $199,972.00. (All statistics referring to 1974 encompass the months through and including October.)

State property losses have decreased from $29,350.00 to $22,742.00, this year.

But, Joyce stressed the idea that the property recovered by the Department is steadily increasing.

There were seventy more attempts at larceny over $100 this year in comparison to last year's total. Larceny under $100 has also increased. Last year there were 329 attempts as compared to this year's 553.

Primarily due to the bicycle identification program on campus, there has been a drop in the number of bikes stolen, said Joyce. Recovery of stolen bikes has also increased.

"It's easier to recover the bikes because now, through the identification program, we can find out who the owner is. Without the owner's name, we can't do anything," said Joyce.

There were 29 cases of malicious destruction of property in 1973, as compared to 32 in 1974.

On the other hand, while the amount of damaged state property has increased, the amount of damaged private property has decreased. Private property damages have dropped from $43,630.00 to $37,061. while state property damages have risen by $6000.00.

Other crimes that have increased this year, said Joyce, include crimes against the body, (rape, assault and battery, robbery.)

"The increase in rape is there, although it usually doesn't show up in the final statistics. This is because in the final outcome, many rape cases are actually filed as assault and batteries or sex offenses," said Joyce.

An increase in robberies can be seen in the month of October, alone. There have been five robberies this year, to date, four of which occurred during the month of October. Compare this to last year's total of six.

Last year, there were 29 cases of assault and battery reported. Already, in 1974, 26 cases have been reported.

Although the rate of crime is increasing, so are the number of criminal follow-up investigations, UMass Police records show last year's follow up cases to be 1231, compared with 1584 in 1974.

When asked why students crime rates are increasing, Joyce replied: "The students seem to be more careless, especially in the area of larceny. People aren't locking their doors. People aren't taking the necessary precautions."

Contestants win keg for human pyramid

"In heaven there is no beer. That's why we drink it here. And when we are no longer here, all our friends will be drinking all the beer."

And there'll certainly be a lot of beer to drink on the sixteenth floor of Washington Tower when they receive a prize keg for winning the human pyramid contest Wednesday night.

The contest was organized by Rob Gilbert, head of residence of Washington Upper as an effort to bring the six floors closer together through floor competition.

Beginning at 11:00 p.m., about 150 people piled into the lounge on the nineteenth floor and prepared to set up their prospective pyramids. The competition was judged on the basis of creativity, height, amount of people, and time, and each floor was judged in turn by the counselors of Washinnton Middle.

At about 12:15 a.m., the results were announced with the sixteenth floor finishing first, and the eighteenth and twentieth taking the second and third place positions.

The award winning pyramid consisted of 23 people in five, color-coordinated layers, and the pyramid was held for 63 seconds. When the sixteenth floor had established their pyramid, they sang a hearty round of "In heaven there is no beer", an appropriate song considering the prize involved.

Hamlin house not so lucky

To the Editor:

In answer to your letter of Nov. 13 about our Hamlin House protest, I want to say some things about what actually is going on. We here at Hamlin make no attempt at setting ourselves up as the 'wretched of the earth'. As you say, we are very lucky just to be alive. But Marla, in your attempt to focus on large-scale disaster, you're missing the point of our protest. The screwing of people is going on around us everyday, in every direction we look, and I don't think you can measure its importance just by the extent of the screw job. While we're not losing our lives, we are losing a very great chunk of our dignity as people when the administration attempts to manipulate us in any way it wants to.

Haven't you heard some guys say, "What's this Women's Lib shit? Their life is soft compared to ours!" Go to Hell, right? But that's just what you're telling us. Because we're not actually down to our last meal we should shut up. I have to disagree. Oppression is oppression, in whatever disguise it comes. Power is slipping slowly away from people everywhere, and it has to be stopped.

Incidents like Hamlin are an opportunity to literally grasp that power before it goes completely. And these small scale situations can actually be fruitful. For while there is relatively little you can do about starving people at this moment, your single voice can help us at Hamlin immensely.

A victory here for human rights would be a symbolic victory for people everywhere. So Marla, I'm asking you if you could reconsider and maybe help us on the road we've chosen. When your little problems are worked out, maybe we'll both have some energy left to tackle bigger problems. Meanwhile I'm,

Juvenile homes seek volunteers

To the Editor:

I represent a number of group homes housing juvenile offenders [primarily male]. These homes serve as alternatives to the harsh and criminally indoctrinating environment of detention centers. Alternative programs such as ours, however, often suffer from budgetary inadequacies that cause educational and recreational activities to be scarce. It is with this scarcity in mind that I write seeking student volunteers.

We are looking for students who have the time and skills to offer competent presentations in dance, music, T.M., crafts, drug education, fashion, etc. Because of our programs' "big hearts and low budgets" operation, we can offer students only that on-the-job experience and challenge that can mean an edge for the graduating senior in the limited job market. However, academic credit might be arranged by the individual volunteer, depending on the nature of the educational presentation and the frequency of its offering, etc. The experience might also serve as the practicum half of a course, or the subject matter of an independent study project.

If you are interested in offering your time, talent, or suggestions for this semester or next, please call Steve at 253-7876.

You can't fool us

To the Editor:

What's the difference between a UMie and a Puppet? This is a trick question so be careful. Give up? The answers are nothing and everything. The trick is in who the question is put to. The administration seems to feel that the residents of Hamlin are no more than puppets and therefore it doesn't matter how they move them around next semester. They expressed this feeling in the form of a complicated system, totally different from an earlier one which pleased just about everyone, which they recently gave to the Hamlinites. The joke is that they expected us to buy it.

Everyone knows that one should never tell a lie to a Screaming Yellow Zonker, let alone a UMie, and for this reason we Hamlinites are growing concerned over the recent reversal of the Top Brass. There are among the ranks of the Hamlinites, several veterans of the "Hills Incident", a puppet show put on by the Administration a couple of years ago. Unfortunately, the show came to an early end when the auditorium where it was playing closed down, preventing the showing of the second act. Some of us Hamlinites may have been puppets in the past, but now we're all Pinnochios and the Administration has an awfully big nose. As Banacek put it only too well, "There's an old Polish proverb: Fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice, shame on me." And of course lightning never strikes in the same place twice, but if I were living in Butterfield, I'd invest in some lightning rods.

Overtime unpaid

To the Editor:

I had the unfortunate experience of working for the Campus Center from June 2, 1971 through Oct. 1972. When I showed up for my job Don Witkoski put me up for the night in the hotel and then into the dorms. My job was writing time cards. I was instructed by Don Witkoski to not write time for over 40 hours, but to keep it on file and add it to other weeks which were not 40 hours. The actual cards I wrote are more than likely in the Amherst town dump.

My employment records state I started work June 20, 1971. There were three weeks I was not paid, but instead at the end of the summer Witkoski gave me a three week vacation. From Sept. 1971 until Oct. 1971 I had the position of tel. op. at the hotel. I did the same work as the male desk clerk but was paid less. A different title does not always mean different work.

Unions not bad

To the Editor:

I felt when I read your article that it gave a pathetically superficial analysis of unions and that its reasoning was destructively circular.

Our society is supposed to be based on democratic involvement, not on hidden bureaucracy. This implies that we have control over our lives, that we are not benevolently administered. Your article implies an indorsement of bureaucracy. Your cherished freedom from hassle is exactly the kind of despotism that has made American labor unions what they are today; blossoming ultimately in Richard Nixon's silent majority. If our education is not implicitly and explicitly toward a democratic society and not the myopic vision of your 'freedom from hassles,' we will cease to be a democracy even in name. Your cynicism is well founded about unions and government in general, but only under the kind of bureaucratic system you directly and indirectly endorse and the non-involvement you prize.

Fishman's folly

To the Editor:

I was disappointed by Reid Fishman's column on the World Food Conference. It was difficult to tell if he was sincerely concerned with the problem or was merely venting his anti-Catholic prejudices. Assuming the former, I would offer a different analysis. The world can feed its present population, and perhaps could cater for a population twice this size. However, the politics of distribution allow some to be fed sumptuously while others starve, even though there is enough to go around. A peasant in the third world wants a large family to help him work the land, or to bring an extra income to help him in old age. He is more adversely affected by political structures that prevent him getting fertilizers, or which do not give him a fair price for his crop, than by the size of his family. The attitude in the West of "we know what's good for you; stop breeding, so we can continue to enjoy our privileged status" has, not surprisingly, failed to impress most third world leaders, who would rather have food than contraceptives. I hope Mr. Fishman is as aware of his own privileged position as he thinks he is of the problems of the third world.

If one creates the debt, one must pay the bill

It used to be that when parents sent their children away to college, it was assumed that they would be under the close supervision of adults at the institution. Until not too long ago, Mom and Dad were assured of the fact that when they sent their boys and girls off to school, they would be guided and nurtured by adult figures in charge. The parents could take solace in the fact that their siblings were being watched out for--after all, they were kids just out of high school.

All that of course was before eighteen year olds were granted the right to vote, buy liquor, and finally, do anything any other adult could do. For some time now, citizens between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one have been legal adults. As one might expect, however, older adults have continued to attempt to take advantage of young people. Indeed, just because the law has been changed, doesn't mean all the little rules and holdovers from the past have been corrected.

Here at the University, for instance, not allowing adults between eighteen and twenty-one to live off campus if they choose, is an example. Some years ago, in preparation for expected increased enrollment, the University constructed a number of new dormitories in the southwest area. Needless to say, enrollment did increase drastically, and therefore the expansion was made to look like a very worthwhile endeavor. A development understandably not taken into consideration, however, was the new age of majority. As of January, it was officially put into law that persons over eighteen had all the rights and privileges of those over twenty-one.

The legality, therefore, of the University's policy of allowing persons over twenty-one to live where they wish, and forcing eighteen year olds to live on campus, must be questioned.

Granted, once the rule is lifted, a number of students, for economic or other reasons, would opt for off-campus living. Even though on-campus living would be both more convenient, some would still rather escape dormitories.

In turn, this would affect the institution's overall revenue from room and board fees--but very little. Most students would realize the advantages of on-campus life, not to mention the fact that in very many cases it is cheaper.

An advantage of the rule change would be that the administration would have to see to it that living conditions were improved, since they would be competing with the outside.

To be sure, this, and also the fact that some money would be lost could have much to do with the administration's stubborn reluctance to change the rule. But it must be remembered that persons under twenty-one can no longer be discriminated against. It is the duty of the institution to come to grips with the times.

Fights worth losing

"The easy fights aren't worth it because they don't amount to much. The only fights worth fighting are the ones you're going to lose, because somebody has to fight them and lose and lose and lose until someday somebody wins. And in order for that somebody to win an important major fight 100 years hence, a lot of other people have to be willing for the sheer fun and joy of it to go right ahead and fight knowing that in their time they're going to lose. You mustn't feel like a martyr. You've got to enjoy it for its own sake. There's a wonderful lovely line from an Irish poem - "They all went forth to battle and they always fell." I don't expect to win, but I do expect my side to win ultimately. In other words I have faith. I have faith despite the imperfections of the human race, that a better society, a better world, a kindlier world can come into being."

-Nat Hentoff, the Village Voice

The sign on the grass outside the Student Union reads "If allowed to survive, this grass will produce enough oxygen for two students to breathe for one semester." The sign didn't last a day before it was knocked down. Someday, that battle will be won.

A black mother in Brooklyn walks into Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm's district office on the verge of tears and showing signs of extreme strain. The local welfare office has given her the runaround, telling her on Thursday that she had to have an appointment to see a case worker, on Friday that they had no record of the appointment she had made Thursday, and to come back the next day. On Saturday she was informed that no new cases are handled on Saturdays. And her children are hungry and she still has no money to buy food to feed them. And someday that battle, too, will be won.

Students on this campus have asked in just about every conceivable way to be recognized as the adults that they are under the law, but an administration that is either grotesquely stupid, inconsiderate, or conceitedly convinced that this little colony of theirs is the ultimate educational experience consistently stands in their way. The strategy is to allow the frustration of the students to dissipate into inactivity so that it can be ignored. And it's a strategy that works. But someday, that battle will be won.

A member of this newspaper's staff takes the Collegian to student court because he has lost his job, the victim of a somewhat crazed, headlong dive into runaway moneyism that permeates some of the upper levels of the Collegian heirarchy. But the court either can't or won't see the real issue of the case, and the student loses, and wonders if any ideal anywhere can survive these days. But the loss has some significance, if only that it brings us one loss closer to that day. Someday.

Nat Hentoff's quote at the beginning of this column summarizes the essence of the fight that the whole world is involved in. It is a fight that seems to be at everyone's doorstep now more than it ever has been before. It is the fight to run the world, from from the welfare office to the Collegian office, in a way that is first and always humanistic.

It is a fight that will take a long time to win. It is a fight that we will have to "lose and lose and lose" to win. It is a fight that will see a lot of dedicated people get disgusted or mislead and fall by the wayside. Witness the mislead fools who cheered for Yasser Arafat in the United Nations the other day. His cause may be just, but a murderer is a murderer and the oppressed who cheer him will find not only that his tactics reap what they sow, but that they were never needed in the first place. You see, one of the greatest beauties of the fight is that there will be nothing to regret when it is won.

And it will be won. Someday. Because justice is strong. And the people who deserve justice are strong because they outnumber everyone else in this world, although sometimes it doesn't seem that way. And to quote the theme of the 1973 Congressional Black Caucus Dinner "The strong keep a comin'."

Unstoppably.

Military madness in Columbia

A few years ago in Columbus, Georgia, a small crowd gathered each morning outside a small, brick building on Fort Benning. Around nine o'clock, three or four green Military Police cars pulled up along the curb, and the crowd came to life. The reporters scrambled to the door of the third vehicle, and the television cameras began to roll. The back door swung open, and out stepped a tall, thin, M.P. Right after him came a short, baby faced, Lieutenant. The reporters would let fly with questions, and the crowd buzzed with chatter. More M.P.'s gathered around to clear the way to the front door of the building. Lost among the taller guards, but his head held arrogantly erect, William Calley entered the military court. The big green door slammed shut behind him, and the crowd slowly dispersed. The cameramen covered their machines against the threatening sky, and headed across the street to the waiting coffee truck. They all had gotten a quick look at him, this Calley. Each morning, around nine o'clock, down in Georgia.

Columbus is an Army town. It owes most of its jobs, people, and business, to Uncle Sam. Now there's nothing really wrong with that, except that it makes a town different. For instance, Columbus has four Victory Drives, a dozen joints named Victory Bar, or Victory Cleaners, or Victory Theater. The town remembers Patton with bowed head, and there are, of course, several Patton Streets, Bridges, Parks, etc. In every parade, and there are very very many, no matter what the occasion, Army tanks, jeeps, and platoons of pissed off GI's, roll through the streets to delight all who watch. The town appreciates its military, in the only ways it knows how. There's trouble sometimes of course, like if that platoon decides to go through the bars, after the parade, like Sherman marched to the sea. But for the most part, relations with the civilians are good, especially around payday. There are probably no bigger spenders on the earth than the military around pay time. And they are appreciated for it. And the Army appreciates the appreciation. And in this atmosphere of mutual admiration, a Lieutenant is charged with murdering civilians in My Lai, Vietnam, while fighting a war. The role that the people of Columbus had to play was obvious. Calley was in trouble, at Fort Benning, in an Army town.

And so, overnight, Columbus was famous. Press teams from the networks moved in, along with correspondents from newspapers and magazines. The town was flooded with tourist types, wanting to get a look at the little Lieutenant. Business was booming, motels full, and restaurant prices up. Calley had become the folk hero of Columbus. Songs were written, "Free Calley" marches were organized, and one of the stores was making Calley tee-shirts. There hadn't been this much going on since George Patton led his tanks down Victory Drive on his way to invade Phoenix City, Alabama! (True story, by the way!)

Most of the people in Columbus and in the Military thought that Calley had gotten a raw deal, myself included. Of course you could say that the facts weren't all known then. The trial was just beginning. But that's really no excuse, enough was known to form some kind of opinion. Nevertheless, a lot of people were pulling for Calley. Then something happened. I began to listen to people who were asking the right questions. What did you do over there? Kill civilians? Know anyone who did? Is Calley the rule, or the exception? If you justify his actions, aren't you saying that it is typical behavior? If he's found innocent, aren't you guilty?

There were a lot of GI's in Vietnam in those days, most of them wondering what the hell they were doing there, and wanting nothing more than to get back home in one piece. And most of them, and I mean 99 per cent of them, didn't line up a bunch of civilians and shoot them down, orders or no orders. Calley is part of that other 1 per cent. And it's important to remember that. While Vietnam was and is a nightmare, all GI's are not William Calleys. In reality, Calley was a scapegoat for the military in general. He was not a victim. He was convicted, and rightly so. And because he was the only one caught, does not make it just for him to be let free. But someone thought so. Calley is out on parole, pending an appeal.

I haven't been back to Columbus, but I imagine the people are pretty happy with the way things turned out. And if Calley stays in Columbus, I'm sure he'll have no problem making a life for himself. They still feel he was given a raw deal. And that's one of the sad things about all. Those people are good people. I like them. But Calley has put one over on them, and now they're victims too. But like I said, Columbus is an Army town.

Dorm rule held to be unconstitutional

The trustees' responsibilities to the financial status of the University has been cited in recent weeks as the most important reason to keep the mandatory dormitory regulation by both Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage.

There has been fear by the administration and the Board of Trustees that if the regulation is lifted, students will choose not to live in the dorms; and the debt problem would be even greater without the dorm rent income.

"We expect prompt action by the University in rescinding the existing unconstitutional restriction placed on the students," Dorsch said in the letter to Searson.

In an interview with the Collegian, Dorsch said he expects a response from Searson within a week or two. "When he (Searson) reads the law, I think he'll agree with me that the University has an untenable position."

Dorsch described the University's dorm requirement as "indefensible."

From research conducted with Peter d'Errico of the UMass Legal Studies Program, Dorsch has determined only one valid defense the University can raise in a dormitory residency case.

"The University may prevail if it can demonstrate that the dormitories serve a valid educational purpose," he told Searson.

But Dorsch noted in hearings on Residential Life held on campus last week, administrators "clearly disclaimed any position that the dormitories serve a valid educational purpose.

"Hence," he said, "the University can raise no legitimate defense to violating my clients' constitutional rights, or the rights of all other persons similarly situated."

In urging Searson to act promptly, Dorsch told him in the letter, "I believe that any delay in rescinding the policy would be inappropriate and frivolous, substantially increasing my clients' damages."

Dorsch conceded in the interview, however, he may not be the attorney for the students if the case goes to court. Gage has ruled the LSO cannot litigate against the University because of the ethics involved in taking legal action against the school which funds them.

"The LSO Board and the SGA (Student Government Association) will determine what to do," should court action be necessary Dorsch said. However, he said he is "confident" no legal action will be taken.

The issue of infringement of students' rights was discussed during campus-wide hearings on student housing sponsored by the Student Organizing Project last week.

Speaking at a hearing on November 5, Bromery said he agreed with a student in the audience who said, "I think it's infringing on my rights to be required to be living in a dormitory."

Bromery said at that meeting, the compulsory regulation is expected to "go by the wayside" in time, but there would still be the major problem of residence hall debts.

Coin raffle held Monday

The UMass Coin Club conducted its first auction and raffle Monday night in the Colonial Lounge. The silver dollar winners were: Doren Fredrickson, Bill Yamartino, Robert Amrein, Mark Madden, Mark Charette (2), Casey Eagle, Donna Kalinowski, Ralph Tanner, B. Labao, G. Hobart, James Madaio, A. Chajes, Paul Neville, and Eric Schwartz.

LSO's Fisher likes letter

By KATHY SHEEHAN
Staff Reporter

The formal demand by William M. Dorsch of the UMass Legal Services Office that the University abolish the mandatory dormitory residence requirement is "in line with demands made at the Student Government Association Town Meeting last Monday night," according to John Fisher, staff member of the Student Organizing Project (SOP).

Referring to a letter by Dorsch to William Searson, UMass Trustees' general counsel sent Tuesday, Fisher said Dorsch's legal challenge "ties in" with decisions made at the town meeting on ending mandatory dorm residence, and establishing rent control in the Amherst area.

Both Dorsch and Fisher agree students at UMass are going about the issue in a reasonable way.

Fisher said in an interview that there are groups on campus that have been working on the problem of rent control all semester in anticipation of the removal of the dorm residence requirement.

The Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs, the Tenants Association, the Student Center of Educational Research and the SOP have been taking initial steps to get rent control in the town through legislation, he said.

"The SOP supports what they're doing", Fisher said, "and the groups need help."

"The end to mandatory dorm residence is wholly dependent on getting a system of rent control in Amherst," Larry Gendron of the Commuter Assembly said at that meeting.

Fisher says the University is treating students like "backward children" in not acknowledging that students are considering the accompanying problems of skyrocketing rent prices which may be effected by enterprising apartment owners in the Amherst area.

Concerning Dorsch's demand, Fisher said "a law suit is implicit in the letter."

However, Dorsch said the evidence is so clear in the students' favor that legal action is almost inconceivable. Dorsch expects the Board of Trustees to rescind the mandatory dormitory residence requirement promptly without any court action.

Further cut planned for next year's index

By LARRY CONVOY
Staff Correspondent

More than 10,000 copies of the 1973-74 UMass yearbook have been distributed, according to Editor-in-Chief Alan Chapman.

Seven thousand copies of the INDEX were handed out during a two week period on campus and 3000 more were mailed to the graduates of the class of '74.

According to Chapman, there are still about 1000 books available to students from the total 11,500 yearbooks printed. This is a decline from the 13,000 books printed last year and a further cut is planned for the next edition.

The major reason for the cut is economics. The INDEX receives approximately $2.94 from each undergraduate. The Student Senate has reduced this figure to $2.60 per student for the 1975 edition, Chapman says.

Pointing out that "this year's yearbook was the best ever at UMass", Chapman said he believes it can compete with any college yearbook.

"We were organized much better this year," Chapman said. "Every page had a purpose in the book".

According to other INDEX staffers the reaction from students was generally positive. Much of the praise was directed at the yearbook's use of color in both photography and layout.

The negative reaction was primarily centered around a lack of depth in certain areas, such as sports and Greek life."

The pros and cons of this year's edition will be considered by new Editor-in-Chief John Neister as he begins work on the 1975 edition.

As the staff considers submitting the yearbook to the Associated Collegiate Press for a rating, Chapman said he believes a good rating would greatly aid the image of the INDEX on campus.

Students wishing a copy of the yearbook can still pick one up at the INDEX office on the second floor of the student union.

Adminstration charged with CC Board threat

By JIM PAULIN

The administration has implied that if the SGA pushes too hard toward the establishment of a Residential Life Governing board, they might reconsider the status of the Campus Center Board of Governors according to an SGA member. Student senator Matt Burns declined to name the administrators at the recent SGA town meeting.

"I have been working on the Residential Life Governing Board for most of the semester and it's been implied to me that if I and the student government pushed too hard on Residential Life, then the University might reconsider the Campus Center Board of Governors based on the fact that they never went through the present formal governance system."

He said student governing boards must be established according to procedures determined by the Wellman document. The Wellman document, created in May 1972 by the Board of Trustees, states that students are to have prime responsibility for facilities which they pay for. The Campus Center Governing board was created prior to 1972.

The Campus Center Board of Governors did not report any threats concerning the drive towards the creation of a Residential Life Board, but they did say that the legality of their organization has been called into question by the administration.

Howie Levin, Vice Chairperson of the Campus Center Board of Governors, said that attacking the C.C. Board of Governors for not being established in accordance with the Wellman document would be a "shallow excuse", since their constitution has already been approved by the Board of Trustees.

However, he said they have been challenged by the administration: "Gage has suggested that he felt our constitution to be illegal on totally false grounds," Levin said.

He went on to say the reason for Gage's accusation was that he thought the board was totally independent, which is not true because the chancellor has the power to veto all actions of board within 15 days.

Hampshire opens athletic center

By E. Patrick McQuaid
Collegian Five College Coordinator

A 1.8 million dollar dream came true at Hampshire Monday in the words of college president, Charles Longsworth when the long awaited for Robert Crown Center opened its doors to the public.

The new building is Hampshire college's recreational and athletic program center with a philosophy emphasizing coeducational and voluntary participation in sports.

"Participation is the answer here," stated Jay Evans, director of recreation and athletics, "not spectating. I defy you to find more than two dozen chairs or even bleachers in here. You can't because it was done by design."

The Crown building is located in the center of the campus and connected to the Harold F. Johnson library by a glassed in pedestrian bridge.

The aim of the program is to present the students with free and loosely structured physical recreation. Longsworth claims that the facilities are intended to maintain "a joyful attitude towards recreation." The center, along with its 25 yard swimming pool offers a climbing wall for instruction in basic mountaineering, a basketball court, a volleyball court, and a badminton area. Game rooms, a sauna, and exercise rooms combine with office space provided for mainly outside activities.

Student threatens dorm occupants

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

A UMass student threatened occupants of Moore and JQA dorms yesterday with a rifle from a campus pinball machine, according to Captain Robert Joyce of the UMass Department of Public Safety.

Police received a call from Moore's head of residence, at 2 a.m., who reported seeing two subjects armed with what appeared to be shotguns underneath their coats.

A search for the weapons proved negative, said UMass Police.

At 2:22 a.m. police received a call from JQA's head of residence, who said a subject fitting the description of one of the subjects was threatening occupants on the seventeenth floor of JQA.

Upon arrival, officers saw the suspect with "some type of rifle under his coat, with his hands apparently where the stock and trigger would be", said Joyce.

Police disarmed him and found the rifle had been removed from a pinball machine in the Campus Center.

"The thing is, this guy could have gotten shot. The rifle was very similar in appearance to an actual one," said Joyce.

David W. Mark, of Newton, was charged with breach of peace and malicious destruction.

He was arraigned in Hampshire District Court in Northampton Thursday.

New support program makes funds available

By PAUL CONNELLY
Staff Correspondent

A dorm can purchase dorm items like pool tables, televisions, mimeograph machines, calculators, tools for a woodshop, equipment for a weightroom and funding of social and cultural events under a new fund.

The Program Support Fund was initiated to better living conditions in residence halls. There are some restrictions imposed on the spending of the PSF as regards alcohol, contributions, travel, dues, parties, meals, and gifts.

According to William Brown, business manager of Southwest, the money for the Fund is gotten through the RSO office from vending machine revenue. Each dorm is allotted an initial $200 annually, with the opportunity of petitioning for an additional $200.

Center looks for 3rd world courses

The Malcolm X Cultural Center is looking for courses dealing with the Third World.

The Courses are to be submitted in course proposal form. Please list prior teaching qualifications. All proposals are to be submitted by November 22 to the Black Caucus of the Malcolm X Cultural Center located beneath Berkshire Dining Commons. Phone is 545-2819.

Program offers mime workshop

The Arts and Humanities Program of the Transdisciplinary Cluster, School of Education, will offer a workshop tomorrow. Nancy Casey (former actress, choreographer and dancer with The Looking Glass Theater in Providence; former Artist-in-Residence for the Rhode Island Council on the Arts; former member of the American Ballet Theater and now with the Planning For Play Project) will offer the workshop in mime from 9:00 - 3:00 in Mark's Meadow gym; fee $2.00.

Art series presents Verdi opera

One of the most universally popular of all grand operas written by Giuseppe Verdi, "La Traviata," will be brought to UMass on Sunday at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, the second event on the Arts Council Celebrity Series.

Produced under the personal supervision of Boris Goldovsky -- known to millions for his intermission commentaries on the weekly broadcasts from the Metropolitan Opera in New York -- the performance will be in English. The opera has been fully staged for the tour by Goldovsky with exciting new sets and costumes and with full orchestra, cast and technical staff.

The Goldovsky Grand Opera Theater is the national touring unit of the former New England Opera Theater, now called the Goldovsky Opera Institute, founded in Boston in 1946, and widely acclaimed as a "refreshing new breath of life in the operatic world" for its pioneering of major new techniques in operatic production.

Tickets are now on sale at the UMass Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall. General admission is $4, UMass students, $2. Special group rates may be arranged.

Phonothon underway here

The Amherst Phonothon of the UMass Alumni Office will be conducted through Nov. 21, with alumni volunteers calling other alumni from Hampshire, Franklin, and Berkshire Counties.

Volunteers will call from Memorial Hall to ask for pledges to this year's Annual Alumni Fund. Last year's pledges to the Amherst Phonothon totaled $15,500.

William Mellen of the Class of 1949 is chairman of this year's drive, and calls will be made to alumni from 1909 to 1973. Funds raised go toward scholarships, special academic programs, the library, fine arts acquisitions, and other special campus needs.

Chris Rhodes Band plays at Hampshire

The Chris Rhodes Band, one of New England's newest bands is playing tonight at Hampshire College.

June Millington, the former lead singer with the group "Fanny" will also take part in this Five College Concert.

The Concert starts at 8:00 and admission is $1.50. For further information call 542-5708.

Fast to share hunger planned for Thursday

A nationwide "Fast for a World Harvest" next Thursday will invite well-fed Americans to share the hunger that is the daily experience of one billion of the earth's people. The money saved by going hungry for one day will help small farmers in Asia, Africa and Latin America grow more food in areas where most of these people live.

Kurt Waldheim, Secretary General of the United Nations, said: " 'Fast for a World Harvest', sponsored by Oxfam-America, is a welcome example of how individuals have a chance to join together in creating greater awareness of alarming global food shortages and in sharing their resources with those in greater need."

"Fast for a World Harvest" will be nationally observed by colleges, churches, high schools, community organizations and individuals who feel that a more equitable distribution of the world's resources is needed. Contributions will be used for development programs such as water storage, better seeds, and improved livestock management.

The Fast will also direct national attention to the critical global food shortage. Drought, floods, and fertilizer shortages have reduced farm yields in many parts of the world. Increasing population in the developing countries and dietary changes in affluent nations are compounding food shortages.

The average American now requires almost a ton of grain a year (much of it to feed animals for meat), while the average Bengali is lucky to receive the equivalent of a pound of grain a day. Implications for the future are particularly grim for children, whose growth and mental development are seriously and permanently impaired by malnutrition.

"Fast for a World Harvest" is co-sponsored by Oxfam-America and Project Relief. Individual sponsors include William F. Buckley, Jr., Lester Brown, Rep. Robert F. Drinan, Hubert H. Humphrey, Mike Mansfield, Gloria Steinam, and Margaret Mead. More information about the "Fast for a World Harvest" and about the on-going programs of Oxfam-America may be obtained by writing: Oxfam-America, 302 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass. 02116, or by calling (617) 247-3304.

Kenneth Mosakowski of Amherst, a local sponsor of the Fast, has scheduled a meeting for area citizens who wish to participate in the fund-raising effort. The meeting will take place Monday at 4 p.m. at the Eagles Hall, 24 Pleasant St., Northampton.

Agency offers overseas positions

The Friends of World Teaching (FWT), a placement agency for overseas teaching positions, has notified UMass that over one thousand English oriented schools and colleges in over 120 foreign countries are offering teaching and administrative opportunities to American educators.

According to FWT, knowledge of a foreign language is not required and some schools do not require previous teaching experience or certification.

Positions are open in many fields from pre-school teaching to university administration.

Anyone interested should contact: Friends of World Teaching, P.O. Box 1049, San Diego, CA 92112. Those applying must indicate three countries where they would consider a position and enclose $5 to cover printing costs. There is no further charge for their services.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Even a superficial effort to comprehend the relationship between events on the celestial scene and events here on earth yields knowledge that is indispensable to this week's success. A willingness to cooperate on the one hand and the patience, peace of mind, and self-assurance necessary to allow each individual his own idiosyncracies on the other: these — though they appear at first to be contradictory attitudes leading to conflicting modes of behavior — are the keys to career advancement, social recognition, and a productive involvement in all leisure-time activities. This is an excellent week for eating your cake and having it too, for there is a little to stand in the way of giving and getting simultaneously — which is not the same at all (if you're careful!) as losing with the right hand what you gain with the left.

Know your own talents, employ them with timing and finesse, and all should end well this week. Ignore signs of fatigue, physical or emotional, at your own risk. During the early part of the week, concentrate largely upon your own ends; later on, you would do well to be generous, even expansive, with your time as you begin to take an interest in and to help others gain — or regain — goals of their own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — Any plans initiated by associates can be trusted to be well-laid. Even so, you would do well to investigate possibilities on your own. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — There is no need to be alarmed if you are not in the driver's seat this week. You can manage to reach your goals if you are careful to follow directions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — So long as co-workers exhibit mutual respect, there is no need for you to interfere in their differences. Live up to a reputation for being easy-going. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Take care that you don't become overly eager to push your career into a higher gear. Take your time, especially early in the week.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Be encouraging to those who would do things in their own time and way. You can expect others to make fewer demands on you toward week's end. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — A week for living and letting live. Don't be disheartened should a loved one not take advantage of a situation leading to gain. Build another's confidence.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 5) — Most important to success this week is a direct approach. Know what you want — and make an effort to communicate your desire to others. (March 6-March 20) — Don't llow trivia to take over, especially early in the week when you should be making workable plans. Disregard another's efforts to change your mind.

ARIES (March 21-April 4) — You might do well to consider reorganizing your life on two levels — where your career is concerned and socially. Timing is important now. (April 5-April 19) — Take notice of the individual as well as of the group; otherwise, you may find yourself pleasing on the whole but out of luck when it comes to advancement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 5) — Determine your goal for the week as early as you can. Care is vital to the successful conclusion of operations being tried for the first time. (May 6-May 20) — Exchange ideas with others in your field as often as necessary early in the week. Later on, you would do well to try to accomplish goals on your own.

GEMINI (May 21-June 6) — With many talents to choose from, it should not be difficult for you to establish a toe-hold on the ladder of new successes this week. Be self-sufficient. (June 7-June 20) — Present projects will not be able to stave off the attack which may come if you are not able to persuade others of their usefulness.

CANCER (June 21-July 7) — If you are tactful, this week could well be the one which sees you on your way to longed-for goals by unexpected advantages where your career is concerned. (July 8-July 22) — You can be responsible for the raising of another's opinion of himself. Ennoble yourself and your career at the same time. Move quickly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 7) — It is your attitude which makes or breaks you this week. Approach any new project with a willingness to cooperate completely with the knowledgeable few. (Aug. 8-Aug. 22) — Consider first of all the welfare of the individual. Groups concerns come in for their share of attention — but only after each member is seen to.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — You would do well to let the group fend for itself — at least for the first few days of the week. There is much to be said for striking out on your own. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Short-term goals suit the tenor of the week better than long-term ones. Don't allow yourself the luxury of forgetting what you're about.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Work at home must supplement work on the employment scene if you are to know the high degree of success the week holds out to you. Divide time wisely. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Take care that doing too much at the beginning of the week does not leave you too exhausted to do enough at the end of it. Guard your energy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — Should you be engaged in rearranging your life on any level, take care that you don't discard the basics. Keep a substantial backlog of essentials. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — You should be able to increase your earning potential considerably if you are careful not to put all your eggs in one basket. Be generous.

Letter to the sports editor

To the Editor:

*This letter is in regard to the article in Tuesday's "Collegian" concerning some of the views of the new members of the Athletic Council.*

As a new and concerned member of the council I feel that it is necessary to explain the statements that I am credited with in the article. Supposedly, I am in the dark because, "I know nothing about the Council, really." Well, I was in the dark, the dark anybody would be in, if they were awakened by a phone call from a member of the Collegian wishing to interview her-him at 12:30 on a Sunday night. The quote as it appears in the article is accurate to a point; however, it should be elaborated. I am aware of the intended purpose of the Council, having met with Art Elkin and discussed the purpose, philosophy and goals of the Council for the coming year. But due to the fact that as of yet I have not participated in any council meetings, I felt justified in my statement. Maybe I should have said that I didn't know enough about the Council, for I am making a concerted effort to become more knowledgeable about the operation of the esteemed Council.

Also, I want to be sure that my last statement concerning an investigation into the distribution of funds is not misunderstood by anyone. The reason I feel that an investigation may be necessary is that there is the possibility that some teams-clubs may have been allocated funds beyond their needs. These funds [if any] could then be used to either start or help support some other team-club. This university has an obligation to serve too many students to be distributing funds merely to uphold traditions.

Being a member of an insufficiently funded club, I am aware of how frustrating it is to exert your maximum effort and still be prevented from attaining your goal, because of a lack of money to buy the proper equipment, etc.

Hopefully the Council can eradicate some of these problems this year.

College preview: Sooners to romp?

Notre Dame, rated fourth, comes off a week's rest to tackle Pitt. The Irish are favored by 20 over the Panthers, who have an upset incentive. Victory over Notre Dame would put Pitt in the Liberty Bowl.

Sixth rated Nebraska is 29 points over Kansas State, seventh listed Southern California is 22 over Washington, eighth place Florida, a four point choice, could have trouble with Kentucky, ninth ranked Texas A & M is 15 over Rice and 10th listed Penn State, still smarting over its loss to North Carolina State, will pick on Ohio University for its comback.

Fambrough's Kansas Club, of which fairly great things were expected before the season, has had a disappointing campaign, the slate reading 4-5 and including a 56-0 disaster with Nebraska. The Jayhawks are coming off a bitter 17-16 defeat last week at the hands of Colorado, a team which had been demolished by Oklahoma, 49-14.

The Sooners, whose only "poor" game of the year was in a tight 16-13 win over Texas, polished off Missouri last week, 37-0. Led by Joe Washington and Jimmy Littrell, the Sooner offense has run up 356 points in eight games. The Club leads the nation in rushing average, 456.1 yards, and in total offense average, 546.6 yards, and in scoring average, 44.5 points per game.

The Sooner defense is in perfect balance with the explosive offense. Switzer's defenders have allowed only 51 points this season, and have yet to yield a touchdown in the first half of any game. Moreover, so stingy is the defense that the No. 1 unit has not permitted more than two touchdowns a game in the last 33 contests.

It could be a long, long afternoon for the Jayhawks, but then, last Saturday was supposed to a long, long one for Michigan State, wasn't it?

Women's hoop tryouts

Try-outs for the UMass Women's Basketball Team will begin Monday, Nov. 18 at 5:00 in the North Physical Education Gym. Practice times during the try-out period are as follows: Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays - 5:00 to 7:30; Tuesdays and Thursdays - 4:00 to 6:15. All interested women should report ready for participation.

The 1974-75 season promises to be an exciting one. The 14-game schedule features the best women's competition in the Northeast, as well as an international game against the Australian Touring Team in the Cage on February 12.

In case of any questions, contact Coach Carol Albert at North P.E. at 545-2557.

UMass receiver John Willis (85) has his man beat as he goes high for a Mark Tripucka pass in last week's loss to Holy Cross. The Minutemen put it all on the line tomorrow against the Wildcats from University of New Hampshire. A victory would give the Minutemen a share of the Yankee Conference title.

Patriots move to improve punting, control rowdies

FOXBORO, MASS. [UPI] — The New England Patriots Thursday announced implementation of stiffened security measures to prevent further violent incidents by fans attending games at Schaefer Stadium.

The action followed an incident outside the Stadium Sunday, in which one man was stabbed in the stomach during a scuffle between two groups of reportedly inebriated fans.

"The management of the New England Patriots is deeply disturbed by the recent unruly behavior of a small segment of the patrons...," the Patriots said in a prepared statement. "We will not tolerate the thoughtlessness of the selfish few who ignore the well-being of the vast majority."

To tighten security, the Patriots said they would institute the following measures: increase security at stadium gates to deny entrance to intoxicated persons and to confiscate all alcoholic beverages; double security patrols inside the stadium; eject any individual involved in a disturbance; and revoke the season ticket privilege of any person causing a disturbance.

FOXBORO,MASS. [UPI] — The New England Patriots Thursday signed free agent Dave Chapple and said the fourth-year punter will play Sunday against the New York Jets.

Chapple, released by the Los Angeles Rams after the sixth game of the season, was signed after a one-day tryout with New England. He had a career punting average of 42.3 yards per kick going into the season but punter for just a 33.4-yard average this year with Los Angeles.

Chapple's best season was in 1972 when he led the National Football Conference with a 44.2-yard average.

Montreal down B's

BOSTON [UPI] - Guy Lafleur scored two goals and goalie Ken Dryden stopped all but one Boston shot Thursday night as the Montreal Canadiens defeated the Bruins 4-1 in a National Hockey League game.

The lanky Dryden faced 40 shots, the only one that got by him being a second-period slap shot by Bobby Orr through a screen. It was Dryden's first regular season appearance in Boston since his one-year "retirement" over a salary squabble. He was brilliant in frustrating the Bruins, facing their power play seven times without allowing a goal.

Montreal scored three of their goals before the Bruins got on the board. Guy Lapointe got the first goal of the game at 1:55 of the opening stanza while Montreal had a five-on-three advantage. Lafleur made it 2-0 at 9:19 on a slap shot that beat goalie Gilles Gilbert on his right side.

UVM head recommends football cut; trustees have final say

BURLINGTON, Vt. [UPI] — The University of Vermont plans to end its 77-year old intercollegiate football program at the end of this season, President Edward C. Andrews Jr. announced Thursday.

Andrews expressed confidence that the school's trustees would ratify the move, which was part of a $1.5 million budget reduction, but football coach Carl Falivene said he would fight to keep the program and said alumni had offered "overwhelming support" for football.

The president blamed the cuts on "shrinking state support and explosive inflation." Gov. Thomas P. Salmon has ordered all state agencies, including the university, to hold spending to current levels next year.

"We're certainly not going to let them destroy the football program without a fight," Falivene said after the decision was announced. He complained that he had not been consulted before the decision was made.

Vermont, which began playing intercollegiate football in 1897, has a 4-5 record going into its final game Saturday against American International College.

The budget cuts announced by Andrews included the ending of a two-year nursing program, although a four-year program will be continued. Doctoral programs in mathematics and physics and masters degree programs in economics, music, home economics, philosophy and Spanish will also be ended.

Despite the cuts, the university expects to ask the state legislature for a budget increase of $1.3 to $1.5 million next year, as well as increasing tuition by $95 for Vermont residents and $215 for out-of-state students.

Andrews said he was unsure whether the legislature, which faces the necessity to cut programs or raise taxes, would go along with the increase. Any further cuts, he said, would be "public policy issues" involving the ending of major academic programs.

The athletic department had proposed cutting the budgets of all sports as an alternative to ending the football program, but Andrews said that was rejected because it would have resulted in "third rate programs" in all sports.

The president said the university would continue to support all other sports, including basketball and hockey. He said the decision was based solely on money, but that the losing record of the football team "will help to sell it."

Braves bounce C's, 112-100

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] - Randy Smith scored 27 points and Jim McMillian added 20 to lead the Buffalo Braves to a 112-100 victory over the Boston Celtics Thursday night.

the victory was the third in a row and the fifth in the last six games for the Braves, leaders in the Atlantic Division of the National Basketball Association. The loss was only the second in the last seven games for the Celtics, who now trail Buffalo by 2-1-1 games in the standings.

The Braves jumped out to a quick 16-8 lead but at the end of the first period the score was 20-20. Boston moved into a 43-39 bulge late in the second period but held only a 49-47 advantage at the half.

Bob McAdoo added 18 points and Jack Marin 16 for Buffalo while Jo Jo White had 25 and Don Chaney and Don Nelson had 15 apiece for Boston.

Weekend Zodiac

The crazy world of jarring tackles, crunching blocks, dashes toward the all-important first down marker and attempts to thread a zone defense can be quite unpredictable. Last week, only a madman would have picked Houston over Buffalo or Cleveland over New England, yet the Oilers and Browns surprised the New York Giants and Pittsburgh. The NFL should return to normalcy this Sunday, although many fans may still be recovering from the shockers of a week ago.

NEW HAMPSHIRE 29; UMASS 22

There won't be any excuses this week, as the Wildcats will hand the Minutemen their sixth loss of the season and negate the possibility of UMass sharing the Yankee Conference title. Now that the season is nearly over, coach Dick MacPherson will have to start building for 1975 and hope for the best.

MIAMI DOLPHINS 24; BUFFALO BILLS 21

The Dolphins are accustomed to winning, and now that they've had a taste of AFC Eastern Division supremacy, it's going to be tough for Buffalo and New England. Miami has several players who are recovered from injuries, while the Bills are suffering from injuries to key personnel.

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS 28; NEW YORK JETS 20

The Pats should rebound from last week's poor showing versus Cleveland in convincing fashion; even if Joe Namath runs for a hundred yards, it won't be enough.

BALTIMORE COLTS 17; ATLANTA FALCONS 13

The Colts aren't really as bad as everyone thinks, and unfortunately for Atlanta, Baltimore is due for a win.

CINCINNATI BENGALS 31; HOUSTON OILERS 21

Ken Anderson broke two passing records with his great 20 for 22 performance, surpassing fellow AFC quarterbacks Joe Namath and Ken Stabler. The Bengals are within reach of Pittsburgh, and although Houston is having a fantastic year as compared to past Oiler standards, Cincinnati should record its seventh victory.

OAKLAND RAIDERS 35; SAN DIEGO CHARGERS 23

The Raiders have the best record in the NFL (8-1) and the awesome Stabler aerial display will extend the Oakland winning streak to nine games.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS 20; CLEVELAND BROWNS 16

A Cleveland victory is not at all unlikely, especially after the performance of the Browns against New England, but the Steelers must win or step aside for the Bengals.

DALLAS COWBOYS 27; WASHINGTON REDSKINS 21

Calvin Hill set a Dallas club record of 153 yards rushing against the 49ers, setting the stage for a season-ending situation in which the Cowboys will have to win every game and hope St. Louis can be beaten twice.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS 21; GREEN BAY PACKERS 10

The Vikes showed their strength in St. Louis against the Cardinals and even with John Hadl running the offense, Green Bay has trouble scoring points.

DETROIT LIONS 24; NEW YORK GIANTS 14

Detroit will have no problems against the Giants' weak defense. John Mendenhall, Bob Tucker, and Doug Kotar were injured against the Jets...which should make it that much easier for Detroit.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS 28; PHILADELPHIA EAGLES 24

The Cardinals proved that they can never be counted out of a game with a super comeback attempt, after failing behind Minnesota 28-17. This Sunday, however, the Cards will have little need for a comeback.

CHICAGO BEARS 20; SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS 13

Chicago has a more solid team overall. The result will be the eighth consecutive loss for San Francisco, after the 49ers had won the first two games of the year.

LOS ANGELES RAMS 34; NEW ORLEANS SAINTS 20

The LA pass rush devastated Bob Lee and the Falcons last week. Fred Dryer and linemates should keep Archie Manning busy while Rams romp to victory.

DENVER BRONCOS 28; KANSAS CITY CHIEFS 19

This contest may add to the number of TV-watchers who are put to sleep weekly by the comments of Howard Cosell. At any rate, fans at Mile High Stadium will be treated to a Denver triumph.

It's sweepstakes weekend in the Yankee Conference, and Saturday afternoon, three teams will have their chance for tying for the Yankee Conference championship.

Maine, with a 4-2 conference slate, has already clinched a tie for the title, while UConn, UMass, and New Hampshire, all with 3-2 records going into the final weekend of the Yankee Conference season, all have chances for a share of the title.

Rhode Island battles Connecticut at Storrs, while UNH meets the Minutemen at Alumni Stadium, (WMUA, 12:50).

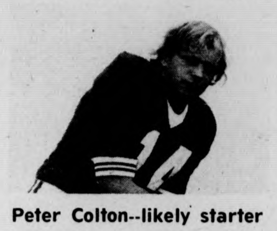
The number of interesting possibilities exist in the battle for the Beanpot. If Rhode Island beats UConn, while UMass and UNH tie, Maine would win the title outright. If UMass or UNH win and UConn loses, then two teams would share the crown. Three teams would share the crown if UConn beat URI and the UMass-UNH game did not end in a tie.

The UNH-UMass game promises to be a rear barnburner. Sicce thirty-eight members of the Wildcat squad hail from Massachusetts, an intense rivalry exists between the two teams.

UNH has won four games in a row since freshman Jeff Allen took over the starting quarterback spot from Jerry Keough.

The strength of New Hampshire is in their running game. Jerry Losano is the third leading rusher in the conference. Although Allen's insertion at quarterback is one of the big reasons for UNH's improvement in the past month, the fact is that Losano was only moved from flanker to tailback four games ago. If you can put two and two together, you realize that Losano has been another key for New Hampshire in their stretch run.

UNH has no one among the leaders in the pass receiving department in the conference since their leader, tight-end Pete Morone separated his shoulder against Springfield last week. You can therefore expect the teams to fight fire with fire tomorrow-run against run.



Peter Colton--likely starter

The Minutemen will probably start Peter Colton against New Hampshire at quarterback. He'll be facing an inexperienced defense with only one senior starter.

Jerry Mondalto and Jim Torrance will start in the backfield for UMass, who find themselves once again in line for a share of the title. Everyone thought they were through after the 10-9 loss to UConn, but BU's 27-17 win over the Huskies at Storrs last weekend gave the Minutemen one more shot, except if they lost tomorrow they won't have any more.

As Dick MacPherson said at Wednesday's Gridiron Club luncheon, "we're very grateful to BU for beating UConn and giving us a chance for a share of the Conference."

Let's hope come tomorrow afternoon, that the Minutemen can show how grateful they are, and for once this season, be on the receiving end of some breaks-and-put them to good use.

No football at UVM

"Football at the University of Vermont may be the next victim of budget cuts at the state-supported school."

Boston Globe, November 14th.

The implications of the above has already aroused a great deal of shouting in Burlington, but the odds are that Athletic Directors around the Yankee Conference are watching what happens very carefully, for the potential effects of such a decision could be tremendous on the other teams in the Conference.

Yesterday afternoon, the President of the University of Vermont, Edward Andrews, presented a list of recommendations to the Faculty Senate on how to save 1.5 million dollars as has been necessitated by state budget cuts. According to Dick Whittier, the Sports Information Director of UVM, one of the recommendations suggested that football be dropped entirely from the Vermont athletic program.

"At first they thought that they'd try and trim a proportional amount of money from all our athletic programs," said Whittier, "but then they figured that it would be better to get rid of one program entirely and save the rest."

Vermont is already without a varsity baseball program since it left the Yankee Conference two years ago. That decision was based on the fact that the early spring in Vermont is not terribly conducive to playing baseball.

Among the other recommendations in the savings plan include the doing away with the two-year nursing program and graduate programs in mathematics, physics, and other unspecified fields. Moreover, 125 staff members will not be rehired next year, including 60 faculty members and 65 administrators from janitors on up.

The football team is the biggest loser in the athletic program at Vermont even though it takes in about $35,000 every year. Also the fact that the team has not had a winning season since 1966 makes it "droppable" material, since many alumni and students are extremely disappointed in the team's lack of success and would rather see the team disbanded and save in the process.

The decision is not final, although the fact that the President of the University is suggesting it makes it likely that the recommendation will be accepted by the Board of Trustees who will have the final say in the affair. The Trustees will meet December 13-14 to act on the President's recommendations.

If Vermont drops football, the immediate result of the action would be that the Yankee Conference would be left with six teams: Maine, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Boston University and of course, Massachusetts. What could very likely happen is that Boston University, which has been in serious financial difficulty athletically, might drop out of the conference as well.

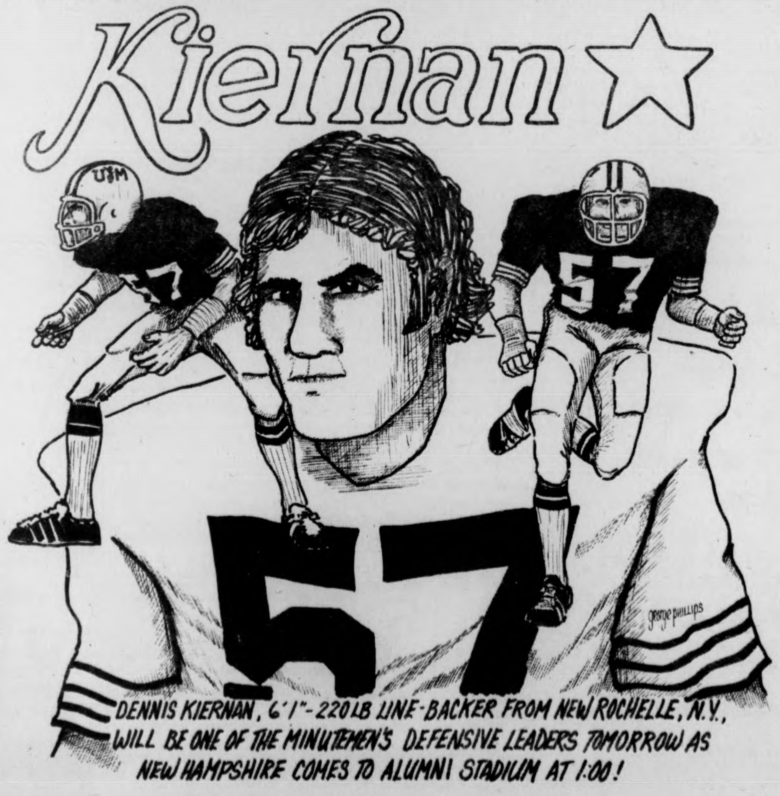
If only Vermont dropped out of the conference, an interesting thing could happen. If UMass, for example, played Holy Cross, Boston College, Villanova, Colgate, and Dartmouth, and filled the Vermont game by playing Rutgers, they'd have six games on their schedule with Division One opponents, while the other five games against teams in the Yankee Conference would constitute Divsision Two games. If the Minutemen played with such a schedule format for two consecutive years, they would be considered a Division One team.

The potential of earning television revenue would be much greater for UMass in Division One, but also the expenditure involved in sustaining a top-level program could be prohibitive. It would also be difficult for UMass could compete in the same class as Penn State or Temple, if their hands were tied by Yankee Conference scholarship limitations, if they stayed in the Conference. Also UMass would probably have an easier time of it competing for Division Two supremacy with a team like Delaware than they would against the Pittsburghs, Penn States, or Syracuses in Division One.

There are a plethora of possibilities which may or not materialize if Vermont does decide to drop football come December, but the odds are that even if they continue to play football, it would be outside the YanCon against Division Three teams like Rochester, AIC, or Springfield.

So you can bet on a lot of thinking by athletic directors in New England during the winter, no matter what Vermont does.

No matter what, the Yankee Conference will never be the same.



DENNIS KIERNAN, 6'1"-220LB LINE-BACKER FROM NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y., WILL BE ONE OF THE MINUTEMEN'S DEFENSIVE LEADERS TOMORROW AS NEW HAMPSHIRE COMES TO ALUMNI STADIUM AT 1:00!

Capitol hill lameduck session convenes today

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The victors and the vanquished return Monday for a post-election session of Congress that promises to be little more than a holding action until the new deluge of Democrats arrives in January.

The calendar gives the 93rd Congress seven weeks before it must cede to its successor on Jan. 3, but the "lame duck" session is studded with recesses for holidays and other purposes.

Moreover, there is an inclination among Democrats to put off what can be put off until January when their ranks will be swollen as a result of the elections.

The present House lines up 246 Democrats to 187 Republicans. In the Senate, it's 58 Democrats and 42 Republicans. But starting in January, the Democrats will have a 291-144 edge in the House and a 61-39 margin in the Senate.

Hanging around until the session expires are 92 House members and 11 Senators who retired on their own or were retired by the voters. Although not a record turnover, it is one of the most sizable of recent years.

The minimum Congress must do - it may even fall short of that - is to pass the remaining appropriations bills for fiscal 1975.

Except tow zones

No more parking tickets

By LARRY CARPMAN
And BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporters

The Department of Public Safety, the agency in charge of parking enforcement on campus, is no longer enforcing a major portion of the parking program which went into effect in September 1973.

And the director of the department believes campus users will park where they are supposed to without the coercion of tickets and towing.

"We are not ticketing cars when they are in lots they are not assigned to," said David L. Johnston, the department's director. He emphasized, however, that "twelve months out of the year we enforce tow zone and hazardous violations--and also we always enforce parking meter violations."

Johnston revealed his three month old policy when he was asked to comment on the findings of a Collegian investigation of recent problems with the parking program. However, he made similar statements at a public meeting of the Parking and Transportation Council on October 29.

The Collegian learned last week of the policy after it received information about non-enforcement policies from several sources, including campus officials.

"What we are attempting to do involves the use of the guards (the green-uniformed men at the entrance of most of the campus parking lots). We are using the guards to direct people to proper lots," he said.

"We found that without towing and a minimum of ticketing people were parking in assigned lots. The program didn't brake down," he said.

Meanwhile, a problem arose last week when a dining commons employee, with a proper sticker, scheduled to begin work at 5 a.m. failed to find a space in lot 50 in the Southwest area.

The principle of the system is that anyone who wishes to park an auto on campus must first obtain a numbered or lettered sticker from the parking office in Hampshire House. Some lots, because they are closer to the center of campus (core lots), are more expensive than others.

"We haven't seen any evidence that people are pulling into $50 lots with $5 stickers," said Johnston. "We make daily checks on that," he added.

At least three sources told The Collegian of friction between Johnston and the Whitmore administrators who are in charge of the parking plan. Whitmore wants the rules enforced, while Johnston thinks they are too difficult to enforce, the sources said.

Susan C. Tie, coordinator of the Parking Office, said she would rather not talk about the situation.

"I believe that everyone that has a sticker should have a space," she said.

At the same time H. Jack Littlefield, UMass planning director and the man in charge of parking and transportation, said: "I know the enforcement process is difficult and there are all kinds of problems." He added that Johnston has "expressed concern" to him about enforcement procedures.

"I have the responsibility of parking enforcement,," said Johnston, "and I have to be equitable and fair with the community," he said adding, "The only other thing we can do is make a case for towing again. I don't believe the community wants towing and I agree with it," Johnston said, adding that the "financial penalty is too excessive" with a towing policy.

Meanwhile Robert Kittle, the parking system administrator, referred all questions on parking enforcement to Johnston. "I don't want to speak for Mr. Johnston," he said.

"If that (reduced ticketing for sticker violations) is happening -- and I think it is happening -- we are in the process of trying to get it straightened out," Kittle said. Kittle and Johnston met Friday morning to discuss the problem, sources said.

Johnston pointed out that there has not been as great a community outcry with this system as was the case with the towing policy.

Protest rally hits inflation problem

By ROBERT SHEMELIGIAN
Staff Reporter

"Power concedes nothing," said Johnetta Cole of the UMass Black Studies Department in her address that highlighted Friday night's protest rally against inflation, held in the C.C. auditorium.

A small but attentive audience heard Prof. Cole, the only speaker who didn't use a microphone, say, "It's not a question of understanding and interpreting, it is a question of creating change."

She urged the crowd to attend the anti-inflation demonstrations held on Saturday in Springfield as part of a nation-wide movement.

The two and a half hour program was almost cancelled because of poor attendance. Some people in the audience blamed it on "poor advertising", and "a Friday night schedule".

Other speakers included Stanley Warner, professor of economics at Hampshire College; Paul Michler, the chairperson of the Amherst branch of The Young Workers' Liberation League; Geno Gabon of the Spanish department; and Barbara Ramsi who is noted for bringing Angela Davis to UMass.

Ramsi, the first speaker, denounced the President's WIN policy saying, "Let us know that Gerry Ford is a loser, his economic policy a failure."

The economist, Stanley Warner predicted a 14 per cent employment rate for next year and blamed it on "the war-like policies of the U.S. government."

"The measured unemployment rate will rise to about 7 per cent next year. The real unemployment rate will be about double."

Warner said that "concurrent inflation had its beginnings" with our policies concerning Indo-China, and that the "forecast is for one of our longest and deepest recessions, but a recession not a depression."

Paul Michler cited Blacks as those hit hardest by inflation because of segregation.

He said half of "the 30 per cent young people unemployed" are Black and this State's administrators ignore the problem.

Citing UMass and Boston as examples, he said, "This university is a segregated school, Affirmative Action programs exist only on paper." He denounced the School Committee in Boston saying they "devoted their energies to the harassment of Black people."

Speaking on the economic problems of Puerto Rico was Geno Salon, who helped form the bilingual, cultural program at UMass.

He blamed the Puerto Rican "40 per cent unemployment rate" on the U.S. imperialist policies saying, "Puerto Rico depends on the U.S. to eat, basically."

"The expense budget of the Puerto Rican peoples is in the hands of a few (American) monopolies. Any non-U.S. product suffers a high tax."

He ended his lecture saying Puerto Rico is "still struggling for Socialism and independence."

During his speech, harrassers entered the auditorium and started yelling, "Socialists". They were ignored and soon left.

Friday night's event got under way with chants by The Voices of New Africa House, a band made up of Third World Peoples from the Five Colleges.

Alternative dorm life found

By ANN BOSYK
Staff Correspondent

With all the complaints about noisy, dirty, and impersonal dorm situations this semester, it may come as a surprise to some students that there is at least one alternative to the "typical" dorm.

In the basement of Moore House in Southwest, at least 12 students have found the French Corridor to be more than a satisfactory way to live on campus.

Sheila Yaffe is the current president of the French Corridor. She says that it is common to see a group of five or six of the students sitting around together in one room after dinner, playing cards or just talking. There always seems to be a relaxed atmosphere, she says. In addition, the basement of Moore is "surprisingly quiet" for a dorm.

Besides offering an opportunity for students who might enjoy speaking French together once in a while in a casual and natural atmosphere, the French Corridor (an RSO organization) runs several activities which are not found in an ordinary dorm. "Soirees" of wine and cheese parties with French professors and TA's give students a good opportunity to meet their teachers outside the classroom.

Once a year, the French Corridor sponsors the appearance of "Le Treteau de Paris," a troupe of French actors who tour the U.S. every year. After their performance, the members of the French Corridor meet and talk with the actors.

Established in the early 1960's on Orchard Hill, the French Corridor moved to Southwest when that residential complex was finished. Until the fall of 1971, when the Corridor seemed to be working well, many of its members were graduated at the same time and left the Corridor with smaller numbers.

"Our biggest problem is that we need more people to join the Corridor. Otherwise, there just aren't enough members to support our activities. If we don't get more people to join, the Corridor probably won't be able to survive another year," says Treasurer Sue Heard.

Most of the French Corridor students think that another problem is that not enough University students know about the Corridor, or else are under the wrong impression that it is an elitist set-up.

Another misconception they mention is that students may have the idea they must speak French well to live there.

Here is advice from Richard Keans, a hotel and restaurant major who has lived on the French Corridor since last year.

"Not knowing French doesn't alienate me," he said. "I've lived here two semesters and I'm really satisfied with the Corridor. There are a lot of misconceptions--the biggest one probably being that the French Corridor is an elitest set-up, and this is definitely untrue."

While most of the members of the Corridor have some French speaking ability, few of them are actually French majors. Right now they have such varied majors as Spanish, Hotel and Restaurant, physics, astronomy, urban studies, and art.

Living on the French Corridor can be a very valuable experience for French majors, or for anyone who takes French courses at the University. Sue Heard's opinion is that the Corridor is "definitely helpful, because there is a good chance that you'll be around people with the same type courses, and also because students on the French Corridor have good opportunities to meet the French professors."

According to Anne Brisbois, a junior transfer student: "A real sense of community exists on the French Corridor which is helpful when new students come to the University. When I first came here, it was easy to get good information on choosing courses and professors from the other members of the Corridor."

Anyone interested in joining the French Corridor should contact the French Department or go to the basement floor of Moore House.

Tenant solidarity takes giant step

By PETER MUELLO
Staff Correspondent

Tenant response in North Village has so far been excellent, a UMass Tenants Association (UMTA) spokesperson said yesterday.

UMTA efforts to establish solidarity among married students have taken a giant step forward as a result of Thursday's meeting with North Village residents.

Following successful drives to organize residents of Lincoln and University Apartments, UMTA held an "information session" Thursday night at North Village, the single largest development of married student housing at UMass.

Despite limited publicity, close to 50 North Village tenants showed up to hear UMTA plans for student control of student housing. Co-chairperson Rosemary Whittaker said she was surprised at the large turnout, and termed the response "encouraging".

Whittaker outlined UMTA objectives: establishment of all three complexes as low-income housing; tenant control of maintenance and budget; and hiring-firing power over Married Student Housing Office personnel.

More immediate goals include a rollback of the recent 15-39 per cent rent hike at Lincoln and University Apartments, to a 6 per cent cost-of-living increase, and the acquisition of State funds to subsidize the debt-ridden North Village complex.

A major point of contention has been the rent increases at Lincoln and University. UMTA members claim the two complexes were operating in the black before the most recent increase. The excess profits, they say, have gone to pay off the $360,000 bond held on North Village.

Co-chairperson Pat Walker assured North Village residents at the meeting that they would not incur rent increases for supporting the on-going rent strike at Lincoln and University.

"You won't be forced to pay higher rents for joining the strike," Walker said.

"We will not accept a rent rollback unless the Administration guarantees a State subsidy to prevent a North Village increase."

UMTA organizers estimate that it will take "at least a week" to canvas the 240-unit North Village development, but it now appears almost certain that UMTA will represent the three complexes in their dispute with the University.

"The Administration knows that we represent a majority at University and Lincoln, and they're waiting to see what happens at North Village," Walker said. "Sooner or later they're going to have to recognize us."

Distinguished teachers appear more than rare

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Judging from the poor response from students to nominate their teachers for the Distinguished Teachers Award last year, students don't care enough to encourage better teaching.

Only 49 nominations were received from a faculty of 1,289 full time professors and approximately 360 TA's.

But students have a chance to redeem themselves.

The Distinguished Teaching Awards Committee is now seeking nominations from the entire campus community for "outstanding teachers, teaching associates and teaching assistants."

Kinney Thiele, DTA Coordinator, is asking for "more student input in the nomination procedure."

According to Thiele "everyone has their own idea of a 'good' teacher. The purpose of the awards is to identify and honor distinguished classroom teaching, particularly on the undergraduate level."

Each award recipient is granted $1,000 from the AMOCO corporation, and a certificate of commendation.

They also serve a two year term on the DTA selection committee, together with a representative from the graduate student senate, undergraduate student senate, and any school or college in the university not represented by an award winner.

Nominations will be open until late spring said Thiele, so students in both semester classes will be able to nominate.

Anyone nominating a teacher or TA should write a letter describing the teachers excellence and address it to Kinney Thiele, Provosts Office, 362 Whitmore Administration Building.

Hunger, Fasts, & Stamps...

International famine conditions sparks UMie sophomore's fast

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

This year, November 28 will be a special day of thanks for Mary Colwell. On Thanksgiving she will end a two-week fast to protest famine conditions around the world.

Mary Colwell: A 2-week hunger strike is a serious commitment.

"I was sick of reading about hunger and not doing anything about it," the 23 year old UMass sophomore said yesterday during an interview in The Collegian offices. Since last Tuesday night at 11, all Mary has taken into her system is juices.

"You know the grovelling hunger you get sort of knotting up your stomach? It was like that at first. The hardest time to get through it was mealtime. But now I don't have hunger pains any more," she added. "They ended after the third day."

Colwell, a nursing major originally from Minnesota, now lives in Pelham with her husband, A.J. LaFlur. The couple have been married since the summer of 1973.

She knows that what she is doing will gain publicity but she wants it to be seen as a political act.

"At first it was a personal thing, but then I realized it wouldn't do any good unless it was publicized," she said, explaining why she came to The Collegian.

She related her first six days of fast to the one-year protest hunger strike commedian Dick Gregory waged against the Vietnam War in 1973.

"What he said was that while he fasted, everyone knew about it," she said. "And when they sat down to eat, they knew about the Vietnam War and they would think about it as they ate.

"That's the first step — making people think."

Mary, at least, has thought. An advocate of natural foods, she and her husband, eat mostly fruits, vegetables and natural grains without chemical preservatives. Because all are first-generation proteins, they take less of the world's resources to produce.

She worked as a volunteer at the Belchertown State School for the Retarded and her experience there made her turn from education to a nursing major.

"What I'm trying to do is reach the people in the U.S. and make them think about what they can do," she said. "We can eat less, we can watch what we consume. Americans can eat less."

She said up until today she was drinking some fruit juices and no solids whatsoever. She will only drink water until Thanksgiving beginning on Wednesday. "I plan to go to the day before Thanksgiving," she said.

Can she make it?

"Oh yea, no doubt about it. My friends say I'm livelier. I can't do any sudden movements without feeling weak, but I still have as much energy to study and get things done.

"And I have more time to do them in because I don't have to feed myself," she added.

Colwell is a native of Wayzata, Minnesota, where she graduated from Minnetonka High School in 1969. She spent four years after that in Outward Bound and in cities in Montana and Rhode Island before enrolling at UMass last year. She came here originally because she heard the School of Education was good.

Why did she decide to fast?

"It was an immediate result of the media — reading it in Time Magazine and the newspapers — The Globe. I've seen it on television," she said.

National one-day student fast planned for this Thursday

A nation-wide student one-day fast has been planned for Thursday sponsored by an international famine relief organization based in Oxford-England.

And the United States coordinator of the fast will be speaking twice in Northampton tonight. Gerry Goodrich of "Oxfam-America" will speak at 4 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. in Northampton.

The 7:30 p.m. talk will be in Wright Hall on the Smith College campus. The earlier talk will be at the Eagles Hall, 24 Pleasant Street, Northampton.

According to Goodrich, 250,000 people in 800 colleges, high schools. churches and clubs nationwide plan to participate in the one-day fast Thursday. About $100,000 that will be saved by the fast will be used as relief aid to famine-striken areas like the drought-ridden sub-Saharan Africa, Oxfam-America said in a press statement.

But on the UMass campus, it may not be possible for students to fast and have all the money the dining commons save put into famine relief, according to Matthew H. Burns, student head of the Food Services Board.

Burns said last night he is to meet at 11 a.m. this morning with acting Food Services director Arthur Warren to talk about an alternative plan for the more than 11,000 UMass students who eat in the DC's.

"If everyone just eats what they need on Thursday -- one dessert, no seconds, one glass of milk -- then we (the Food Services Board) would be willing to take the difference and give it to a famine relief organization," Burns said.

"I don't know how much money that would be," he said. But he said about $10,000 is spent in the DC's each day, so it would be some fraction of that amount.

The fast is the idea of some Boston students and the staffs at Oxfam-America and Project Relief. It has already spread to Tufts University, MIT, Wellesley College, Boston University and Harvard in eastern Massachusetts. Students from Smith College are expected to participate as well.

Among supporters of the fast are Harvard nutritionist Jean Mayer, anthropologist Margaret Mean, Gloria Steinem and columnist William F. Buckley Jr.

Harvard will give a rebate for the evening meals served to 2,000 students Thursday. The money will be donated to Oxfam, CARE, UNICEF, Project Relief and other programs, according to campus organizaer David Levine, president of Harvard's Ecology Action.

MIT is to have a teach in and a hunger banquet at 7 p.m. At Boston College films, student and faculty panel discussions, poetry and liturgy will be held.

Food stamp applications slowed

By CHRIS DILLARD
Staff Reporter

A shortage of help at the Regional Food Stamp bureau has resulted in a backlog of applications and slowed down the processing of food stamps for students, according to an employee of the UMass food stamp program.

"We offered to deliver the applications to the Springfield office since they hadn't picked them up here, but they said that this would have no value, because they were still processing August applications," said Mike Izdepski, a work study student, at a meeting Thursday on the food stamp program.

John Fisher, of the Student Organizing Project, also said a possible court case involving the food stamp issue will be discussed with the Legal Services Office today. Fisher requested that students willing to be plaintiffs leave their names, when they applied for food stamps, and when they had their interview at the SOP office, 428A, the Student Union Building. He explained that although only a few students would have to go to court, the quantity of students affected by the delay was important.

The program was begun at the University to expedite the procedure by handling all of the preliminary screening. This would help to alleviate the overload at the Northampton Welfare Office that would have occured if all student applications had been processed there. Some students that attempted to bypass the University screening process were sent back to Munson.

The Springfield Area Office sent their representative David Clark to train five work-study students and to begin processing the applications. Clark did the official interviews until he was called back to the Springfield office during the third week of October. The work-study students have continued processing applications, but no official has been sent to do the required interview.

Izkepski said the Munson office would continue to do the initial screening. Any student that has turned in an application, but neglected to leave a telephone number was requested to go to the Munson office and leave a number as they cannot be reached. Approximately 50 applications have been delayed for this reason.

The Munson Office was also told by the Springfield office that the bill passed stating that a student declared as a dependent by his or her parents could not receive food stamps has not gone into effect yet. It was stated that no student could be legally turned down for this reason.

Journalism studies: Growth cited

By B.J. ROCHE

"The Journalistic Studies Program of the English Dept., is undergoing growth pains, not slipping into senility after a golden age...in the past two decades while journalism programs flourished on scores of campuses across the country...journalism languished on this campus."

In a recent letter to Martin Miller, Chairperson of the Academic Affairs Committee, Journalistic Studies Dept. Chairman Howard Ziff defended the Department's stand on the new major requirement.

The letter, signed by three members of the Journalistic Studies Department, Professors Lawrence Pinkham, Ralph Whitehead, and Professor Ziff, went on to cite a need for growth as being the reason for the decision to make English the only route to a JS degree.

Formerly, students were allowed to carry a full major in other subjects, such as Political Science or History, and 15 credits in Journalistic Studies.

In addition, the professors state, "...the essential goal (of the dept.), learning how to analyze, criticize, and synthesize, is best achieved compatibly in a J.S. English major. The new requirements do not achieve the final goal, that of a freestanding major. But they are preferable to the old system, because they leave room for growth in journalism offerings without adding still more required hours to the 45 hours typically required under other double major schemes."

The letter also goes on to state that the decision was not made without student input. "The new requirements were not pushed through in secret, but presented to the relevant English Dept. Committee, debated and approved...It is unfortunate, but not relevant, that the meeting was not fully attended."

The Professors' opinion is that the requirement will not limit students from taking courses in other departments; rather that it will open more elective hours so students may take more such courses.

In closing, the letter states that, "the next step should be forward, not backward to the outmoded double major system."

Unnamed volunteers saved guides

Course description guides nearly recycled too soon

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Reporter

In spite of pleas to conserve the course description guides, several bundles were found discarded in the paper recycling box in the Student Union Lobby Friday morning.

The guides were rescued from premature recycling by a pair of concerned volunteers.

The demand for the guides was so great that the crowd of students were scooping them up before the volunteers had finished removing all of them from the box.

Campus Center Building Operations Dept. does not believe they were deliberately trashed.

"It could have been confusion because the janitors would not do it deliberately, since they cooperate with students 100 per cent," said Andrea Kemp, speaking for the Building Operations Dept.

A C.C. janitor attributed the mistake to the sloppy way in which the guides were piled.

"They should be delivered properly, so they won't get thrown all over the floor" he said.

The Adacemic Affairs Committee, description guide publisher, said the guides were neatly stacked when they were delivered, but were strewn around by students.

"I can't stand around handing them to students" said Jack Leader of the Academic Affairs Committee.

Approximately half of the 22,000 issues which have been contracted for have been delivered. The guides are delivered to the Dining Commons, the Student Union, the Campus Center and several other locations on campus.

Course Schedules are printed by the Provost's office.

The guides are printed at a cost of 30 cents each, down from a price of 45 cents three years ago, in spite of inflation, according to Marty Miller, committee chairperson.

"We put them out on the cheapest grade of usable paper" Miller exclaimed.

Letters requesting course information are sent to department heads and individual professors. Miller said it's easier for them to compile descriptions of courses for an entire department than it is to do it for individual professors.

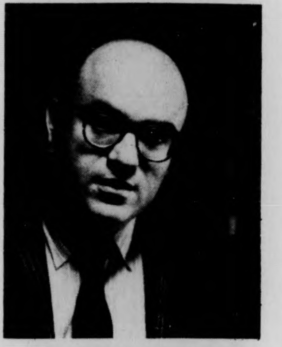
Cyprus situation lecture topic

The second lecture of a series sponsored this semester by the Hellenic-American Association will feature Prof. Dennis Skiotis of Harvard University lecturing on "The Refugees of Cyprus" at 8 p.m. tonight in room 113 of the Campus Center.

Dr. Skiotis is Assistant Professor of Ottoman and Modern Greek and Tukish History at Harvard. He has received his doctorate from Harvard in 1970 and has since published several articies on the topic of his thesis which was on the Greek war of Independence. Because of his special interest and knowledge of the history and general background of the parties involved in the Cryprus crisis and also because of his fluent knowledge of the Greek and Turkish languages he was selected by the Senate Subcommittee on Refugees to investigate the situation in Cyprus.

As one of three members of the Subcommittee's Study Mission to Cyprus he visited the island during the first week of September travelling extensively in refugee areas, talking with the people. The Study Mission also briefly visited Greece and Turkey to confer with the respective foreign ministry officials about the situation on Cyprus.

In his talk today Prof. Skiotis is expected to present in some detail the political and economic circumstances that have led to the conflict in Cyprus, and explore some of the possible solutions.



Prof. Dennis Skiotis

Alpha Epsilon Pi reactivated following four year absence

Alpha Epsilon Pi, once one of UMass' most prominent fraternities, is being reactivated on campus. The fraternity will offer a totally different concept than the other Greek organizations on campus.

The frat was first founded on the UMass campus over 50 years ago and it thrived until 4 years ago when a fire gutted out the frat's house.

Nationally, AEPi has charters on 106 campusses and such well-known alumni as Neil Diamond, Simon-Garfunkel, Jerry Lewis, Sammy Davis Jr., and many others. There are also many alumni in the UMass area. According to Ed Bowe, Greek Affairs Director, "the alumni would love to see AEPi at UMass again."

There is a large sum of money set aside for fraternity housing. This is a chance for men to live in a close personal living environment, and added to that, be served good, hot food.

Unlike most fraternities, Alpha Epsilon Pi will offer no pledgeship. This will enable the initial group to form the frat the way they want it and choose just what they want in their group.

The group will be in full swing very, very soon, and is offering a super-low initiation fee for this initial year. All those interested men are invited to call Rich (6-5961) or Dave (6-6839) or Mark (6-5696).

First voting in decade

Conservative wins easily in Greek election

ATHENS [UPI] — Premier Constantine Caramanlis yesterday swept toward the landslide victory he sought as Greeks streamed to the polls in record numbers in their first free elections in a decade.

With results in from nearly half the constituencies, Caramanlis' conservative New Democracy party was winning about 55 per cent of the vote.

"It is a landslide victory by a higher percentage than we had imagined," a Caramanlis spokesman said. "The actual results have surpassed our predictions."

The spokesman, former information minister Panayotis Lambrias, said "the present trend shows that we will win about 55 per cent of the popular vote."

Caramanlis needs 44 per cent of the vote to control the 300-member parliament.

The liberal Center Union-New Forces party led by former foreign minister George Mavros was polling about 20 per cent of the vote. The anti-American Panhellenic Socialist Movement led by former University of California economics professor Andreas Papandreou was getting about 12 per cent and the leftwing coalition including Greece's two communist parties about eight per cent.

Lambrias said the New Democracy party was winning unexpected votes in Athens where the leftists were failing to match forecasts of a 20 per cent harvest.

The final vote count will not be known until today when returns from the Greek islands and some of the more remote mainland areas are all in.

Political analysts said Caramanlis' clear overall majority may enable him to end the New Democracy-Center Union coalition that has ruled Greece since the fall of the military junta in July which brought the 67-year-old politician back as premier from 11 years of exile in Paris.

But Caramanlis' aides said he might include in his new government certain key Center Union members like Foreign Minister George Mavros to provide a broad based national unity cabinet.

Diplomats said Caramanlis' election would mean that Greece would push ahead with its bid to join the European Common Market and could reconsider its pullout from the military activities of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), depending on what settlement is reached over Cyprus.

Ford begins journey to Japan and summit with Brezhnev

ANCHORAGE, Alaska [UPI] — President Ford flew to the Far East yesterday to try his hand at Nixon-style summit diplomacy, calling it "a quest for peace" but promising also to keep America a first-class military power.

Ford stopped in Anchorage enroute to Japan, South Korea and his first summit with Soviet party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev in the Pacific Siberian port of Vladivostok.

"Alaska gives us an inspiring farewell boost as we proceed on America's quest for peace and improved international relations," he said in remarks prepared for delivery there.

But Ford also took note of "the alert armed forces" stationed in Alaska as a first line of defense against Soviet air attack and added:

"I want to reassure you today that my administration is energetically seeking world peace but remains aware that the best insurance for peace is the maintenance of first-class military forces ready for defense."

Ford's visit to Japan-where no U.S. President has ever been a guest-had originally been scheduled for former President Richard M. Nixon, the most travelled of all chief executives who made his reputation as a globe-trotting architect of detente.

Declaring he would "rather travel thousands of miles for peace than take a single step toward war," Ford departed Washington yesterday morning and flew north for the fuel-stop and brief speech in Anchorage.

Watergate prosecutors end case this week

WASHINGTON [UPI] — After nearly two and a half years, the long-awaited light is beginning to show at the end of the Watergate tunnel.

Within a few weeks - possibly by Christmas - the verdict will be in and the American people will know who if any one was responsible for covering up the greatest scandal in the nation's history.

Prosecution lawyers in the cover-up case, seven weeks and 24 witnesses after the trial began, announced Friday they will rest their case sometime this week, probably Wednesday or Thursday.

Then it will be the turn of the five defendants - former Attorney General John N. Mitchell; one-time White House aides H.R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman; and two aides at Richard M. Nixon's 1972 campaign, Robert C. Mardian and Kenneth W. Parkinson - to spread their cases before the jury.

"It looks like we've got a chance, a good chance, of finishing this case before the Christmas holidays," U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica told the jury at week's end. "I hope it won't be too much longer and we'll have you all home for the holidays."

The prosecutors began their case by calling John W. Dean III as their first witness.

Chief trial prosecutor James F. Neal estimated it would take at least two full days to play the nearly two dozen tapes still remaining, none of which have been heard publicly before and many of which have never even been released in transcript form.

Harvard closes files

BOSTON [AP] — Harvard University says it will not comply immediately with a new law that gives students the right to see their confidential personal files.

The law, which goes into effect tomorrow, says colleges must let students see their records or face the possibility of losing federal education money.

Harvard released a memorandum Saturday in which their lawyer, Daniel Steiner, said confidential information should be kept secret until he makes a further ruling "within a few weeks."

Under the law, schools must comply with requests to see files within 45 days.

Earlier, Steiner had said that individual faculties of the university could decide that "such records if no longer useful should be removed and destroyed."

The Massachusetts Advocacy Center, a Boston legal agency, said in a statement, "We are outraged by Harvard University's attempts to subvert the clear intent of the law. It means exactly what it says, and no amount of legal gymnastics will change that fact."

Mideast quiet

By United Press International

Israel reported "considerable relaxation of tension" on its front lines yesterday following partial mobilization of reserves to counter a Syrian buildup on the Golan Heights.

A senior government source told newsmen after a cabinet meeting in Jerusalem "there is a certain amount of calming down, but the alert will continue at its present level for as long as necessary."

Chrysler may close

DETROIT [UPI] — The auto industry was clouded by deepening fears that the Chrysler Corp. is preparing to announce a complete halt in its U.S. car production in December.

The announcement could come today after a meeting at Chrysler headquarters of company executives, United Auto Workers officials and the Mayor Coleman A. Young.

Chrysler, the nation's third largest automaker, is suffering-like General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. - from a sales slump and heavy backlog of unsold cars.

Phone frauds sought

BOSTON [AP] — New England Telephone Co. has enlisted computers in the fight against people who cheat on long distance calls.

Such cheating, including the use of fraudulent credit cards and electronic devices that fool phone company billing equipment, is stealing, according to company spokesman Peter Cronin.

"If we close our eyes and do nothing all telephone users would have to shoulder the added costs caused by these abusers," he said.

Japanese protest

TOKYO [UPI] — An estimated 37,000 leftists yesterday staged the biggest demonstration so far against the historic visit of President Ford to Japan.

The turnout fell far short of the 100,000 demonstrators that organizers hoped to rally, and the protest was relatively peaceful.

The protest to halt the visit appeared more symbolic than substantive and an estimated 160,000 police mobilized for the five-day visit easily maintained order.

Bromery's Sept. '75 statement draws fire from Torrey

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has said the campus administration is trying to make dormitory residence on the 23,000-student campus voluntary by next September.

"My goal is to shoot for it (voluntary dorms) as fast as we can," Bromery said. "I'm shooting for September of 1975... but that's dependent on whether we can get some legal changes."

His statement has apparently placed the administration squarely between what student leaders say they want, and the interests of the town of Amherst as expressed yesterday by Town Manager Allen L. Torrey.

Currently UMass students under 21 are required to live in one of 11,000 dormitory spaces unless they are married or live with their parents less than 40 miles from campus.

Torrey was apparently so surprised at Bromery's statement that he said he called the chancellor's office yesterday to confirm the statement. Bromery is out of town until next Wednesday.

"I don't think he really said that," Torrey said. "It depends on the way he's quoted."

But Torrey went on to say that if Bromery did say he is working towards voluntary dorms by next September, "the people that would profit the most would be the existing developers."

Torrey also said many townspeople "do not like to see homes in residential districts become clubhouses" with student tenants.

Bromery tied his statement to the fact that there are still difficult legal problems to overcome before the campus can actually make the dorms voluntary. Chief among them, he said, was how to pay off long-term bonds used to finance the dorms. The bonds — essentially mortgages — for eight dormitory complexes cost $7.2 million each year.

The university takes in nearly that much in dorm rents from student residents. But if dorms were voluntary and as many as 1,000 students moved off campus, Bromery fears the university would have difficulty keeping up payments.

"I think he did say the dormitories should be filled," Torrey said, adding, "if there were no restrictions and this were just wide open, the town would be very upset because of the effect it would have on low-income residents."

The town manager said an influx of students into off-campus housing would drive existing rents up.

However, he did say that it would be unlikely to spur new apartment development because developers would find it "exceedingly difficult" to get building permits.

Bromery said that if a large number of students elected to live off-campus under voluntary dorms he fears they would make it difficult for married students and young faculty to obtain good housing.

"I think we'll work out the legal problems — probably by September 1975," he said in a conversation with two reporters. The second reporter verified Bromery's comments after Torrey suggested the chancellor had been misquoted.

Bromery's statements about a target date for non-mandatory dorms was praised yesterday by a student leader who said the university stands to lose no matter which way it goes.

"I think he's sincere and I think he means it," Student Government Association Head Richard Savini said of Bromery's target date, adding: "but he also sees that problem about married students."

But Savini, a senior, said Bromery should involve students in an ultimate decision about how to handle the complex dorm residency decision. "They've got to deal with us as equals rather than as some subordinates."

The chancellor suggested having cost of upkeep of the dorms borne by all students instead of just the ones living in the buildings as one possible way to keep up bond payments allow students to live off-campus.

He said that would be "one way to spread the cost so that it doesn't just impact on those that have to live in dorms." He suggested that such a "Universal facilities fee" might amount to about $150 per year per student. There are 23,000 students on campus.

The question of whether mandatory dorm residence was legal was first raised by a campus group called the Student Organizing Project in September.

The group, with a student-funded budget of about $45,000 per year, was created last spring to investigate ways in which UMass students could "organize" to obtain more power over administration decisions, according to SOP member M. Nesta King, 23, of Amherst. The group plans an attempt at unionizing UMass students.

"I think the fact that Bromery has made this kind of statement is clearly a victory for us," she said in an interview yesterday.

"But I think a promise that 'maybe we'll work out legal problems by 1975' is not exactly the kind of promise the students were looking for," she said.

She said Bromery should have made a firm commitment to end the mandatory rule in September, adding, "the university has come to realize that it's going to have to deal with students."

She said she did not "read any promise" into the chancellor's September 1975 goal.

The mandatory dorm requirement became an issue late this week when an attorney hired to represent students at UMass sent a letter to the central administration in Boston charging that the mandatory dorm rule is unconstitutional.

Atty. William M. Dorsch, in a letter to UMass legal counsel William Searson, said:

"On behalf of several (six) students, I am formally demanding recision of the mandatory dormitory residence requirement in effect for persons under 21 years of age at the Amherst campus.

"My clients contend the residence requirement violates their right to equal protection as guaranteed by the United States Constitution," the letter said.

Dorsch cited other cases involving the Louisiana Polytechnic Institute and the University of South Dakota and said mandatory dorm rules were only legal if it could be shown that there is educational value to living in a dorm.

In an exchange at Thursday's press conference, the following sequence of questions by a reporter and answers by Bromery took place:

Q: Do you think living in a dormitory is educational in the same way that attending a university is educational?

Bromery: "It could be."

Q: Do you think it is?

Bromery: "I think it is in some of the dorms."

Q: Not in all of them?

Bromery: "Not in all of them."

Outstanding soprano to present free recital

The outstanding soprano Rita Beatie will present a recital of German Romantic lieder in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College at 8 tonight sponsored by the German Departments of Amherst College and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The recital is open to the public without charge. Accompanied by Gerald Maddox, pianist, Ms. Beatie will sing lieder by Franz Liszt, Richard Strauss, Robert Schumann and Gustav Mahler.

She has appeared many times in concert and recital in the Boston and Denver areas, and now resides in Cleveland, where she is a teacher and performer.

A native of Colorado, she holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Colorado, where she also did graduate work. For the past four years she has been studying with Eleanor Steber in New York, and also studies opera with Dr. Robert K. Evans in Cincinnati.

Beatie currently is preparing a recital program which she will be performing in Town Hall in New York next March. Gerald Maddox, holds both bachelor's and master's degrees from the Cleveland Institute of Music and is well-known in the Cleveland area as an accompanist.

UMass chorale season labeled busiest ever

The UMass Chorale is in the midst of their busiest concert season ever, according to Chorale Manager Phil St. Cyr.

In the next five weeks the Chorale will perform in five concerts, as opposed to the usual two per semester.

"We've had so many requests to perform that we've actually had to turn some people down, for lack of time," stated St. Cyr.

To begin with, a performance of Schoenberg's "Survivor from Warsaw" with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra tomorrow at 7 p.m. in Springfield Symphony Hall will feature the men of the Chorale and men from the University Chorus.

On the following Sunday, November 24th, the entire Chorale will perform selections from Handel's "Messiah" as part of the 10:30 a.m. service at College Church in Northampton. This performance will be repeated on Sunday, December 8th at the Belamy School in Chicopee at 1 p.m. A token admission of one dollar will be charged at the Belamy School.

Returning home, the Chorale will give two performances in Bowker Auditorium of Stockbridge Hall. One, on Thursday, December 5th, will be in conjunction with the University Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Prof. Ronald Steele, and will feature the Bach Cantata "A Mighty Fortress".

New energy committee appointed by Bromery

By ROBERT F. SULLIVAN
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph Bromery has appointed an Energy Conservation Committee to follow up on suggestions made by a similar committee last year and to further develop a campus-wide conservation program.

Professor J. Edward Sunderland, chairman of last year's committee has been reappointed to the body. He believes a public awareness campaign and suggestions for improved use of energy technology are vital functions of the committee's work. "Wasted energy is a main contributor to economic problems in the country," he said.

Commenting on this year's shortened intercession, Sunderland said that decision was made independently of the Energy Committee, and that he discourages "closing things down just to save energy."

Sunderland recommended a complete changeover from incandescent to flourescent lighting, as one important energy saving measure. A drop in office and dorm temperature to 65 degrees would save 10 per cent of the university heating bill, he predicted.

Sunderland also favors the purchase of an infrared detection system which would indicate overheated buildings. Sunderland estimated the cost of such a system would range from $5,000 to $20,000.

Chancellor Bromery approved the main points of the 25 page report submitted by the EEC last year, Sunderland said, but the lack of sufficient manpower stood in the way of full implementation.

Foundation awards UMass study grants

The National Science Foundation awarded a $58,200 grant to the University to support a 24-month project entitled "Chemistry of Anorthosites and of Model Parent Liquids, Main Complex, Labrador." Principal investigator will be Stearns A. Morse of the Geology Department.

The National Science Foundation also awarded a $55,200 grant to the University to support a 24-month project entitled "Studies in Parallel Computation." Principal investigator will be Harold S. Stone of the Electrical and Computer Engineering Department.

The national Institute of Child Health and Human Development awarded a $19,278 grant to the University to support a project entitled, "Reproductive Time Loss through Marital Disillusion." Principal investigator will be Dr. David Yaukey.

The Canon F-1. Images are what it's all about.

Photographic equipment can be a trap. Sometimes, you can get so involved with it that you lose sight of your real purpose—making photographs.

The Canon F-1 can help you forget about equipment and concentrate on images. It was designed, and functions, as an extension of your photographic vision. It's responsive in a way that you must experience to appreciate.

And since it was conceived as a system camera, every part works together with effortless smoothness, from the more than 40 Canon FD and FL lenses to the over 200 accessories.

The heart of the camera is it's central spot metering system. With it you can use anyone's exposure system, no matter how critical, since it only measures the central 12% of the finder area—regardless of the focal length used.

So if you're spending too much time lately worrying about your equipment, it's time you stopped, and took a good look at the Canon F-1 system, and Canon's other fine cameras—the automatic, electronic EF, the full-feature FTb, and the TLb. If you're interested in images, Canon's your camera.

Letters to the editor

Ziff responds to AcAffairs letter

To the Editor:

We are delighted that the Committee on Academic Affairs has taken an interest in the development of Journalistic Studies on this campus.

However, for that interest to be translated into constructive proposals, we feel it is essential that your committee and the Journalistic Studies students on this campus gather reliable information about the measures you propose to discuss at the meeting Monday, Nov. 18.

The purpose of this letter is to give you some of that information and ask that it be made available to those attending the meeting. We sincerely regret that you have not asked for faculty participation in the meeting. Just as faculty decisions are best made with student input, so student deliberations should not take place in the dark or illuminated only by rumor and conjecture.

Therefore, we ask the opportunity to answer questions and speak briefly at the meeting.

The Journalistic Studies Program of the English Department is undergoing growth pains, not slipping into senility after a golden age. There has been no golden age of journalism on this campus. On the contrary, in the past two decades, while journalism programs flourished on scores of campuses across the country, while courses, departments and schools were being created, journalism languished on this campus.

During most of the 1960s the Journalistic Studies faculty was composed of two faculty members who actually opposed introduction of professional journalism courses.

A key instrument in frustrating the growth of journalism here was the double major. The man who designed it, Professor Arthur Musgrave, has repeatedly made the point that this was one of his goals in designing the double major. He has said he conceives of Journalistic Studies as primarily a social science, devoted to the academic study of the press and not worthy of a full major or professional courses.

In the past three years, substantial changes have been made, despite financial pressures that normally would inhibit growth.

In those years professional courses have been introduced, including newswriting, advanced reporting, political reporting and photojournalism. Two new members of the faculty have been recruited. Adjunct faculty members were appointed including two Pulitzer Prize winners, a Black and a woman. A typewriter-equipped newsroom has been established. Enrollment has grown from less than 100 a semester and fewer than 100 majors to more than 350 a semester and more than 225 majors. Despite the small numbers of the faculty, community involvement was significantly increased, in advising of community-action newspapers and placing students in internships with community and governmental groups. The new faculty also set a new level of scholarly and professional publication not approached in the past.

The goal has been simple, supported by Prof. Joseph Frank, head of the English Department and publicly stated -- to create a journalism major on this campus. The old philosophy that journalism is not a proper academic activity has thus changed. The program is now based on the notion that journalism is not merely a service to be offered to any and all majors, but also a subject unto itself -- a craft whose subject matter is infinite but whose techniques of critical learning and application are specific.

In order that journalism grow to a full major, the new director, Prof. Ziff, saw that it should no longer be tied to the double major scheme. That scheme required that a student take a full major in some other department and only 15 credits in journalism. Prof. Ziff felt that this plan perpetually inhibited the growth of journalism, just what Prof. Musgrave has boasted it was designed to do.

Unfortunately the journalism faculty and facilities are not now large enough to create a full, 30-credit major. But there was room for a significant step to be taken toward that major. This was achieved by the requirement that the Journalistic Studies-English major be established as the track toward a journalism major.

There are several reasons for this advance over the old system that perpetually inhibited journalism's growth. Two key reasons are:

1. Journalistic Studies in a program under the English Department. In order to grow it can go through English Department channels to add courses to the major and still not add hours to the total burden the students must take for a major. The student who desired the old double major under another department typically would be required to take a 45-hour minimum for his major. Under the J.S.-English major, he has to take only 33 hours of required courses.

2. English courses can be combined with journalism courses most nearly to achieve what a journalism education should try to achieve -- development of the critical information gathering and writing capacities of the student. This is not to say that a journalist would not benefit from courses in philosophy, political science, history or any of scores of other disciplines taught on campus. It is to stress, rather that the essential goal, learning how to analyze, criticize and synthesize, is best achieved compatibly in a J.S.-English major.

The new requirements do not achieve the final goal -- that of a freestanding major. But they are preferable to the old system, because they leave room for growth in journalism offerings without adding still more required hours to the 45 hours typically required under other double major schemes.

Many misconceptions are abroad about the new requirements. It should be stressed therefore that the new requirements were not pushed through in secret but presented to the relevant English Department committee, debated and approved, and then debated and approved at a departmental meeting. It is unfortunate, but not relevant, that the meeting was not fully attended. Departmental meetings generally aren't.

It also should be pointed out that the recent growth in journalism does not mean that non-majors will not be permitted to enroll in journalism courses. Of the 366 student enrollments in journalism courses this semester, more than 180 are non-majors.

Nor does the new requirement mean that journalism students will not be taking courses in political science, history, philosophy, or in any other department on campus. The effort has been to clear more elective hours so that the student may take more such courses, not fewer.

We invite student participation in an effort to take the next step in journalism education -- growth to a full, free-standing major. We believe the next step should be forward, not backward to the outmoded double-major system.

I am going to get my money back

To the Editor:

Last October [1973] my car was unjustifiably towed. So I went though all the proper channels in an attempt to retrieve the $15.00. I lost to Amherst Towing. The Parking Appeals Board decided at the beginning of the Spring semester to grant my appeal. However, the appeal didn't cover the tow fine--only the ticket [nobody told me that if the ticket was given wrongly that the tow fine still would not be lifted unless explicitly stated on the appeal form].

So again, in Feb. 1974, I appealed my case. I must have called the head of the Appeals Board two times a month until the last day of classes to find out what was being done. Each time I was promised that it would be taken care of within the next few weeks. Bullshit!

Now it is the Fall semester and still nothing has been done. But the story has changed a bit. The new head of the Appeals Board--Joseph DiCarlo has been very helpful. First of all, my appeal was lost and I had to file still another plea. This done, Mr. DiCarlo took prompt action in seeing that the appeal was granted. However, the money I deserve must come from somewhere in the depths of Whitmore. Money has been allotted for cases such as this. But Whitmore doesn't like to give out this money; even though it's legally mine. They would much prefer to give you a big run-around such as: "Well, why don't you call Mr. X; it's not our dept." When you call Mr. X he tells you that the only person who can help you is Mr. Y who then sends you to Mr. Z...until you finally end up back at Mr. X. Sounds like fun, huh? It usually works well in discouraging people from pursuing their cases.

I'm not going to give up trying for my money though. But I don't think it's right that Whitmore should refuse to let go of money that doesn't really belong to it in the first place. All I want to know now is when am I going to get my money?

Abusing the library facilities

To the Editor:

I am frequently amazed these days at the conduct of my fellow students! We have a huge library and though it is admittedly a rather obscene structure, it can be a valuable tool to the education of whatever form each of us wishes to pursue. I find it terribly discouraging to seek out a much needed book only to find that it is missing or has been stolen, or to hunt for half an hour in the dismantled periodical stacks for a volume that contains an article critical to a term paper only to discover that some thoughtless, lazy student could not spare the time to read or copy the article and had resorted to tearing it right out. Who the hell is ruining the efficiency of a potentially good library? No wonder Amherst, Smith and Hampshire students are leery of the UMass student using their library! Will we have to buy all the books we need for classes? Will we have to pay higher fees or taxes to keep the library in good working order? Will it someday be necessary to close the stacks to the students, as has been done in the past, in order for our library to be more effective? Must we someday sacrifice the pleasure of browsing? We may be asking for such restrictions we have learned to abhor and reject. Consider the possible consequences, do not take for granted the service that the tallest library in the world, or any library for that matter, can offer!

So for Christ's sake, quit stealing or damaging books or magazines! Quit messing up the stacks! Quit being such inconsiderate slobs!

Help Hamlin housing

To the Editor:

We residents of Hamlin House, express concern at our scattering throughout the University because of Hamlin's renovation next semester. We feel that it is to our advantage to be relocated to areas of our own choosing, that have suitable space. This request is the least the Administration should do for us now, since they have turned the other cheek toward us for the past one and one half years.

We hope that the other students of the University stand behind us in our fight to live where we want. These renovations will continue in following semesters to Butterfield and other dorms in Central and Northeast, and we feel that if the Administration pushes the residents of Hamlin House around now, there will be no stopping them from exploiting students in the future.

Arafat speech trouble

By PAUL BRADLEY

The state of Israel is in trouble. Not that it hasn't been under constant stress and turmoil for the past seven years at least, and, for that matter, since it's formation in 1948. But the speech of Yasser Arafat before the United Nations plunges the Jewish State into possibly the most difficult time the nation has seen.

The simple fact that Arafat spoke before the General Assembly is a bone of contention and a root of trouble for Israel. While the Arab nations, who seldom agree on anything, agreed that Arafat and his Palestine Liberation Organization would be their spokesmen in any settlement on the Israeli situation, the Israelis refuse to recognize him or negotiate with him. In their estimation, Arafat is little more than a "cut-throat and a murderer." Some kind of confrontation between a United PLO and an isolated Israel seems to be in store.

In his message, Arafat proposed a "new Palestine" where Jews and Arabs would live side by side in peace. The key factor is that the plan calls for the abolition of the Jewish state, to be absorbed into the "new Palestine." In response to this, the Israeli side reasserted it's sovereignty and said that it wants a "good neighbor" policy between Israel and the Arab nations. One could not expect Israel to agree to the terms set down by Arafat, which amounted to an ultimatum. But the divergency of the two views leaves little room for compromise. Again, some type of confrontation looms ahead.

The response to the Arafat speech by the General Assembly also spells trouble for the Israelis. Arafat was wildly applauded during his speech, and the response definitely was favorable. It seems that the Jewish state has few friends in this matter, the most powerful of which is the United States and that support is wavering.

Over the years the United States has been the best friend that the Israelis have had. Up until last year, the USA almost blindly supported all assertions made by Israel. When Henry Kissinger last year went to Israel to make a peace, it was clearly demonstrated that Israel could no longer depend on the wholehearted support of the United States. Those negotiations were the first time that the United States demanded concessions from Israel in a peace settlement. This was good diplomacy but it was also a realization by the USA of hard economic and social facts.

Like it or not, the United States must retain some type of working relationship with Arab nations because of the increasingly powerful clout of oil. Oil is a powerful diplomatic and economic lever and the United States realizes this. We cannot realistically afford to go completely against the Arabs in our support of Israel.

The United States also cannot turn their backs on the Israelis who have long depended on us for support and friendship. But Israelis can expect a cutback in that support. Perhaps not from a military standpoint, but rather from an ideological point of view. Peace is in the interests of all nations, but if another war breaks out, which unfortunately seems likely, the United States will probably choose to remain neutral. Domestic political considerations will keep the USA from totally abandoning Israel, as well as the moral implications of sticking by a friend. But Israel may have to go it pretty much alone in future conflicts.

Arafat called for Jews to abandon the "Zionist ideology" which he said would lead to "perpetual bloodshed, endless war, and continuous thralldom." Supposedly he will administer this if the Israelis don't come around to his way of thinking. After all, he was wearing a pistol strapped to his hip while he made his speech. This makes one believe that the "good neighbor" policy proposed by Israel may, unfortunately, be little more than wishful thinking.

A Third Reich mentality

To even the not-so-astute observers, it becomes clear that there is no love lost in international relations. Nations, in dealing with one another, have never assumed motives other than pure materialistic self interest. Although many leaders have espoused idealogies and moralistic justifications, these have been fraudulent to the genuine ideals and principles they pretend to represent. Foreign diplomacy is simply not run that way. It would be a mistake to applaud or even condemn some act since often condemnation hints at a predetermined naive expectation of a disillusioned segment. Men choose not to live in the absence of war, hunger and oppression. It is almost too much to hope for any alternative in a planet overrun by competition — competition for food, fuel, land and development.

Even in this light, the recent annihilation that Israel has received in the United Nations goes further than any reasonable diplomacy. There seems to be a genuine and irrational disdain for Israel looming around the world, that defies normal relations between nations. Yasser Arafat the P.L.O. leader received a royal welcome before the United Nations last week, one that is reserved only for heads of state. After his speech, greeted by frenzied and tumultuous applause, the Israeli representative Josef Tekoah spoke to a half empty amphitheatre — many nations having left in protest. To further muscle the Israelis, the body changed its rules and refused to allow Israel to make any except the most ridiculously brief responses. This has all been unprecedented.

This is not to contend that Arafat should not have been allowed to speak, because despite the terrorism of his Olympic and child killing group, peace can only come about through a direct dialogue of all of the combatants. This is sound diplomacy. It may not be moral but morality and diplomacy are a contradiction in terms.

What becomes painfully apparent, painful because of my natural hesitancy towards its admission, is the fact that the World is still anti-semitic. Israel has long been regarded (unfairly) as an outpost of American Imperialism, especially by the so-called Third World. But despite this, international enmity towards Israel has far exceeded that directed against South Korea, South Vietnam, Spain, Greece (until recently) and even Chile — all of them truly American imperialistic puppets. And Israel has far more democratic much less oppressive systems than these and even the rest of the world. While Arafat promenades with a Fidel Castro who packs a machine gun in his crotch, Israeli Kibbuts people are being blown up by Arab bombs. It doesn't make any sense.

This perverse anti semitism has even surfaced in this country in the person of one half cocked redneck general named Brown who informed us in a manner reminiscent of the Fuehrer himself, that Jewish bankers, newspaper publishers and even the department store owners were leading this country to ruin. The Reich is certainly safe with such dolts as these in command.

What Israel is doing is entrenching herself against the world. The tragedy is that the tensions and feelings have reached a feverish state making rational diplomacy impossible amid the chaos. Israel should withdraw her serious representative to the United Nations and replace him with a second grader, or more fittingly, a kangaroo — who would be better prepared to deal with such an illustrious body. The Bitter remnants of Europes' Nazi-decimated Jewish community can find no peace.

Our throw away culture

"ESSENTIALLY What a University can do is to provide ideas and research and technology advances that make a particular region or state competitive for a while."
President Wood to SGA, Nov. 1974.

The protection of the environment and the better utilization of the natural resources of any country, is the government's responsibility, as well as that of each citizen.

In this society we have become accustomed to drinking coca-cola and throwing the can away. This has become a completely natural habit of day to day American culture. The United States has been a lucky country, as many of the raw materials we use in industry are imported from foreign nations, which, in most cases, have lower market values than most domestic ones. For this reason the U.S. industry is more likely to use raw materials than to recycle them.

With the oil situation we have seen how the prices have gone up and now the same is happening with the sugar. How long is this trend to continue; is there a solution?

A couple of weeks ago, the Christian Science Monitor had an article in which some American visitors explained how in Red China's agricultural industry almost everything is recycled. Even though the Christian Science Monitor doesn't talk about other societies in which recycling is part of better utilization of raw materials, many countries use it. The United States, (paper), Cuba, (paper, glass, metals) and Puerto Rico, (paper, glass) are a few examples that came to mind.

Recycling has two problems to overcome in order to become feasible in this society; one, is to dispose of contemporary American mentality and the second being that economically, recycling has not yet become a good investment. In the first case, obviously, the American culture is pragmatic enough for sudden adaptations. In the second case, it is up to concerned people, as well as civil institutions, (state universities for example,) to begin the process of recycling.

Public academies could be the testing grounds in which massive recycling methods could be carried on with the support of state and-or federal funds. University communities are generally more open-minded to accept and try to implement new ideas.

UMass is a place that has various utilities that could be helpful to implement such proposals. The Physical Plant could build more facilities to recycle dorm and D.C. waste, and off campus students with the collaboration of the housing projects could try to implement the concept into the outside community. For example, people in the town, through civic and church groups could start such programs.

Still not possible due to economical reasons? If the government can subsidize private industry, why could it not subsidize a public interest activity? After all, in other countries, the need to start recycling came with less thought and planning than probably we would need. Why not in Amherst?

Of one thing I am sure: sometime in the future the same machines that cover coca cola cans, will be digging to get them out and reusable.

The consumers are the victims

By BOB FOSTER

The paradoxical world of the energy crisis continues onward confusing more and more "experts" each day. Approximately one year ago, the massive fuel shortage began to seeth across the nation. The future looked hopeless. Rationing plans were being devised by well meaning government agencies. Lines at gas stations were becoming commonplace. Free stamps or steak knife sets disappeared from the retailer's repertoire of sales gimmicks. Prices were climbing in proportion to the rapid drop of the thermometer's mercury.

And so a nation already tolerating inflated food prices and general recession tightened its collective economic belt and tolerated more hardship. Yet merely one year later, normality has become the keyword of the oil industry. "Shortage" no longer exists in the vocabulary of the petroleum executive. Consumption is again being pushed by the industry that cried the crocodile tears of lowered profits just a short time ago.

According to a recent story in New York Times, this "Normalcy" has yet to reach the stages of a massive commercial ploy such as those in the pre-crisis era. The message is far more subtle. Stations are now encouraged to stay open longer; a campaign that indirectly promotes greater sales volume. Experimental stamp and silverware campaigns are again appearing on the "competitive capitalist" market. Consumption is again becoming the keyword of the petroleum industry.

Meanwhile, the White House cries shortage. Gerald Ford pushes a conservative energy policy. Conservation is the governmental focus while the oil companies foster consumption. At this point, only the babbling idiot does not note the contradiction. If the petroleum "oligopolords" yell "BUY, BUY, BUY" with the enthusiasm of college cheerleaders while the Energy Administration screams "CONSERVE, CONSERVE, CONSERVE" with equal volume, who more correctly receives reality?

The case is a classic comedy rating four stars on the evaluative scale. Not since the Marx Brothers or the Three Stooges has there been such blatant miscommunication between the most powerful economic interests and the protectors of those interests.

The government continues to follow the doctrines of the Rockefeller-defined national interest, protecting it with the passion of a cornered hyena. But, someone in the petroleum hierarchy failed to communicate the apparent shift in the interests of the oil companies to the governmental hierarchy. Thus, the American public is now receiving contradictory messages. The government has not caught up to the needs of those it really protects.

Last year, many commentators declared that the crisis was an oligopolistic hoax. Though such a charge may never be truly substantiated, the result of the crisis is sufficient documentation. The desired end was obtained by the means of subtle market coercion. Whether the end justifies the means is up to the discretion of the reader.

A shortage was manufactured. Gasoline prices skyrocketed to approximately twenty cents a gallon more than the norm of one year ago. There they have settled. Now Americans, with typically short memories, are asked to consume as they formerly consumed. The companies reap more profits. The consumer forgets the old prices. A new, more profitable status quo is established. Like magic, in just a single year, the power of oil shows its true magnitude. The consumer is not the king, but the pawn in a game of profit!

The sun never sets on the Physical Plant

Between the hours of four p.m. and eight a.m., the responsibility for the repair for malfunctioning electrical, mechanical and plumbing systems etc. is in the skilled hands of the Physical Plant p.m. men.

Jim Hale and Jerry LaClaire were on the four to midnight shift one quiet Friday night. On a quiet night there might not be any more than seven calls, while on a loud night there can be more than 25.

The first major call of the night on the radio in their Dodge pickup truck directs them to Tobin Hall to stop the water that's splashing from pipes above the ceiling tiles down into a pair of trashcans. In an attempt to stifle the ceiling to trash-can percussion, Jerry borrows a stepladder from the janitor and sticks his head and flashlight into the ceiling, and with his tools temporarily ends the janitors mop vigil. The problem: bad heat mixing box.

An onlooker asks Jerry what caused the leak. "Gremlins," he sighs. What he means is the way to find the cause is to read the intricate, esoteric plumbing systems schematics, but since he's not an engineer, he solves problems by feeling his way around them, not by understanding theory.

One visit, however, did not cure Tobin's neurosis. A janitor, the eyes and ears of the physical plant, has reported another leak. "It infringes on our pride if we can't fix it the first time." says Jerry. Realizing that the problem is so complex that all they can do is administer temporary first aid, Jim says: "We could spend the whole night shaking hands with valves."

These problems are typical during the first two or three years of a building's existance. "Grad Research's going to be a bitch for a while" says Jim.

For Maximum access to all areas, a quartermoon of keys are suspended on a ring dangling from Jerry's belt. The clacking of keys from down the hall always heralds his approach to any trouble spot.

Jerry's a regular p.m. man, while Jim normally works days in the typewriter repair shop. Tonight he needs the extra money. Jim is amazed by Jerry's sidewalk shortcut driving. "I'm sure glad I don't have to drive." he says. "We'd have railings and everything hanging from the truck."

Off to Curry Hicks with a plunger to unplug a drain in the womens room. At the door: "Can we come in" asks Jim. From the showers. "No." Five minutes later. "Is it safe yet?" "No." Finally. "Now?" "Alright". A few hairs are pulled out of the drain and we're in the truck again.

Jerry is in his early thirties, while Jim who is 44 could be mistaken as the younger of the two. Jim, who is divorced, is the father of three children: an eight year old son, a 15 year old daughter and an 18 year old daughter who is studying at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C. Jerry lives with his wife and young children in Hadley.

Womens Phys. Ed. calls in about a dead wall socket in the pool area. While Jerry is testing the power from the fuse box, the socket vomits sparks and fills the room with the pungent odor of burning plastic.

Other calls included replacing a hydraulic door closer at Goodell and opening a cellar door at Lincoln Apts. to allow for the installation of cable T.V.

Good relations with students were mentioned: Jerry praised the students by saying "Never once have we been harassed by students." He added: "We try to be gentlemen to them."

Handling complaint calls was Ed LaSalle at the control board in the Physical Plant Building. After a compalint was logged, Ed would contact Jim and Jerry on the radio with job description and location. Instruments on Ed's Supervisory Data System panel include: Fire and intrusion (Break-ins) alarms, weather monitors and host of miscellaneous dials and lightbulbs.

At midnight, Jim and Jerry filled out timecards and job description forms and called it a night.

...What do YOU want to be when you grow up?

By VIVIAN BROWN
Associated Press Writer

The American school system is designed and maintained as though each of its pupils was destined for Harvard or Oxford.

And the image problem — college degrees are status symbols and vocational training is for second class people — is hurting both American youths and the job market that may be seeking their specific talents.

So says author Muriel Lederer whose book, "The Guide to Career Education," stresses that we need to develop a new attitude: that education should lead to a job. Specifically, we must consider the young person who is unsuited to college or prefers to hitch his talents to vocational or technical training. And we must also recognize the work picture has changed — jobs requiring untrained minds and physical strength have dwindled, whereas jobs requiring advanced education and perfected skills have sizeably increased.

"About 70 per cent of today's 23-year-olds have had no job training in schools and have not completed a college education...yet nearly 80 per cent of all jobs available in the United States requires some vocational or technical skill..." she maintains. For example, six to ten technicians are needed for every medical doctor.

Mrs. Lederer, of Winnetka, Ill., who was graduated from Vassar, wrote the book in an effort to provide information that will increase the options open to students who are looking for paths to higher education outside a standard four-year baccalaureate program. It may also help women who want to enter the job market, college graduates who may need a skill to enter job competition and older people who are looking for second careers. Mrs. Lederer has written and researched more than 400 articles on such subjects as schools, financing and working women.

She faults both schools and parents for ignoring the real needs and letting thousands of high school graduates each year enter the labor market with no skills.

The possession of a college diploma doesn't guarantee competence, happiness, success or personal adjustment, she points out. It may even be a big waste of time for some and not even a guarantee of success for many.

Everybody is looking for the place in adult life to which they are best suited. This can materialize only when they match their aptitudes, abilities and interests with job requirements, regardless of the social status of the job in question. But vocational schools have changed and more than 3 million students from every type of family now attend them, she says.

Her exhaustive treatment of career education — the post high school training one receives in preparation for a chosen occupation — includes advice on precautions necessary in choosing an accredited school, financial aid and scholarships by states, the alternatives to a college education — apprenticeships, home study, private, trade, technical and business schools, junior and community colleges.

Each job category notes the education and training needs, points to consider before getting into the field, and where one can get additional information about the specific job.

The stigma of vocational education is steadily fading now, though slowly, Mrs. Lederer asserts. The scarcity of jobs for graduates, especially those in the liberal arts, is encouraging many young people to switch to vocational training after high school.

Now that Halloween is over and your poor lonely pumpkin is just sitting on a table or some steps (if it hasn't been smashed or jack-o-lanterned), we have a quick, sweet bread you can make it into. To go with it we have a spice tea that is great any cool Autumn night, and makes a large quantity.

SPICED PUMPKIN BREAD

Equipment:
Large bowl, spoon, baking pan and oven
Ingredients:
3 c. flour
1 tsp. baking soda
1 tsp. salt
3 tsp. cinnamon
1 tsp. cloves
1½ c. sugar
2 c. cooked pumpkin
2 beaten eggs
1½ c. shortening or oil
½ chopped nuts

Place flour, sugar and spices in a bowl. Mix together. Add pumpkin, beaten eggs, oil and nuts. (Pumpkin should have been boiled until soft and then mashed with fork.) Stir together until all ingredients are thoroughly blended. Pour into large bread pan and bake at 350 degrees for 1 hour.

SPICE TEA

Equipment:
large jar with cover
Ingredients:
1-18 oz. jar of Tang
three-fourths c. instant tea (as Nestea)
1 c. sugar (or as much as desired or can substitute honey, when serving)
1 tsp. cinnamon
1 tsp. cloves
dash of salt

Shake all ingredients together in a large jar and add boiling water to two tsps. of tea for each cup.

The bread should come out incredibly moist. Make sure you test it with a fork before taking it out of the oven. You can do this by inserting fork into the center of the bread and if it comes out without any crumbs on it, the bread is done. It is a relatively inexpensive treat, except for the sugar. The tea recipe is one to treasure for always, and when put in a nice jar makes a great Christmas gift.

HELP!

We are looking for UMies who have had an interesting experience either on or off campus, and who want to tell us about it on the Life-Style page.

We are looking for people who want to write feature articles, what about that boa down the hall, for instance.

We are looking for people with interest in doing graphics or cartoons for the page.

Got an idea? Tell us. No reasonable offers refused. Here is your chance to see your name in print. Wouldn't your mother be impressed?

Experience? Not necessary. You get the idea, we'll help you write the story. You wanna write the story, we'll give you the idea.

Don't go through life thinking no one needs you.

LIFE-STYLE NEEDS YOU!

Parking fines seen as more valuable elsewhere

"There hasn't been a large number of complaints...other than with lot 50," Johnston said. "Students have better places to put their money than into towing charges and parking fines," Johnston said.

"If in fact the lots become overcrowded we will go back to our ticketing stance," the campus security chief said.

While Johnston has verbally passed down the policy of no-enforcedment to his officers, according to sources, campus Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has apparently been unaware of the no-enforcement as recently as last Thursday.

At a press conference that day, Bromery was asked if all parking regulations were being enforced. He replied:

"I would assume so," he said, adding, "I'm sure they are."

Bromery's lack of awareness of Johnston's policy would appear to indicate a lack of communication between his Dept. of Public Safety and the Whitmore administrators who oversee the program.

"I haven't thought it necessary to send memos around to everyone in Whitmore," Johnston said. "The Department of Public Safety thinks that with a cooperative venture from the public we can get by without writing hundreds of tickets," he added.

"That was the gamble that we took in September -- and we've been right for the most part," he said. "Not everyone agrees with me that when people are given the chance to park properly, they will," he said.

Blueprint of the Natural Way to Walk. Exersoles® by Thom McAn

FREEDOM FOOT:
NOTE HOW THE SHAPE OF THE EXERSOLE TOE FOLLOWS THE NATURAL CONTOURS OF YOUR FIVE TOES. NO TOE CRAMP-NO WAY. FREEDOM CAN BE SO IMPORTANT.

THE REAL THING:
THIS IS THE SHOE THAT IS IN SO MUCH DEMAND TODAY BY NATURE LOVERS EVERYWHERE. IT'S THE EXERSOLE BY THOM McAN. IT'S THE REAL THING.

NATURAL LEATHER:
YOUR FOOT NEEDS TO "BREATHE" (NATURALLY). THERE'S NOTHING LIKE REAL LEATHER TO GIVE YOUR FOOT NATURAL COMFORT AND SUPPORT.

ROCKER SOLE:
WHEN YOU WALK YOUR WEIGHT SHIFTS ALONG FROM HEEL TO TOES. THIS EXERSOLE ROCKER SOLE TAKES THE WEIGHT IN STRIDE AND HELPS GIVE YOU NATURAL TOE "SPRING". LESS TIRING.

LOWER HEEL:
NO RAISED HEEL TO SHOCK YOUR LEG AND SPINE. THIS LOWER HEEL ABSORBS THE HEEL GROUND-CONTACT SMOOTHLY... LIKE WHEN YOU WALK BAREFOOT ON SAND. LESS SHOCK. LESS TIRING.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 18 — Born today, you have many of the character traits it takes to be a real success in whatever you undertake: talent, imagination, a gift for selecting goals commensurate with your ability, and so on. However, you lack determination. You become discouraged too easily. You are inclined to accept as the last-word failure's first halting syllable, and to look upon a single setback not as a symptom of something being wrong but as some sort of license to continue to fail.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Advancement along the lines of maximum effort may well be yours by day's end. Don't allow yourself the luxury of slackening the pace.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Take care that you don't force the issue of advancement. To do so might mean to forfeit your chances — which are now good.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Don't allow another's ill-thought-out suggestion to take hold. Now is the time to encourage group action rather than individual enterprise.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Be diligent in your work during the daylight hours and you will have time and energy left for play after the sun goes down. Recognize your goal.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Several dreams of long-standing approach fulfillment early in the day. The only thing that can keep you from success today is your own stubbornness.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Daylight hours are highly productive — if you have had the foresight to gather your facts and figures together in preparation for the right moment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Several opportunities make themselves known during morning hours; only one of them, however, can really make any difference to your future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Influential contacts with "friends of a friend" can make this a highly successful day — when looked back upon from some time in the future.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — New job opportunities may not be as desirable as they appear on the surface. Take your own ability to get along with people into account when deciding.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You can gain your ends as much through your own personal contacts as through the influence of those outside your circle. Trust yourself!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Business or professional contacts must be made at once if they are to prove as beneficial as you think they will. Give another the benefit of the doubt.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Worthwhile gains are to be had by the Libra who is willing to give a little to gain a lot. A job opportunity enlivens afternoon and evening.

Boston teach-in Saturday

Alliance-sponsored busing teach-in tomorrow

Progressive News Service

The Progressive News Service is the result of many people's need for free access to the media on a regular busis. Anyone who wishes to write an article or a series of articles, should submit them to the Progressive News Service, c-o Veteran's Coalition in the Student Union, second floor.

A busing teach-in sponsored by the Amherst Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression will be held tomorrow night on campus.

The teach-in is an attempt to bring together various members of the community to provide a picture of what's really happening in Boston and to suggest ways in which racism at UMass can be combatted, according to organizers.

The teach-in will be at 8:15 p.m. in the School of Business Administration auditorium, rm. 120.

The teach-in will focus on Boston, but will also concern itself with the problems of racism on our own campus. Some of the questions that will be looked at are: What is the Racial Imbalance Act?; Who is initiating the violence in Boston? - the role of the Ku Klux Klan, the American Nazi Party and the Boston School Committee will be looked at in terms of their aggravation of mounting racial tensions in Boston; and finally, who profits from the violence, and how?

The teach-in will consist of a multi-racial panel of people from Boston, including High school students and community leaders, who will bring their experiences and perspectives on the situation, and answer questions. Members of the panel will include:

—Victor Texeira, a Cape Verdean student being bused from Dorchester to the predominantly white Roslindale H.S. Victor is working with other black students to develop a program to deal with racism in the Boston Schools.

—Linda Laurence, a white student from Hyde Park H.S. and an organizer of the Bi-racial Committee. Linda travelled to Charlotte, N.C. recently with several other Boston students to learn about the problems that another city school system has faced in successfully desegregating its schools. The trip was financed by concerned Charlotte students.

—Don Halfkenney, a black man active in the Boston School Movement for over a decade, fighting for quality education. Don will bring an historical analysis of the Boston school system to the teach-in.

—Pat Bonner-Lyons, a black mother, one of the original initiators of Proposition 7 (Community control of the schools and parent-teacher participation in the School Committee). She ran twice for the Boston School Committee and is active in the educational Task Fooce.

UMass student Michele Frank will act as moderator for the evening.

The Task Force, also announced a statewide demonstration in support of desegregation and against the racist violence in Boston next Saturday, at 2 p.m. on Boston Common. UMass students should congregate at the Common's bandstand at 1:30 p.m., so that we can march together in support of students in Boston.

A meeting is scheduled for Wed. Nov. 20 at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center (Check schedule for room No.) for all interested students.

UMass vets debate amnesty in Greenfield high school

By CHRIST SMALLIS
Progressive News Service

Representatives of the UMass Veterans' Coalition debated the question of amnesty recently at Greenfield High School with representatives of the American Legion before an assembly of 150 students.

Joseph Cotter and Charles Atwood, Vietnam era veterans and members of the Veterans' Coalition, argued in favor of unconditional or blanket amnesty.

Robert Malone and Ed Horton, members of John J. Galvin Post 81 in Greenfield, and District 2, Dept. of Mass. officers, argued for amnesty on the condition of individual case review.

Horton began by saying that individual case review would be the fairest way to deal with draft resisters and deserters.

He said, "During the Roberts Court, set up in 1949 by President Truman, to deal with WWII draft resisters, over 15,000 were tried, with just under 2,000 of them being granted pardons."

He said Owen Roberts, chairman of this draft review board, "was in the beginning a proponent of blanket amnesty, but when the review board had finished its business, he advocated individual case review."

He said over two and one-half million men were drafted into the armed forces during the Vietnam era, and millions more volunteered. More than 95 per cent served honorably, he added.

He summed the Legion's stand on blanket amnesty by quoting from a magazine article written by Cong. John P. Murtha of Pennsylvania, saying, "If we have not paid our men in uniform enough, or have not provided our veterans with enough post-war compensation, we have at least always honored them for their service to our country, and I will not dishonor them — and their widows and families — by supporting general amnesty."

Charles Atwood recounted the history of growing U.S. involvement in Vietnam, stating that this country became actively involved during the Eisenhower years, "without the knowledge or the consent of the American people."

He said during the sixties, when U.S. troops in Vietnam numbered more than 500,000, more and more people began to question both the morality and the legality of the war.

"With the release of the Pentagon Papers," he said, "these people had their suspicions confirmed that their government had been in fact feeding them a pack of lies."

He said that until 1970, conscientious objector status was a very difficult thing to obtain. The Supreme Court in this year eased the regulations governing this status, and many more people became eligible for it.

However, he said, those drafted before 1970 who would have been eligible under the new rules may have felt shortchanged. He added that some of these men either evaded the draft or deserted due to acts of conscience.

Joseph Cotter presented a history of amnesty in the U.S. with emphasis on the general amnesty granted by President Andrew Johnson on Christmas Day, 1868.

He said on this day, Johnson granted a full pardon to those who "were even convicted of treason against the United States."

"If a blanket amnesty could be granted to these people," he added, "then why can't the same thing be granted to those who acted out of their own moral obligations?"

Cotter and Atwood stated that colleges and universities became places of refuge to those who could afford to go but who, under different circumstances, would otherwise not have gone. Thus, they said, the burden of the draft fell mostly on the poor.

Women volleyball team visits Smith

The UMass Women's Volleyball Team will play its last match of the season tonight at Smith College. Pre-game warm-up will be at 6:45 with the match beginning at 7:00 p.m. The match will be an exhibition best three-out-of-five games for the varsity team, followed by a junior varsity best two-out-of-three match. Smith College defeated UMass at the Mt. Holyoke Invitational Tournament on November 9.

The varsity team has a 6-6 record coming into this evening's match. Most recently, they participated in a Tri-meet at Southern Connecticut State College. After losing the first game to the University of Bridgeport by a score of 15-6, UMass came back to win the next two games, 15-5, 15-5. Regional championship-bound Southern Connecticut proved too much for UMass as they won 15-2.

Notice

A lecture on National YMCA Aquatic Programs will be held on Tuesday, Nov. 19, 5-6 p.m. in No. Physical Education Building. The speaker is David Anderstrom, YMCA Aquatic Instructor and a UMass student. He will cover topics on description of 'Y' courses; requirements and areas of instructor certification and opportunities for employment in 'Y' programs. Majors in Physical Education and Leisure Studies, as well as water safety instructors and others interested in all aquatic areas are urged to attend. For further information, call Prof. Esther Wallace, North P. E. Bldg. 5-2324.

Announcement

Important meeting for all second semester student teachers in Physical Education on Tuesday, Nov. 19 at 7:30 p.m. in Room 153, North P. E. Building. Attendance is mandatory to secure placements.

The UMass Bike Club held two bike races on a one-and-a-half mile course at Orchard Hill on Sunday. The Novice race was won by Tom McHenny and the ABA race by Doug Dale.

Orr's two goals pace Bruins to 5-2 decision over Red Wings

DETROIT [UPI] - Bobby Orr matched Detroit's two-goal output and Phil Esposito added a score with the Boston Bruins a man short Sunday night to turn a close National Hockey League game into a 5-2 Boston win over the Detroit Red Wings.

Detroit's Nick Libett scored his second power play goal of the game at 15:29 of the second period to tie it 2-2 before Esposito turned a Detroit advantage into a distinct disadvantage with his 16th goal, high in the league this season.

The Red Wings were working on a four-minute stretch with a man advantage because of a double minor called on Bruin Dave Forbes when Libett scored. But Boston's Gregg Sheppard took the puck from two Detroit players, fed it to Esposito and he fired a long shot from left wing to break the game open.

Forbes got the clincher at 3:43 of the third period when he put his fifth goal of the season off Jim Rutherford's left leg as the Detroit goalie lay sprawled on the ice.

Notice - PE majors

The second meeting of the Physical Education Majors Organization will be held Thursday, November 21, at 7:30 p.m. in the Lounge of North Physical Education Building.

We are going to finalize plans for a faculty-student gathering, hear from student representatives on departmental committees and develop plans for future opportunities for student input.

All majors are welcome.

College powers bid for bowls

[UPI] — The stage is set for the opening and closing act of the Big Ten Football Season at Columbus, Ohio, next Saturday.

Second-ranked Michigan and third-ranked Ohio State each prepped for their annual showdown with victories Saturday. The Wolverines humiliated Purdue 51-0, while the Buckeyes rebounded from their upset loss to Michigan State the previous week to down Iowa 35-10.

At stake in the Columbus showdown is the Big Ten berth in the Rose Bowl, although unbeaten Michigan currently holds a one-game lead in the conference race. However, Ohio State is expected to be favored at home and a Buckeyes victory would create a tie for the Big Ten title.

The Pacific-8 Conference berth in the Rose Bowl also will be decided this week when Southern California and UCLA meet as each team kept its hopes alive with victories Saturday.

The Trojans' Anthony Davis set a couple of Pac-8 records in USC's 42-11 triumph over Washington. Davis scored his 46th and 47th career touchdowns, a Pac-8 record, and ran for 147 yards to become the conference's first three-time, 1,000-yard rusher. UCLA, meanwhile, topped Oregon State 33-14 to remain a game behind the Trojans in the Pac-8 standings with a chance to tie things up in the Los Angeles Duel.

The third major bowl bid up for grabs, the Southwest Conference's representative in the Cotton Bowl, remained unsettled as Texas A&M, Texas and Baylor each won Saturday.

Texas A&M romped over Rice 37-7, while surprising Baylor bounced Peach Bowl-bound Texas Tech 17-10, ending the Red Raiders' own hopes for the SWC title. Texas, which fell out of the Top 20 last week, went after TCU with a vengeance and the result was an 81-16 embarrassment for the Horned Frogs.

Top-ranked Alabama and No. 4 Notre Dame preserved the Orange Bowl's claim as the top post-season attraction this season, although the Irish needed Tom Clements' three-yard scoring plunge with 2:49 left in the game to pull out a 14-10 victory over visiting Pittsburgh. An upset victory would have locked up a Liberty Bowl berth for the Panthers.

Alabama, meanwhile, built a 21-0 halftime lead and coasted to a 28-7 victory over Miami (Fla.). Richard Todd lobbed two touchdown passes in the first six minutes of the game as the Crimson Tide ran their record to 10-0 for the season.

However, Florida lost its second straight game since accepting a Sugar Bowl invitation as the Gators were upset by Kentucky 41-24, the Wildcats snapping a 24-24 tie with 17 points in the final quarter.

Another bowl-bound loser was Oklahoma State, headed for the Fiesta Bowl, which was dumped by visiting Colorado 37-20.

Georgia, which also was in pursuit of a Liberty Bowl invitation, fell short of upsetting No. 5 Auburn 17-13. The Tigers have accepted a Gator Bowl bid.

No. 6 Nebraska, headed for the Sugar Bowl, defeated Kansas State 35-7 as David Humm threw two touchdown passes. But the Cornhuskers' big game comes next Saturday when they meet undefeated Oklahoma, which is prohibited from a bowl appearance by an NCAA probation.

Plunkett picked off four more times

Stumbling Pats drop to Jets

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — Joe Namath threw two touchdown passes and Roscoe Word's interception with less than two minutes left to play Sunday, the fourth Jet pickoff of the game, lifted New York to a 21-16 win over the crumbling New England Patriots.

The Patriots, who had blown several second half opportunities to turn the contest around, got one last chance when Jack Mildren intercepted a Namath pass at the Jets 30 yard line with just two and a half minutes left. The Patriots moved to the New York five and were pushed back to the eight before Jim Plunkett's pass, intended for Randy Vataha, was intercepted by Word in the end zone.

A 43-yard pass attempt with no time remaining just slid through Eddie Hinton's hands to choke off the Patriots' final gasp.

The Jets had seen a 14-3 halftime edge dissolve to a one-point margin at 10:53 of the third period on the second of John Smith's three New England field goals.

But Namath found David Knight in the right corner of the end zone from 34 yards out at 14:18 of the third period to put the Jets ahead. The bomb, like an 11-yard first period scoring pass to running back Bob Burns, was thrown over the Patriots' Pentice McCray.

Smith, who earlier had kicked field goals of 32 and 44 yards, brought New England to within 21-16 with a 35-yard boot at 10:15 of the final period.

The Jets grabbed a 7-0 lead 11:27 into the opening quarter on Namath's slip to the rookie Burns in the left corner that was set up by a short Patriot punt.

Smith closed the gap at 3:07 of the second period from 32 yards out but Emerson Boozer put New York up 14-3 at 12:37 of the same period.

The Patriots, who now have lost three straight and four of five since winning their first five games, were hurt by two first half interceptions by Delles Howel. Howell left the game in the third period with an ankle injury as did Patriots' guard John Hannah and running back Sam Cunningham.

Cunningham gained 113 yards and had brought the Patriots to the Jets five late in the game before getting injured.

New England looked as if it had found the momentum missing in the first half when specialist Andy Johnson returned the opening third quarter kick 95 yards for an apparent touchdown. The play was called back, however, to the New England 31 because of a clip.

On the second play from scrimmage, Cunningham roared 40 yards and a personal foul was assessed, giving New England a first down at the Jets 13. Three plays later Herron swept right for the score as New England trailed by four.

The Patriots blew another opportunity midway through the period when Smith missed from 24 yards. He followed with a 44-yard kick at 10:53 of the period, but before the quarter was out Namath and Knight connected for the winning score.

Miami bags Bills

MIAMI [UPI] — Quarterback Bob Griese, burning the Buffalo defense all day with long passes to Paul Warfield, crossed up the Bills with a draw play which sent substitute fullback Don Nottingham squirting untouched up the middle for 23 yards and a 35-28 Dolphin victory in the final 19 seconds Sunday.

The cliff-hanger victory, which saw Buffalo tie the score twice in the final period, lifted Miami over the Bills into sole position of the American Football Conference East Division lead with an 8-2 record. Buffalo fell into second place at 7-3.

With a 49-yard throw to Warfield for a second-period touchdown and a 54-yard toss to the fleet receiver to set up a third score in the third period, it looked like Griese had put the Dolphins comfortably in front 21-7.

But then Miami developed fumble-itis.

Buffalo's Dave Washington picked up a Mercury Morris fumble and ran it 42 yards to make it 21-14. Moments later, Washington recovered a Nat Moore bobble to set up the third Buffalo score.

Gary Marangi, subbing for quarterback Joe Ferguson who was hurt at the end of the third period, threw a 44-yard scoring pass to J.D. Hill to tie it at 21-21.

Miami came right back, 81 yards in nine plays, with Nottingham running the final 11 yards to put the Dolphins in front 28-21.

But Marangi brought the Bills back 71 yards, throwing to Bob Chandler for the final five to tie at 28-28 with only 56 seconds remaining.

Following the kickoff, it took Griese only 37 seconds and four plays to March Miami 81 yards to victory. Griese threw 31 yards to Warfield and Jim Kiick carried twice for 27 yards to the Buffalo 23. Griese checked off his call at the line when he saw the Bills set up in pass defense and sent Nottingham up the middle through a huge hole.

Linebacker Nick Bouniconti intercepted Marangi's final desperation pass as the game ended.

Spotting Miami a 14-point halftime lead, Ferguson sneaked one yard through the middle to cap a 55-yard, 11-play march for Buffalo's first touchdown with 6:16 left in the third period.

Warfield caught the 54-yard Griese pass in the third period to set up Larry Csonka's six-yard run for his second touchdown of the day. He had scored from the two with 8:16 left in the half, after O.J. Simpson fumbled at the Bill 35 and Tim Foley recovered for Miami.

Share Beanpot with Maine

UMass mangles Wildcats

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

It was the type of strange football game you'd expect to top off an even stranger Yankee Confrence football season.

On a day in Amherst when the wind seemed to gust from all four directions at the same time, a day that was colder than a witches' — — —, UMass upended New Hampshire 27-17, to tie Maine, a team which they annihilated 24-0, for the Yankee Conference championship. It was their first win in four games and evened their '74 slate at 5-5.

And to prove that spilled beans spill better in only two ways, Rhode Island completed the wierd scenario by outlasting UConn 14-13 at Storrs helped by a) a Ray Braszo interception of a Lou Mancari pass in the URI endzone with 51 seconds left, and b) a missed Greg Sinay field goal attempt from the 37 yard line with three seconds left.

The game at Amherst seemed to ebb and flow with the wind. First New Hampshire took advantage of horrendous UMass field position in the first quarter to come out with a 10-0 lead, a margin which could have been higher. UNH took advantage of a windhindered 16-yard John Romboli punt and a 24-yard return by Dave Bettencourt to set up a 12-yard Ed Whalen touchdown jaunt. Then after a 33-yard Romboli quick kick rolled dead at the UMass 41, UNH moved into field goal range and Dave Teggart booted a 35-yard field goal. But in a quarter which saw the Minutemen never cross their own 43, (and that was thanks to a Peter Colton fumble), UNH couldn't take any more advantage of the situation.

The offense had terrible field position throughout the first quarter," said a happy Coach Dick MacPherson after the game. "They only got ten points out of it. It had to be great defense that prevented any more points."

But when the teams changed ends for the second quarter, the winds of fate started blowing in favor of the Minutemen.

Mark Tripucka, who took over from starter Peter Colton late in the first quarter, engineered a 71-yard drive, culminating in a three-yard touchdown plunge by Jim Torrance. The big play in the drive was a 43-yard run over right tackle by Rich Jessamy who appeared to be gone until halfback Mark Etro came out of nowhere and hauled "Jessie" down from behind.

"Jessamy pulled a hamstring in practice Wednesday night. He didn't get in on the play because he pulled it again," said MacPherson in explaining why Jessamy didn't get the "big six."

The Minutemen made it 12-10 on a Tripucka to Torrance dump pass from two yards out with less then a minute left in the half. The Minutemen, in trying to make up for a fumbled snap on the PAT attempt after Torrance's first touchdown, tried a two-point conversion but Tripucka failed to get a decent pass away when he was hit behind the line.

Tripucka performed brilliantly against UNH, completing 11 out of 17 pass attempts for 91 yards and the Torrance touchdown pass. More importantly, he didn't throw a single interception. His performance makes one wonder if Tripucka performs better in games he doesn't start, but comes in off the bench for.

"I was so cold on the beach, I just wanted to get in the game and warm up," said an excited Tripucka in a happy UMass dressing room after the game, and if the result is any indication, as his temperature rose, so did the Minutemen.

UNH moved ahead right after the second half kickoff. Freshman quarterback Jeff Allen hit tight end Bill Wharff for a 27-yard gain to the UMass 35, then fullback Bill Foley took it the rest of the way on two runs of 14 and 4 yards, and two receptions of 12 and 5 yards, the second one for the touchdown.

The Minutemen did nothing in the third quarter, thanks to a tough UNH defense which held UMass to three first downs, out of a game total of 15.

"It was the best New Hampshire defensive team I've seen in my four years here," said a complementary MacPherson. "They really played well."

But the play of the game came neither from the offense nor the defense, but courtesy of the UMass punt return specialty team, from here on in to be known as the Wild Dogs.

Ron Harris, the defensive safety for UMass, fielded a UNH punt at his own seven, got lost in a pack at the twenty-five, at which point everyone thought he was submerged. But then he escaped the pile, cut into the middle behind key blocks by Bill Foner and John Van Buren, and raced untouched into the end zone.

"I was hit but I wasn't rammed, so I turned out of the pile, saw I was open and just ran," articulated Harris after the game.

Since the Colgate game, when Harris ran a punt back 90 yards only to be downed at the seven, more from exhaustion than anything else, Harris "has been going after them with reckless abandon," in the words of his coach.

"That runback against Colgate changed the momentum of our punt return team," said the sophomore. "Now we have the name of the Wild Dogs and we're proud of it."

The punt return turned the game around, but on the ensuing kickoff, Mark Etro almost returned the turn to the Wildcats when he raced 88 yards to paydirt. However, the ball was marked back at the UNH 38, where one of the officials ruled him out of bounds.

From then on UNH seemed too shocked at Harris' heroics to mount any threats. They got a break when they recovered a Jim Torrance fumble on their own 37, but gave it right back when Harris picked off an Allen pass on the very next play to take UMass out of any danger.

The Minutemen than ate up the clock with a ten play drive covering 57 yards, which saw Torrance carry the ball seven times, including a five yard run over the left side of the UMass line for his third touchdown of the game and tenth of the season. The powerful. fullback carried 31 times for 125 yards.

"Ned Deane (left offensive guard) was magnificent. He and Ross Schubarth did a great job of opening holds for Torrance, "said MacPherson. They led him in on his two rushing touchdowns."

The defensive line, especially End Bill Cooke did a great job holding UNH to their 228 yards in total offense. They sacked quarterback Allen five times, and held the conference's third-leading rusher, Dan Losano to a measly net rushing total of 15 yards on ten carries.

UMass came out of the win with a number of injuries, few of which will have any bearing on their preparations for Boston College next Saturday. Gary Mika and John Romboli both suffered concussions, Jerry Mondalto twisted an ankle — that forced John Van Buren to punt once, since Romboli and Mondalto were both hurt and they're the two regular punters — and Rich Jessamy reinjured his hamstring.

And speaking of BC, leave your slingshots at home.

Top eastern teams battle

Harriers run IC4As

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

If today's meet were taking place in the nineteenth century, coach Ken O'Brien might say to his team before the race, "There, my boys, are your enemies, the Friars and Jaspers. You must beat them--for a UMass cross country team may never have this opportunity again."

Although the situation may not be as dramatic, the IC4A meet this afternoon at Van Cortlandt Park in New York is the biggest race of the season so far, as the Minutemen runners will be facing five other nationally ranked teams. "We've been looking forward to this meet since our third place finish a year ago," commendte O'Brien.

Providence, ranked fifth in the cross country poll, is considered the pre-meet favorite. The Friars are led by three Irish runners and captain Tom Smith, with Mike O'Shea being the individual standout. O'Shea finished eighteenth in New York a year ago and recently won the New England individual title.

Manhattan has two top finishers from last year's meet returning. Peter Squires placed third in 1973, while Tony Colon finished fourteenth. Both will be in the race today, and the Jaspers could possibly put two runners in the top five.

Eight-ranked Georgetown has been running well and should be in contention for the team title. Villanova, traditionally a strong team, has had some problems with injuries, but if everyone is healthy, the Wildcats will be tough. Duke, which holds the number twenty spot in the poll, William and Mary, and Heptagonal champion Navy are other top teams this season. Navy features a tight pack of runners, but the weakness of the Midshipmen is that they have no outstanding frontrunners. Penn, which was picked early in the season to win the IC4A title, has had its share of problems and hasn't lived up to expectations.

In running against the top teams in the East, the harriers will be hoping to better last year's third place finish, in which Randy Thomas finished fifteenth and Bill Gillin placed twentieth.

The runners will have to come through with an exceptional team performance, and that will depend on the performances of Tom Maguire, Chris Farmer, Tom Wilson and John Scheer. John McGrail captured fiftieth last season at the IC4A's and the sophomore standout has been running right with teammates Gillin and Thomas at the front of every race.

The harriers are ranked thirteenth going into the prestigious IC4A Championships, and a good showing at the meeting of Eastern cross country powers could be the stepping stone to another chance in the NCAA meet. If the team runs a good race, the only thing standing in the way of a UMass IC4A title will be several strong cross country teams--namely, Providence, Georgetown, Villanova, Manhattan, Navy and Penn. Hopefully for seniors Thomas, Gillin and Wilson, the team will run THE RACE today and earn national recognition. (See photo p. 18)

Officials disagree over parking, towing issue

By LARRY CARPMAN

Two campus officials and a union head took opposing sides yesterday responding to the Collegian story detailing changes in ticketing policy made by the Department of Public Safety.

Robert W. Kittle, a staff associate in Whitmore Hall and chief administrator of the parking system, said yesterday he disagrees with Johnston that tickets and towing are unnecessary to make the plan function.

"Dave (Johnston) and I are on opposite sides of the fence on this issue," he said. "I think that the system, in order to meet the needs of the campus, needs to have its policy enforced.

See related story on page 3

Kittle said he would rather not answer specific questions about enforcement because Johnston asked him at a meeting Friday "that any questions on enforcement be referred to him."

Sargent may enter academia

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Francis W. Sargent will probably take a job in academia when his six-year tenure ends in January.

The governor, defeated for reelection by Democrat Michael S. Dukakis, has not ruled out a political comeback try, however.

Sargent, in an interview with The Associated Press, said yesterday he would "be crazy to rule out" either another run for governor in four years or a campaign for the Senate.

The next Senate campaign in Massachusetts is in 1976 when Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is up for reelection. Kennedy has said he will run.

Registrar Jones says UMass will comply with privacy law

From UPI and Staff Reports

A landmark federal law which for the first time opens up students' confidential files for inspection goes into effect today. UMass will comply with the law, according to Registrar Ralph D. Jones.

The Family Rights and Privacy Act of 1974, originally sponsored by Sen. James D. Buckley (R-N.Y.) has caused legal alarm at the nation's colleges and universities. For instnance, Harvard University said last week it will not release records submitted to a student's file prior to the law which the sender thought would remain confidential.

Some students are already claiming that such "prior restrain" — in effect — was not intended by Buckley's law and would be held illegal in a court test.

There are indications Harvard isn't the only insitution to take such a position. According to UMass registrar Jones, the College Entrance Examination Board has sent material to registrars around the country suggesting such an interpretation.

Jones said yesterday that UMass students have three records: an academic record card (transcript), a counselling folder which is non-confidential and an original admissions folder. Jones said only the original admissions folder has any confidential documents — usually reports from high school guidance counsellors.

"It was not the intention of the law or that of Sen. Buckley that there would be disclosure of previously confidential material," Jones said, adding, "in other words, we will not release it."

"We're taking the view that the confidential document is the property of the sender," he added.

However, Jones said whenever documents are requested by students, the office will send a form letter to the originator of the document — like a guidance counsellor — and ask them to give permission to: a) allow release of the document; b) return it to them; c) destroy it without showing it to students.

"For now if a student wants to see his folder, we'll make an appointment for him to see it and then take out the documents that are confidential," Jones said.

The national law slipped almost unnoticed through the 93rd Congress and its impact on

Starvation campaign campus-wide

The Daily Collegian is beginning today a massive campus-wide drive to solicit money for those people overseas dying of starvation.

Called "Help the Hungry", the Collegian hopes every student on campus will donate one dollar to the campaign. Representatives will be assigned to every dormitory on campus, and they will personally contact students living there for the one dollar donation.

The Global Survival Program and the Student Government Association will be helping the Collegian with the drive.

Money collected will be given to the Oxfam-American, a non-political group which began at England's prestigious Oxford University. All the money will be used to buy food which will be sent directly to those people desperately needing aid.

UMass faculty favors union

By BILL GONET
Staff Reporter

The concensus among the leadership of both the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) and the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) here is that the faculty at UMass Amherst will approve unionization in the near future.

Because of the state legislatures' veto of faculty merit increases and its institution of a mandatory classroom hour requirement, Professor Frank Fata, campaign manager for the MSP-MTA-AAUP in last fall's collective bargaining election said, "the mood this year is more favorable to faculty unionization."

Fata attributed the increase in pro-union sentiment to the faculty's fear of "loss of autonomy reflected by this past summer's legislation."

An election was held in Nov. last year to determine whether the UMass Amherst faculty would accept the MSP-MTA-AAUP as its collective bargaining agent. Of the 1450 faculty members eligible to vote, 718 voted against and 510 voted for the unionization proposal.

Professor Caldwell Ray, vice-president of the local AAUP chapter, said, "We're not sure what's the best time," (to petition for another election) "but we're sure we're going to win."

Professor Loren Beth, president of the local AAUP chapter, attributed last year's defeat of the unionization proposal to an insufficient "level of dissatisfaction" among the faculty. Not as optimistic as other unionization proponents, Beth said, "It (unionization) is something that will come, but not as soon as some think."

He characterized pro-union faculty opinion as a negative reaction to the possibility of being "deprived of things which have made teaching a desirable profession," and cited merit increases, cost of living increases, and classroom hours, as issues about which the faculty is most concerned.

Beth said "most (faculty members) aren't happy about unionization; they feel it's not professional...and introduces a conflict relationship in which everything has to be bargained. But unless we organize, we're going to lose a lot of those things which we value."

The AAUP, a professional organization like the AMA, endorsed collective bargaining as a legitimate tool for achieving goals in 1971 and has functioned much like a labor union since.

The MSP was formed in the late spring of 1972 as the higher education arm of the Massachusetts Teacher's Association, which claims to represent 50,000 public, elementary and high school teachers in the state. The MTA annually receives an estimate $3.8 million in membership dues which it uses to finance lobbying activities at the state legislature.

Early last spring 30 per cent of the UMass faculty signed petition circulars which named the MSP as agents to petition by election for recognition as the faculty's bargaining agent. Two months later both the MSP and the AAUP formed a coalition group, MSP-MTA-AAUP, which would seek recognition as the faculty's collective bargaining agent in the scheduled election.

The merger was made in order to harness the MSP's Beacon Hill lobbying clout to the prestige and influence carried in Amherst by the AAUP's local chapter.

In the ensuing campaign, coalition spokesmen insisted collective bargaining was necessary in order "to achieve legal status" for the following goals: just grievance procedures, tenure, fair treatment of non-tenured faculty, appropriate student participation, and the promotion of the faculty's professional and economic interests.

JS-English upheld by students

By LAWRENCE M. CARPMAN
Staff Reporter

The in-house controversy in the journalism department came out into the open last night when both sides, each represented by faculty and students, discussed the direction of the department and argued over English being the only avenue to a journalism major at a meeting called by the Academic Affairs Committee.

Thirty-five students concentrating in journalism unanimously passed one motion calling for a vocational counselor, and agreed that journalism would only be offered with an English track.

There are approximately 240 journalism "majors" at UMass.

The motions, referred to as advisory votes, were as follows:

1. That journalism "majors" be permitted with any other major of the student's choice. The vote was defeated 18 to 10.
2. That journalism "majors" be permitted only with English majors. The vote was passed 18 to 11.
3. That a new professorship be instituted for vocational counseling and placement. The vote was passed unanimously.

According to Martin Miller, chairperson for the Academic Affairs Committee, the meeting was called to allow students to voice their opinions concerning the vote taken in May which established English as the only track to a journalism major.

Howard M. Ziff, Director of the Journalistic Studies Department, and designer of the new program, said: "I'm glad the vote turned out the way it did."

Meanwhile, Arthur B. Musgrave, a professor in the journalism department, and a long-time advoctate of unlimited options in the selection of the journalistic studies double major, said: "I think the most important thing that came out of the meeting was the vote to request a vocational counselor and placement person."

In his brief remarks at the beginning of the meeting Musgrave alleged "a journalism major will never work out." He added: "If you are going to run a program like the one Ziff advocates you can't place them in jobs."

Musgrave further contends the co-curricular program, which he advocates, is a "highly successful program" for vocational opportunities."

"Professor Musgrave," Ziff charged, "devised the double major purposely to prevent a full journalism major."

Two students at the meeting repeatedly suggested they should not be forced to take English courses if they are interested in journalism specifically.

Dean Tucker, Executive Editor of the Collegian, said: "We're being impeded by two members of the department in establishing journalism as a full major." Tucker added he thought money was also a big problem with the growth of the department.

Another student, referring to the necessity to take English courses for a journalism major, said: "I don't see how studying Milton, Shakespeare and Chaucer can help you interview the mayor or the head of a political party."

Ziff defended his program saying "The key skill of a journalist remains writing and critical comprehension."

At least three students suggested they are being forced to suffer now for the future goal of establishing a full journalism major.

Lawrence Pinkham, Associate Professor in the journalism department, cited the various problems facing the persons at the meeting. "If it's a problem of a lack of student input--that's one problem. But if it's a problem with the program -- I'm dying to get at that question."

"I came here to do something, not to fight the Punic War--which is what we've been doing," Pinkham said commenting on the direction the meeting should take.

Selectmen question dorm residency policy

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

The Amherst Board of Selectmen made plans last night for a meeting with University administrators and town officials to discuss the impact voluntary dormitory residence would have on the town. No date was given for the meeting.

Chairman Michael Sullivan referred to an article in last Friday's Collegian that reported Chancellor Bromery saying the University is moving toward abolishing the dormitory requirement by next September.

"I am concerned with the great impact this would have and am surprised that it comes without advanced warning," said Sullivan.

Sullivan, also a member of the Board of Trustees, said the movement toward changing dorm policy for undergraduates under the age of 21 did not go through "University administration, President Wood's office or the Board of Trustees."

Selectwoman Nancy Eddy said this could have "serious repercussions" and suggested the town "come up with a regional solution because Amherst should not take the entire brunt (of students living off-campus)."

Eddy also said "other cities and towns in the area that benefit economically and culturally should provide some housing. Amherst should not have it's open space gobbled up by apartments."

However, during a break in the meeting Eddy told the Collegian that there was a moratorium on apartment building in Amherst. Zoning by-laws were amended about three years ago which put a damper on new buildings. At present, there is also a state imposed ban on buildings connecting into the sewage system.

Another hindrance to potential developers is that some towns in the area have restrictive zoning districts which prohibit apartment complexes and moderate cost housing, according to Eddy.

The Selectmen said they were not concerned with the issue of optional dormitory residence but with the impact students might have on raising rents.

Selectmen also granted one day liquor licenses to Lewis House for November 23 and Moore House for November 22.

Selectmen held their meeting at Hampshire College instead of their usual meeting place in the Town Hall. The Board has been meeting in various parts of Town.

Married students meet to review, examine budget

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

The Married Student Tenant Association still has a lot of questions to ask the Office of Residential Life. Administrators of Residential Life and Married Student Housing met with the tenants last week but were unable to answer specific questions about the Married Student Housing budget because complete information was unavailable at the time.

"Today we're not here to change anything or bargain," said Patrick Walker of the Tenant Association during Friday's meeting. "We were under the impression that today we would see the budget information, and that's our purpose in coming here," he added.

The tenant representatives asked to see the actual expenses and revenues for Married Student Housing (Lincoln, University, and North Village Apartments) for the past five years. But Roger Cruff, Assistant Director of Residential Life, responded by saying "there isn't one set of pages that show the entire financial picture for married student housing."

"There are no hidden figures, "Cruff told the tenants," but the budget is not in one concrete package. We'll live with whatever data is available."

The administrators were also unable to provide information concerning non-rent revenues in the married student housing budget, including a supposed 386,000 dollar allocation from the state for Debt services on Lincoln and University Apartments.

"At this point I don't really know where that 386,000 dollars belongs," said Roger Cruff.

Tenant Association members called it "a real problem that you do not have a realistic budget, or a realistic account of what expenses are."

Ken Dean, Director of Residential Life, blamed the "problem" on a new accounting system and a departmental transfer. "We have a situation where the man who prepared all of our financial data for a number of years asked to be transferred to another department, and it has caused us some problems." Dean also said that there have been some problems in implementing a new University-wide accounting system. "No trust fund on this campus had all the information they needed," he said.

Dean claims that Residential Life is budgeted correctly, and said this was confirmed in an analysis by the Budgeting Office last October.

Residential Life officials agreed to review their budget this week so they may answer the tenants' questions which include:

1) Budget for the past five years, specifically as relates to non-rent revenues in each housing complex;

2) How a 386,000 dollar debt-service funding came about;

3) Why is North Village losing money? (example: it cost almost $80,000 to build a laundry room there); and

4) Yearly rate of increase on the cost of utilities.

Tenants feel the main question is that of whether married student housing is self-liquidating. "We have always been told that all the monies used in our system were generated by us, and now we're being told its not the case," said strike coordinator Pat Walker. "The implications are that because it's not completely our money, we cannot completely it," he added.

All present at the meeting agreed a more comprehensive breakdown of the budget would provide the answers. A meeting has tentatively been scheduled for Monday, Nov. 25 to discuss the budget.

DVP to present experts on witches, poltergeists

"Haunted Houses and Ghosts" will be the topic of a Distinguished Visitors Program lecture tonight at 8:00 in the S.U.B. Ed and Lorraine Warren, well-known investigators of the supernatural, will discuss documented cases of genuine hauntings, many from the New England area.

The Warrens, both professional artists, began their work with paranormal activities 27 years ago. It was their interest in painting haunted houses which first brought them in contact with the spirit world.

The couple have devoted a lifetime to the study of psychic phenomena. Lorraine is a clairvoyant and Ed is a researcher of the paranormal.

In addition to tonight's lecture, tomorrow in Thompson 104 at 8:00, the Warrens will speak about "Witchcraft and Demonology." Vampirism, lycanthropy, devil worship, witch ceremonies, and the ancient rites of excorcism will be explained.

Ed Warren is considered an expert in this field.

Tonight's program will be followed by a coffee hour in the Colonial Lounge where the Warrens will talk with interested persons about their unusual experiences.

Correction

An article titled "Benefits, hazards, decisions featured in nuclear seminar" on page 3 of Friday's Collegian contained three errors which the subject of the article, Professor Richard E. Webb wishes to correct.

The article read that Congress has not been granted the power to promote manufactures by "public speaking." The story should have read, "public spending".

Secondly, the U.S. Senate Resolution mentioned "deals with a wholly different Constitutional issue (Senate-President relationship in treaty-making), which is unrelated to my nuclear-Constitutional research," according to Webb.

Finally, Webb has his Ph.D. in nuclear engineering, not in nuclear energy.

Suits, countersuits plague UMass professors

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
Staff Reporter

Dr. Gideon Ariel, UMass professor currently embroiled in three civil court suits against him, has filed countersuit against Dr. Benjamin Ricci, also of Exercise Science, accusing him of libel and abuse of process.

Dr. Ricci, who has a court case pending against Dr. Ariel, accusing him of attributing false anti-semitic remarks and publishing them through the UMass inter-office mail, had no comment on Ariel's counter suit. "I am discussing the matter with my lawyer. We have no comment."

Attorney David Burris speaking for Dr. Ariel said, "We have filed countersuit against Dr. Ricci because we believe he has used the court process with ulterior motives."

Ariel is represented by Attorney Burris in two other suits filed by fellow UMass personell. He is named as defendant in a suit brought against the University by Elizabeth Ebacher, recent doctoral graduate of UMass. She accuses Chancellor Randolph Bromery, Vice-Chancellor Gluckstern and Dr. Campney, head of the Exercise Science Department, of violating the Affirmative Action Policy in hiring Ariel.

Ariel is a defendant in a suit brought against him for back pay and stock options by a former business partner and fellow professor, Dr. Stanley Plagenhoef. Plagenhoef claims that as Director of Research for Computerized Biomechanical Analysis, a computer consulting company owned by Ariel and others, he was never paid for the work which he supervised.

Thefts compose weekend crimes

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

A sum of $250.00 was stolen from ten UMass students while they were asleep Saturday night in Brett House, Captain Robert Joyce of the UMass Department of Public Safety reports.

The outside doors were locked, narrowing the possibilities of a suspect, he said. "Someone perhaps had a master key, or the thefts could have been on the inside-students from students," Joyce added.

He said the department was investigating the case, but had no suspects. He also added they were unable to determine if the thefts were connected.

Other larcenies this past weekend were largely from unlocked dorm rooms, according to Joyce.

In addition, three offices in Worcester Dining Commons were broken into, but nothing was taken, said Police.

Parking tickets not understood

By ROBERTA MATONE
Staff Reporter

The Department of Public Safety received several phone calls yesterday, from people who "apparently misunderstood the parking ticket issue", said David L. Johnston, director of the department.

"We are still enforcing tickets to unregistered cars parked in core and edge lots. We are also enforcing tickets to improperly parked vehicles when we receive complaints about them", he explained.

Johnston said between the months of september and November, (to date), the department has issued 1100 ticket violations for improperly parked and unregistered vehicles.

"This may sound like a lot, but actually, last year we were issuing 500 to 600 tickets per week for the same violations," he said.

Johnston said he feels there is no need to "step up" enforcement because the violations are not as numerous as in the past.

Tells of Spring 1973 coverup

New tape shows Nixon suggested Hunt pardon

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Richard M. Nixon not only knew in the spring of 1973 that the Watergate burglars were being paid to keep quiet but suggested that E. Howard Hunt Jr. would "shut up" for sure if promised a pardon, according to White House tapes played yesterday.

The tapes, never made public before even in transcript form, indicated Nixon's deep involvement in the cover-up plot at a time when he was claiming to know nothing about it.

"God damn it," Nixon exploded at a March 22, 1973, meeting with H. R. Haldeman. "The people are in jail, it's only right for people to raise the money for them. I got to let them do that and that's all there is to ti. I think we ought to. There's got to be funds.

"I'm not being, I don't mean to be blackmailed by Hunt, that goes too far, but we're taking care of these people that are in jail. My God, they did this for - we're sorry for them. We do it out of compassion..."

Earlier, Nixon listened thoughtfully while Haldeman explained how money was slipped to the burglars whenever it seemed "one was gonna blow."

"Why is that obstruction of justice anyway?" Haldeman asked.

"Well, particularly when it's not to sip champagne...," Nixon replied.

Earlier in the day, the jury heard the tape of a Jan. 8, 1973, meeting between Nixon and his special counsel, Charles W. Colson, in which Nixon said it would be a "simple" matter to arrange clemency for Hunt.

Hunt had pleaded guilty to the Watergate bugging and was to be sentenced March 23. According to the tape of a White House meeting on March 21 - played to the jury earlier in the cover-up tiial - Nixon agreed that meeting Hunt's demands for more than $120,000 was something "you damn well better get done."

When they met the next day, Nixon and Haldeman obviously were worried that if Hunt were not taken care of, he might reveal his earlier role in the White House-sponsored burglary at Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office.

"That's what you really come down to," Nixon said. "Or you, you give him $12,000 or at least give him another contact, you know what I mean? That's, that's a lot of dough. Let's face it, in terms, uh, in terms, uh, of pardon, uh, or so forth, it, if Colson is talking, uh, of a pardon by Christmas, you know...he's out of his mind. He knows we can't do that."

Ford to meet Japanese emperor today as leftists demonstrate

TOKYO [UPI] — President Ford arrived in Japan yesterday under the tightest of security curtains and began his historic goodwill visit against a backdrop of violent leftist demonstrations and a protest railroad strike.

Looking tired from his 20-hour, 16,000-mile flight, Ford waved and smiled to a carefully selected group of Japanese and American welcomers at Haneda Airport as he strode to a helicopter for the short trip to the ornate official guest palace where he will stay.

Ford and Emperor Hirohito, the 73-year-old Japanese monarch, arranged to meet at 7:30 p.m. EST yesterday (9:30 a.m. today Tokyo time) for the official Japanese welcome in the Geihinkan guest palace prior to Ford going to the Imperial Palace nearby in central Tokyo.

But in recognition of his arrival a 21-gun salute boomed out over Tokyo Bay to greet the first American President ever to visit Japan, and the welcoming crowd of some 2,500 Japanese — mostly families of government officials — and 150 Americans cheered and waved tiny Japanese flags as Ford stepped from his plane.

Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger walked along a red carpet through an official receiving line headed by U.S. Ambassador to Japan James D. Hodgson and Japanese Ambassador to the United States Takeshi Yasukawa.

Ten minutes before Ford's arrival, a band of 1,600 students from an ultra-left political group clashed violently with police at a park two miles from the airport. Police arrested 176 of the students, raising to 188 the number of persons placed in custody in connection with Ford's visit.

Caramanlis faces key decisions about U.S.

ATHENS, Greece [AP] — Armed with the biggest electoral victory in Greek history, Premier Constantine Caramanlis said yesterday that democracy has returned to its birthplace and prepared the nation for a prebiscite on the future of the monarchy.

Caramanlis and his New Democracy party polled 54.5 per cent of the vote Sunday and took 214 of the 300 seats in Parliament in the first free elections in more than a decade.

With an overwhelming parliamentary majority, Carmanlis was certain to take whatever decisions he sees fit on such outstanding problems as Cyprus and possibly renewing military ties with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Another key question, foremost in American diplomats' minds here is whether Carmanlis would seek to mend fences with the United States.

With anti-American feelings still permeating the atmosphere, Caramanlis was expected to let the question remain out of sight until he could get an agreement over Cyprus acceptable to Greeks.

Greeks widely believe that Washington tilted toward Turkey during the Cyprus crisis and failed to discourage Turkey from invading the Mediterranean island.

The United States has also been accused of supporting leaders of the 7½ year dictatorship which jailed, tortured and exiled thousands of Greeks.

Arafat urges Arabs to increase resistance to Israeli occupation

By United Press International

Palestinian guerrilla leader Yasser Arafat called on Arabs yesterday to step up their resistance campaign in territories occupied by Israel. He also accused Israeli authorities of planning to use nuclear weapons.

Rioting swept the Arab sector of Jerusalem yesterday - the worst outbreak since Israel seized East Jerusalem in the 1967 Middle East war-and the Tel Aviv military command announced Israeli gunboats bombarded a suspected palestinian guerrilla base in Lebanon used to launch frogmen on an abortive mission.

Israeli troops fanned out in riot-torn cities of the occupied West Bank and seized suspected Arab agitators, who were sentenced to prison in summary trials the same day.

In the United Nations, Arab delegates agreed to draft a resolution giving a permanent U.N. voice to the Palestinian Liberation Organization, the umbrella Arab guerrilla group, diplomatic sources said.

Diplomatic sources said adoption of the resolution would open the door for recognition of revolutionary movements in Africa, Asia, and Latin america.

The rioting and stepped up Arab diplomatic campaign came as tension on Golan Heights eased with diplomatic sources in Cairo predicting Syria would renew the U.N. peacekeeping mandate on the Syrian-Israeli border.

Israeli fears that Syria would refuse to renew the six-month mandate, which expires Nov. 30, was partially responsible for a limited mobilization of Israeli reserves over the weekend.

Arafat, in a hastily called news conference in Algiers, said, "We have issued an appeal to the Palestinians in occupied Transjordan to continue to escalate their resistance and their sacrifices."

"The Zionists are preparing overtly for what is going to be a pre-emptive strke," he said.

"It is possible that the enemy is preparing to use nuclear weapons in the fifth war."

Arafat flew to Algiers from a stopover in Havana, Cuba, after addressing the U.N. General Assembly in New York last week.

In Jerusalem, Israeli police said 96 Arabs were arrested in rioting and seven youths and three policemen were reported hurt.

Subordinates often earn more than boss

State officials' salaries show inequalities

BOSTON [AP] — One state commissioner — the commissioner of the Department of Mental Health — gets a salary which is larger than the governor's.

While Gov.-elect Michael S. Dukakis will be paid $40,000 annually once he takes office Jan. 2, his commissioner of mental health will be paid $44,876.

The mental health commissioner also gets paid more than his immediate boss, the secretary of human services, who gets $39,000 annually.

Apparently, in state government, it isn't all that unusual for an underling to be earning more than his boss.

According to figures supplied by the state comptroller's office, First Deputy Insurance Commissioner Robert E. Ingalls receives $27,237 annually, compared to $25,228 for Insurance Commissioner John G. Ryan.

Deputy Commissioner of Banks Carmine T. Pallotta receives $25,303 annually, while Commissioner of Banks Freyda Koplow gets $24,136.

These deputies receive more than their bosses because they are career civil service employees, and their pay is near the top of the civil service scale.

The commissioners are paid under separate legislation, and some of them haven't fared all that well.

The lowest paid commissioner is Nathan Chandler, head of the Department of Agriculture, who received $19,780. That's $24,096 less than the salary paid Mental Health Commissioner William Goldman. Natural Resources Commissioner Arthur Brownell gets $24,664.

Administration and finance is tied with human services at $39,000 as the highest paid cabinet offices. These posts already have been filled by Dukakis — administration and finance by John R. Buckley and human services by Lucy Benson.

Dukakis' secretary of transportation and construction will get $37,200; communities and development, $34,000; consumer affairs, $34,000; environmental affairs, $34,000; public safety, $34,000; elder affairs, $32,000; education, $37,200, and manpower affairs, $34,000.

The mental health commissioner gets $10,000 a year more than the next highest paid commissioners, public health, public welfare and correction, all of whom are paid in the $34,000 range.

Dukakis, incidentally, has said he will be replacing all members of the cabinet now serving outgoing Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

He said he would leave it up to the new cabinet officers to evaluate the commissioners. But two of the commissioners — Ryan in insurance and Steven A. Minter in welfare — have said that they will be leaving in any case.

All the cabinet secretaries except Jack Leff, the current secretary of elder affairs, do better financially than civil service employees.

The top civil service pay is $33,560. That salary comes after seven years in the grade 33 pay scale which ranges from $26,416 to $33,560.

Nearly 10 employes are paid in the grade 33 range, while about 15 employes are paid according to the grade 32 scale, which ranges from $25,383 to $32,263.

There are others in state government who receive considerably more than these top civil service employes, and some receive more than the governor.

At the top of the heap, according to the state Personnel Bureau, is a fellow appropriately named King — Edward King, who is executive director of the Massachusetts Port Authority.

A bureau spokesman said King receives around $58,000 a year, and "we don't know anyone higher."

Most of those at the very top of the scale are associated with autonomous state agencies. And for many of these agencies, the legislature and the governor have nothing to say about the salaries.

Education boards, for example, set the salaries for state college and university presidents. According to the Personnel Bureau, several of these presidents also get more than the governor.

HEW report claims marijuana harmful

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Three days after urging decriminalization of private use of marijuana, a federal official yesterday expressed renewed concern that smoking pot could be harmful.

While stressing that results of latest clinical tests on animals are inconclusive, a Health, Education and Welfare report said "for now it would seem the possible adverse effects should lead marijuana smokers or potential smokers to question whether it is worth the risk."

Past government reports have found little evidence of harm from marijuana, although they noted there were indications that the weed might be a health hazard. The affect of the new report, although itself inconclusive, is to add new evidence to indications that marijuana may be harmful to humans.

The report said:

—Scientific evidence is hardest that marijuana smoking adversely effects driving ability;

—There is speculation from clinical evidence that smoking interferes with the body's ability to resist disease, and;

—"There is concern that alteration in hormone levels could interfere with normal adolescent development or with sexual differentiation of male fetuses in pregnant women who smoke marijuana at critical periods of fetal development."

Dr. Robert L. DuPont, 38, director of HEW's National Institute on Drug Abuse, said "a definitive evaluation of marijuana's harmfulness or safety for humans cannot be offered at this time on the basis of scientific evidence available."

"But there is cause for concern and caution based on evidence from animal studies and some preliminary human studies summarized in this report," said DuPont, who Friday called for decriminalization of private use of marijuana.

"Whatever the ultimate evidence of more serious consequences of chronic canabis use, there is little question that acute marijuana intoxication interferes with immediate intellectual functioning as well as with driving and other psychomotor skills," DuPont said in a foreward to the report

educational record-keeping at elementary and secondary schools and colleges was not felt until well after it was signed into law in August.

Administrators say it will have a "chilling effect" on admissions practices in American colleges which rely upon candid appraisals of potential students. Faculty members have opposed the law, claiming they will be unable to write truly frank evaluations if the letters are eventually to be read by the students involved.

The universities must now decide whether they can still rely upon the letters of recommendation as a prime source of information in the admissions process if the letters are no longer confidential.

A number of institutions have come to the conclusion that evaluations letters will no longer be of value if the files are opened. So, they say they will not grant students access to confidential material, even after today.

"We don't request any confidential information," said William D. Tunis, UMass undergraduate admissions director. "I don't see any problem for us."

Some other University officials complain they have received inadequate guidance from federal authorities, making it difficult for them to understand or cope with requirements of the new law.

Tunis said that an association of guidance counsellors in Massachusetts already has a policy of not formally recommending a student to college. That policy was made before Buckley's law, he said.

Perhaps the operation affected most at UMass will be the Placement Office, although few students are involved since most would have graduated.

A provision in the law which requires a student to given written permission before this records are sent to a prospective employer has increased the administrative workload on the office, according to Michael West, an aide to Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage who has headed a committee at UMass to oversee compliance with the new law.

West said yesterday that campus offices were instructed in September to remove from student files any material which had been submitted under a promise of confidentiality from the University.

He termed the action an "evasion of the law but not a violation." West also said that the office of University President Robert C. Wood is expected to release guidelines for compliance with the law this morning. Institutions have 90 days to comply with certain sections.

Ford may veto Vets

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford told the lame duck session of Congress yesterday he would veto as inflationary a veterans bill raising benefits for Vietnam-era servicemen if it is sent to the White House in its present form.

In a message sent to Congress while he was traveling in the Far East, Ford also asked for fast action on dozens of measures, including confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller as vice president, a 5 per cent income tax surcharge and emergency aid for the unemployed.

Busing may expand

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston School Committee told a federal judge yesterday mandatory busing probably will have to be increased next fall when a citywide school desegregation program goes into effect.

In its first progress report to U.S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity, the committee said "the hopes for reduced transportation problems have not been realized, particularly at the elementary level, in the new school district combinations worked on to date."

Breakfasts denied

BOSTON [UPI] — A children's advocate group charged yesterday that 280,000 poor children in Massachusetts are not getting the school breakfasts they are entitled to because of "lawlessness" by local officials.

Larry Brown, director of the Massachusetts Advocacy Center, said failure of local officials to take advantage of the federal program started three years ago is costing the state $15 million a year in federal subsidies.

Chrysler won't close

[UPI] — Chrysler Corp. will cut 50,000 cars from its production schedule but will not impose a company-wide shutdown in December, Chrysler chairman Lynn Townsend said yesterday.

Substantial layoffs of Chrysler workers would be necessary for a production cut of that magnitude. Townsend said details had not been worked out. Chrysler already has idled 26,000 workers.

Townsend ended speculation Chrysler would close its entire operation in December, a move that could have idled 110,000 workers, 61,000 in the Detroit area.

Indians want control over "Eagle Bay"

This article is special to the Black News Service from the Liberated News Service, New York.

New York State is still fighting for control over land near Eagle Bay, New York, which was occupied last May by the Mohawk Indians, member of the 800 year old Iroquois Six Nations Confederacy.

Tensions between the State and the Indians are growing, since recent shooting incidents there between Indians and non-Indians have fueled the conflict over legal jurisdiction.

On May 13, 1974, several hundred Mohawks, with the cooperation of 20 other Indian Nations, reoccupied the 660 acres of land to establish the Ganienkeh (land of the Flint) nation and return to their traditional way of life.

But on September 20, New York State filed a lawsuit in the U.S. District Court, asking for an injunction that would force the Indians to leave. No decision has yet been reached.

There have been few conflicts between the Ganienkeh nation and its neighbors, until recent shootings into the encampment in October. In the latest incident on October 28, Indians living in the Ganienkeh nation explain that they were shot at and then returned fire. During the incident, April Madigan and Steven Drake, two non-Indians on the road in front of the settlement, were wounded.

The Mohawk say that the Canadaigua Treaty that was negotiated between the United States and the Six Nations Confederacy in 1794, spells out the procedure to be followed in the case of injury to non-Indians. But New York State refuses to recognize the sovereignty of the Six Nations Confederacy, claiming jurisdiction over the area.

There is also disagreement over who actually owns the central Adirondack piece of land. The Indians say that the land was illegally taken away from them, over two centuries ago by New York State.

Explaining their re-occupation last May, Kakwirakeron, a spokesperson for the Mohawks says, "We want to go back to the land, to live in harmony with the land, but reservation and urban life bring pressures on the Indian that have made traditional life impossible."

"Our young people in particular are beginning to realize this and are looking for something different. As we've learned what has happened to our people, we decided we have to make a move. But it can't be done on the reservations. We have an elective system in there who are actually puppets of the (United States) Government.

"It's possible for our Indian people and the people of the United States to live on parallel lines with each other."

Explaining that non-Indians have their own laws, customs and culture, he stresses that "our Indian people are also entitled to a territory, an area of land which is our own, in which we can have our own government, our own laws, our own people, our own language, culture and traditions."

The Mohawks intend to return to a self-sufficient agricultural society. A sign put up at the camp entrance last May said: "This camp is out to prove that Indians can live off the land without electricity, money, welfare relief, or aid of any kind. White people are asking to help by not interfering."

Kakwirakeron adds that "all we need is to be left alone and live in our own way. There are no territories left that belong to the Indian people, where they govern themselves and live according to their ways. This is why we're asking for this (our own land). This is why we cannot assimilate. If we do assimilate, there's nothing left."

Since the October 28 shooting, State Police have maintained roadblocks restricting travel, making it difficult for support groups wanting to bring food and supplies to the Indians. Only residents have been permitted to enter without harassment.

Many neighbors from Ithaca, Cornell, and the New York State Council of Churches have expressed support for the Indians. Ithaca's "Rest of the News", an alternative radio news service, reports that a caravan carrying food early in November was held up for two hours because of the roadblocks.

On November 2, a complaint to the Justice Department Community Relations Service was filed. It contends that the agreement between Indians and State Police allowing free transportation of food and supplies has been broken, and the Indians have been harassed.

The investigation into the shooting by State Police has been only tentatively agreed to by the Mohawks, who reluctantly permitted Police to conduct a road search on November 7. But such procedure is improper according to Article 7 of the Canandaigua Treaty, which states that in such cases of injury to non-Indians, only the Federal Government can negotiate with the Six Nations.

Meanwhile, negotiations continue over jurisdiction in the matter. The conflict is typical of "the lack of respect given to the sovereignty of the Indian nation," notes Tim Colter, the Indians' lawyer.

He concludes, "The people of Ganienkeh and the Six Nation Confederacy are going to continue to exist and see to it that the Treaty be abided by and lived up to by the United States Government. Until that happens, it will continue to be a crisis situation... After all this time, there should not be one more broken treaty."

Fast for a world harvest - November 21

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Half a billion people living in a wide tropical band circling the earth are chronically malnourished. Half of these are children, whose growth and mental development are being permanently affected. In sub-Saharan Africa alone, 10 million people face famine and the disease which accompany it. But the food scarcity of today may be only a window into the anquish of tomorrow.

Why? Some 70 million additional people are sitting down to the world's dining table each year. At the same time, Americans — and others in the affluent nations — have switched their diet from bread or rice to meat. While the average Indian or Mexican is lucky to receive the equivalent of a pound of grain a day, the average American requires nearly a ton of grain a year — much of which feeds the animals which provide him with meat. (It takes about 8 pounds of grain to make one pound of beef)

The promise of the Green Revolution's "miracle" strains of wheat and rice has been slowed by shortages of the fertilizer and water required by these new varieties. Rising gas prices have stalled the ability of poor farmers to pump water for irrigation.

The vagaries of weather — always a question to farmers everywhere — have been so severe in recent years that scientists suggest that the world's climate may be changing.

The United States is the world's major exporter of wheat, feed-grains, soybeans and rice. But the stark food needs of the world are not in North America, but in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Americans can help to lead the way out of this global dilemma by their own commitment and by their own examples. By fasting on Thursday, November 21, thoughtful people will not just reduce their own consumption of food. The money from these missed meals will help small farmers in poor nations to grow food where the world's hungry people live. It's the first step to a solution.

(Tea and fruit juice, both may be taken during the fast)

Give your day's food money (or whatever you can afford) to support Oxfam self-help projects so that at least some of the World's poorest people can grow their own food and determine their own future.

Teach-In

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

What is the Racial Imbalance Act and can it solve the problem of quality education? Who organized racist violence in Boston and who profits from it? How does it affect our lives?

These questions will be explored in a teach-in, tonight at 8 p.m. in the campus center.

The teach-in will include a multi-racial panel of two UMass students, two Boston High School students, community leaders and a Boston High teacher.

The teach-in has been organized by an ad hoc university task force to help students understand the Boston crisis.

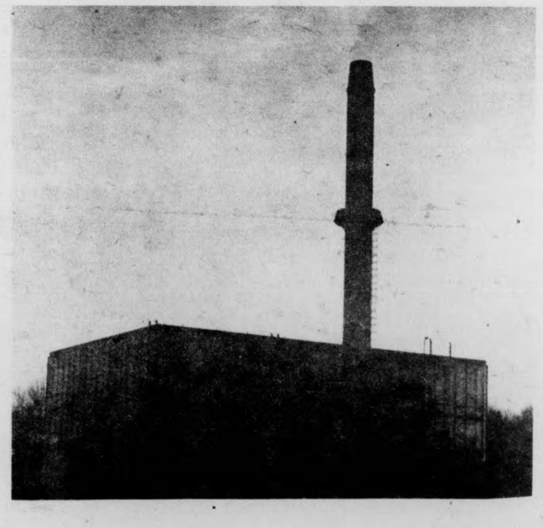
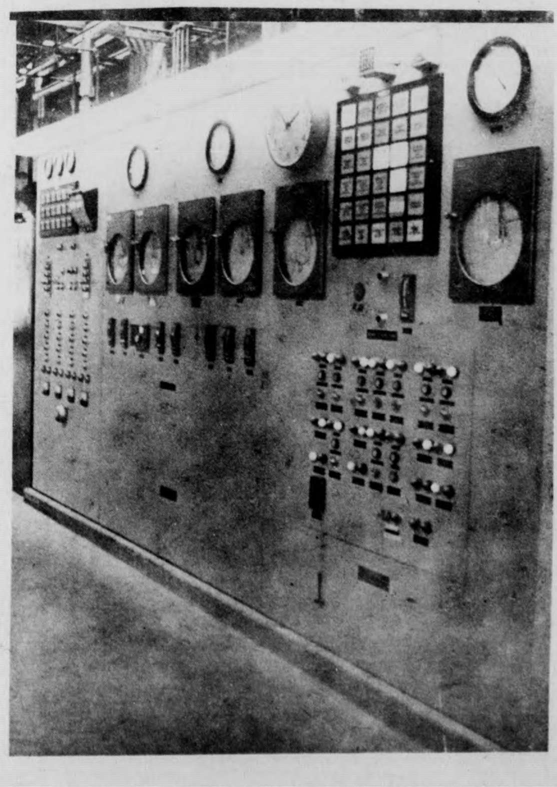
This fall, the Physical Plant began operating its new $4 million oil fired boiler plant, located at Tilson Farm. The new plant has three boilers, each of which can supply UMass with 175,000 lbs. of steam per hour. The steam is used to generate electricity as well as heat the campus.

When construction was begun in 1972, it was planned that the plant would take over the entire load from the old coal-fired plant which is located in the center of campus. However, skyrocketing costs of oil and coal forced the Physical Plant to repair the old plant and to continue its operation. Present plans call for the continued operation of both plants so as to keep costs as low as possible.





Sargent doesn't rule out political future; considering academic position

"I'm not training my sights on anything right now," Sargent said of his political future. "But there's so many things that can happen. Everything is so volatile.

Meanwhile, the governor said he is "leaning towards" accepting one of several teaching or lecturing positions at local colleges that have been offered since his defeat two weeks ago.

He declined to name the colleges but said he has been offered several part-time and full-time academic positions, including "visiting professor" slots.

"I think I'd like that," Sargent said.

He said some of the offers were for one-year contracts. Others call for a one or two-day a week commitment. And others are full-time for an indefinite period.

Sargent said he will decide whether to accept such a job, or which one to accept, before leaving office.

The governor also said he is considering writing about his long career in government but that such writing would not be his "memoirs."

"I'm not ready for that yet," he said.

"I don't want to become a bureaucrat...It will be good to be out of government for a while...but I like being around people."

However, Sargent said he would probably decline any offer of a federal position, adding, "I'm sure I could be appointed to a variety of things." He said he wants to stay in the New England area.

"I don't want to go back to the Goose Hummock and dig sea worms," the governor said, referring to his sporting goods store on Cape Cod.

And his political orginization will not be disbanded, Sargent said.

"I wouldn't preclude the possibility of running again...but I'm not going to walk down the steps of the State House in January and start worrying what the bumper stickers should be like."

As for the loss to Dukakis, Sargent said, "I haven't had a great depression over it. If I had lost by 500 votes I'd probably be banging my head against the wall.

"But 200,000 votes is pretty decisive," he said of his losing margin. Nevertheless, the governor said, in retrospect, he would have done nothing differently in his campaign.

As for his future, Sargent said, "It would be a real mistake to have my mind made up two weeks after being defeated. I never gave it any thought before. I don't think anyone running things they will lose."

Parking, towing disagreement

"I really don't want to undercut Dave's position," Kittle said, "I want to let him speak for himself."

Both Johnston and Kittle are scheduled to appear before a regular meeting of the Parking and Transportation Council at 8:30 this morning in the Campus Center. The council is comprised of students, faculty and staff.

At the same time, Alan Gross, Chairperson of the Parking and Transportation Council, said yesterday if the situation becomes "untenable we may request towing again."

"I don't necessarily disagree with Johnston — but we have to talk about percentages here," he said adding he thinks the Collegian's release of the story is "liable to cause a chaotic situation on campus."

"With that story we may well go back to the Chancellor and ask for towing if the situation deteriorates," Gross said.

However, Carol Drew, head of AFL-CIO local 1776, the union which represents approximately half of the more than 1,700 classified employees in the physical plant and the dining commons, said she is 100 per cent behind Johnston."

"I think it (the parking system) stinks — I've been against it from the very beginning," she said. "I agree with David Johnston that employees have better things to do with their money than spend it on parking tickets and towing charges," the union head said.

Drew stressed that coordination is needed between the various campus groups and offices to make a parking plan work. "That hasn't been done," she said.

Meanwhile Johnston said he is "stringently enforcing non-registered vehicles on campus."

Starvation campaign

In addition to soliciting a dollar from students living in dormitories, the Collegian will also be receiving money from businesses which advertise in the newspaper.

Posters will be distributed area-wide tomorrow announcing the campaign.

A "Dunk-a-thon" is also being planned where for 25 cents students will have the opportunity to pour a bucket of water over the heads of such columnists as Fred Weiss and Reid Fishman in addition to Below the Salt Editor Mike Kostek, Collegian Editor-in-Chief Jerry Lazar, and SGA president Rick Savini. That activity will take place when students return from the Thanksgiving holiday.

Collegian News Editor Mike Kneeland is organizing the project. He says the newspaper hopes to raise at least $20,000.

"We're making this drive from a non-political base. I'm sure UMass students will be more than willing to part with a dollar for such a cause," he said.

A list of dormitory representatives will be published on page 2 of tomorrow's Collegian. Kneeland said many volunteers will be needed to help with the dormitory drive.

The campaign will end when final exams begin.

Philippine ambassador hostage; aide shot by political head

WASHINGTON [AP] — Philippine Ambassador Eduardo Z. Romualdez was held hostage in his office last night and an aide was shot by a gunman identified as the head of the Filipino Political Action Committee of Washington.

The wounded man was identified as Mario S. Lagdameo, economic attache at the embassy and nephew of a former ambassador to the United States.

Philippine diplomat Jose Naldo identified the gunman as Napoleon Lechoco, a Filipino about 40, of suburban Oxon Hill, Md. Lechoco also was identified as Washington correspondent for the Philippine Times, a San Francisco newspaper strongly opposed to martial law in the Philippines.

The U.S. Secret Service said two police officers inside the Philippine Embassy chancery had made contact with Lechoco by telephone and were attempting to negotiate the ambassador's release. A State Department official said FBI also were in the building negotiating. Lachoco's wife also had been summoned to the scene.

Naldo said Lechoco entered the Philippine chancery about 3:45 p.m. yesterday after requesting an appointment with Romualdez last week to meet with leaders of the Filipino community in the Washington area.

Lechoco was accompanied to Romualdez's office by Lagdameo, a karate expert, Naldo said.

"The next thing we knew, three shots were fired," Naldo said. "Mario fell and we all had to go out."

Within a short time the four-story, brick chancery building on Massachusetts Avenue was surrounded by Washington police. Officers of the Secret Service's Executive Protection Agency, FBI agents and State Department security officers. The seige snarled commuter traffic along the capital's swank embassy row area.

As two officers attempted to talk to Lechoco, Naldo said, "we contacted...Letitia, the wife of Lechoco to talk matters out..."

Naldo said Lechoco, whom he identified as president of Filipino Political Action Committee, was bitter because his children, now in the Philippines, could not come to the United States and also was very vocal against the martial law regulations in the Philippines.

A great place to shop

By MARY LAWSON
Staff Correspondent

Christmas has come early to the Campus Center, where students can do all their holiday shopping without leaving the concourse.

Frank Baker is a silver craftsman. He is selling silver bracelets, necklaces, rings, key rings, and earrings, after an apprenticeship with silvercraftsman Harold Sweetman for two months. Sweetman has been selling his silver in the Campus Center for two years.

To sell goods in the Campus Center, a craftsperson must be a student at UMass. Some fulfill this requirement with one Continuing Education course. Others are full-time students, like Susan Roy, Plant and Soil Science major selling terrariums and flowers. She makes bottle gardens with recycled gallon jars by cutting the jars, sanding the edges, and adding soil and plants.

"I am a certified arborist and I put out a card letting people know, so they will call me if they have any problems with the plants they buy from me."

Most of the craftspersons this reporter talked to spend a great amount of time making their products. Mitch and Sue Mulholland's craft of silkscreening stationary is "very time consuming" about 40 hours each week. Sue has a Bachelor's Degree in Art and taught Mitch silkscreening. They started the craft in Mexico last year and as a result use many Mexican designs, one of which is 2200 years old. But the design that sells best is Oriental.

Two of the craft tables that display original products include Chris Water's, filled with wood, feather, and shell jewelry. Waters makes the wood jewelry from dead tree branches which he collects in the woods. He cuts, sands, and lacquers them and mounts them on wires. He collects the feathers from duck ponds.

Meanwhile, Mary and Joe Porcari design conservation scrimshaw etched into cowbone. The result is necklaces, pins, cuff links, and earrings.

"I learned jewelry making a long time ago and developed this craft on my own," Mary Porcari said.

Many of the craftspersons stress how good it is to buy directly from them. Because they are paying no rent for their selling area in the Campus Center, they can therefore charge lower prices for their goods.

"We are selling wholesale on a retail market. The prices would be doubled in a store," C.David Brown says.

Brown makes terrariums. It is a hobby he turned into a worthwhile job, last year. After collecting bottles, he inserts a charcoal base, adds peat moss, vermiculite, potting soil and, finally, cuttings with makeshift tools. He uses about sixty varieties of self-maintaining plants.

A leathercraftsman, David Edwards reports the sale of a $40 pocketbook to a woman who said she had just seen a similar one in a store for $60.

"We keep our prices as low as possible so that the UMass students can afford our products."

Edwards has a workshop in his house and works with three others making belts, pocketbooks, wallets, key chains, plant hangers, and cigarette cases. He started doing leather work three years ago while working in a leather shop in Chatham, Mass. Before he moved off campus, this year, he taught a colloquium on leather-making in Moore House.

"There is a definite feeling of cooperation between the craftspersons here," said Paul Marshall, the only ceramics craftsperson who is in the Campus Center regularly.

Experimental "Wattswagon" now used by Physical Plant

By DAN LABONTE
Staff Correspondent

The Physical Plant has recently received a unique addition to their motor pool. It's the yellow, electrically powered "Wattswagon".

The pollution free, battronic electric truck van, complete with an overnight charger, was donated to the University from the City of Holyoke Gas and Electric Department.

The fair market value of the 1966 British made vehicle is estimated at around $2,000.

In order to establish the truck's economic feasibility, a six month survey on the cost of operation compared to a gas operated vehicle of similar characteristics was recommended by the Motor Vehicle Review Board on approval of accepting the vehicle, according to Steven Bristol, Supervisor of Garage and Motor Pool.

Although the truck was donated late in the spring of this year, it has only been in operation for the past two weeks. A routine inspection upon receiving the truck revealed a need for new brakes, and "the parts were a long time in coming," explained Clinton Jarvis, Assistant Electrical Foreman for the Physical Plant.

The vehicle requires no special attention and minor repairs and maintenance can be made by men already employed by the physical plant, according to Jarvis.

The vehicle is currently being used to transport men and supplies in the satellite area around and between Bartlett and the Campus Center.

Recharged every night, the truck easily handles an average days use in its assigned area, however "it lacks the power to make frequent climbs up the hills in the higher evaluation areas of the campus," said Jarvis.

A meter which measures the power, in kilowatts, is used in determining the truck's performance. It's the same type of meter found in many homes, according to Jarvis.

The Physical Plant will be able to get a rough idea of the comparative cost and performance of the electric truck in about a month, according to Jarvis.

Any additional use of electrically powered vehicles is left to the Motor Vehicle Review Board upon receipt of the six month survey, Bristo said.

Notes on Puerto Rico

By LOUIS MANUEL MEDINA
Staff Reporter

Today is a Holy Day in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

The Island is celebrating the arrival of Sir Christopher Columbus to the Puerto Rican shores on Nov. 19, 1495. Columbus was making his second voyage to the New World.

Three years after his arrival Puerto Rico began to be colonized by the Spaniards. That means that at the time of the arrival of the Pilgrims to the Plymouth Rock, Puerto Rico already had a century of European culture.

– – – –

Ms. Vicenta Erranz de Sotolongo had become the recipient of the Massachusetts' scholarship of The Eastern States Exhibition. Sotolongo is a sophmore student majoring in Home Economics. She had three children attending the Che Lumumba School of the Truth at New Africa House.

She is natural of Zarzalejo, Madrid, Spain. She entered UMass as a CCEBS student. At the beginning of this semester, like the other Spanish Speaking students in campus was transferred to the new Bicultural Collegiate Program.

– – – –

The Puerto Rican governor, Hon. Rafael Hernandez Colon gave as a recognition, a Puerto Rican coat of arms to the popular couple of Mexican cowboy movies, Miguel Aceves Mejias and Flor Silvestre in their visit to the Island.

Spanish Club Revival

Que pasa?

Several students interested in Hispanic culture and language are reviving the Spanish Club, which has been dormant so far this semester.

Low membership is their only deterrent from bringung cultural activities, such as plays, movies and speakers on campus.

The club wants to start planning activities and parties as soon as possible and asks that anyone who wants to enrich their lives come to the next meeting tonight at 6:30 p.m. in the 4th floor lounge of Herter Hall.

Wake up to the real world

By ANTHONY BARNES

Well, it's happened again. Every year (or is it every semester) someone in the UMass community gets up enough courage to put in print exactly what many students here really feel deep in their minds, but are afraid to mention. What I am talking about is the famous "special privileges for blacks" gripe. This year it's chief exponent is Bruce Jefferies. (Tues. Nov. 7 Collegian) This writer wishes not to refer this article to Mr. Jefferies only, but to all others who believe in this ignorant misconception.

UMass is a fantasy land, this is not the real world. Sure, blacks get the special privilege of having a place on this predominantly white university where we can congregate in an atmosphere and spirit of blackness. But is it really a special privilege to give what's considered by this writer, a small building to blacks when it is a fact that whites own and run the entire vastness of this giant university?

Since it is obvious that the culture of our people has been methodically eliminated from us over the years we now see attempts by this government (by the implementation of Black Studies course and etc.) to give us some of this back. Don't you believe that this university should aid in this task? If so, then you can omit the "Drum" from your list of special privileges, also you can omit the CCEBS program from the list too because the system of mis-education in the real world does not adequately provide black students with the tools to function in the fantasy world of colleges and universities, thusly, we find the need for programs such as CCEBS.

I believe that it is necessary to ask persons such as Mr. Jefferies to please come back to reality. If Mr. Jefferies and others like him wish to talk about special privileges, this writer asks them to please go and view the real world. Visit the black community, live there, see the special privileges that we get. One of them is the privilege of being over-policed and under-protected. Another is the privilege of being the last hired (and then for token purposes) and first fired. See how we get to sit around all day long and drink the cheap wine from the liquor stores that saturate our side of town because of the special privilege we have of being unemployed. (Black unemployment is twice that of whites). Check out our housing, we get the privilege of sleeping in rat and roach infested housing and paying the rent to a person who would never dream of living there. Look at our streets, we blacks also have the privilege of getting little or no services from the city's Department of Public Works.

This writer says to you, Mr. Jefferies, and to all people who share your opinion, come take a look at the real world before you talk about special privileges. Don't complain to people about special privileges in this fantasy land. You have stated that, "the blacks have been discriminated against and still are being denied the rights and privileges that many whites take for granted. But it is not the fault of the University of Massachusetts or it's students so why should they have to 'pay' for it?"

This writer would like to state that when you live in and experience the real world of blacks in America, you will feel compelled to offer "special privileges" to those few blacks who escape from it for a time. You should realize how petty these "special privileges" are in comparison to the "privileges" of hunger, hopelessness and frustration blacks receive in the real world back home. You should also realize that it is these very same special privileges that you speak of that are keeping the summers quiet in America every year. But for how long???

Letters to the editor

NUKES need attention

To the Editor:

I was very disturbed that the referendum concerning the rejection of the proposed nuclear power plant lost in the recent elections. It would seem impossible to me that anyone could support such a thing were they aware of the immense dangers involved. Dangers that not only threaten one or two lives but the lives of many people and generations of children who risk inheriting contaminated land, air, water and a distorted genetic structure. This threat is not some vague political notion concerning only those who speculate on utopias or engage in radical cynicism. It concerns us all, with an immediacy that becomes apparent when we consider the nearness of Montague. One would expect a general effort to put a stop to such construction, yet although the people were allowed to vote and to determine the outcome of this issue, they failed to employ this power for their own safety.

Obviously the majority of those who voted are hoping for more jobs or a secure source of energy and obviously they are uninformed as to the dangers such employment and energy would entail.

Probably the reason why they were uninformed was because the news medias have overwhelmingly neglected this issue. This fact is more incredible when one realizes that it is true of the Collegian , the newspaper geared towards the student population, the supposed interested and intellectual population. The number of articles published on this subject have been far too few and there has been either no editorial stance or one that has been negligible. The day after elections the front page headlines of the Collegian read, "Dukakis Tops Sarge", "Brittany tenants meet about security deposits", "LSO drops office hours", and "Romanian scholar says Dracula actually lived in Transylvania". In the whole paper not one word was spoken about nuclear power. If it is correct to infer that the editors find Dracula's existence more noteworthy than that of the referendum, then it would also seem correct to infer that the mentality of this newspaper is on a grammar school level.

There are three other alternative explanations for this:

1. The newspaper is unaware of the issue or its seriousness. This would be inexcusable as it is the primary function of a newspaper to be aware so as to make the people aware.

2. The newspaper is apathetic. This would be inexcusable as it is its inherent responsibility to be concerned especially with the ongoing political controversies that have direct bearing on the readers.

3. The newspaper finds the issue not sufficiently exciting, sensational or relevant. This would be inexcusable as not only is it exciting, sensational and relevant but it is more as it deals with the security of life.

The editors might reply that it is not up to them to pass judgement on the importance of an issue. This however is a meaningless argument as the quantity of news that is published is just a fraction of what could be. So judgement is necessarily passed and it is done in a way that implies that the nuclear power issue is not considered an important one.

The newspapers have an extraordinary power in influencing the public voice, whether they wish to recognize this or not. Had they not put so much emphasis on Watergate, Nixon would probably still be president.

The Collegian and all newspapers must recognize their power and put forth great efforts to make the people aware of the serious implications of nuclear power so that something can be done about it.

This is a disturbing issue because similar to war, the survival of individuals is threatened, the enemy is close by and yet remains rather abstract as we have not yet heard the shots or felt the wounds. Yet the gun exists, it is the nuclear power plant and its actual operation is the bullets in that gun. After that it will simply be circumstances which will determine if the trigger is pulled and who is hit.

It is so senseless to take that chance.

A stop must be put to this throughout the world and we must start in our community.

Robert McNulty

Power to the students

To the Editor:

I have viewed with interest the Student Government Association attempts to initiate policy change at our University. I attended the town meeting sponsored by the Association and watched as fellow students debated and voted on articles presented in the Town Warrant. The theme for the articles is student control and participation in organizations which play a direct role in making decisions concerning student interests. I find many of the proposals to be legitimate and necessary. Unfortunately, these proposals fall on deaf ears at Whitmore.

The SGA is an advisory group to the University Administration. The Association represents our interests in decisions made by Whitmore. It gives the administration student opinion, nothing more. The SGA does not have the power to compel the administration to work on student proposals. Whitmore knows this and acts accordingly with issues presented by the SGA.

The power to change University policies lies solely with the administration. Since there is no student organization separate from the Whitmore hierarchy to challenge the administration, there are no substantial, needed policy changes at our University. Administrative officials wish to keep their positions. They promote the status quo. They do not allow students to tamper with regime rules which sustain their jobs. Whitmore will never relinquish any power to students left to its own dictates. And there is no provision within the University structure allowing for student control of any major aspect of our student life.

A change in regime rules appears unlikely. What is needed is a student organization, outside the political grasp of Whitmore, that can effectively deal with the administration on our behalf. It must be financially self-sufficient and not rely on Whitmore for any aid. A Student Union meets this criteria. Such a union would not be under the review of our school's administration. Funds for the organization originate from dues collected from the members. With significant membership and thus strong financial and political support, the union contracts and negotiates University policies with the administration on an equal level. It is not an advisory group. The union's power is derived from its membership. The more members, the greater power to the union. The power is used by the union to solicit and insure student rights at our university. I would support such a union.

Caution must be taken that the officials of the union do not take on a prominent characteristic which perpetuates itself in Whitmore: continuation and survival of the organization without regard to those peoples it supposedly represents and in whose interests it deals. I believe the students of UMass are capable of preventing and controlling such a situation.

Cockroach in the U.N.

By OLU MOLOYE

The Security Council of the United Nations has demonstrated once again its insensitivity to the crimes perpetrated by the Afrikaner government in South Africa. On the 18th of October, representatives from African countries demanded the expulsion of South Africa from the world Organization because of her racial policy of apartheid. France, Britain, and the United States used their veto power (a power not enjoyed by the majority of states in the United Nations) to protect their investments in South Africa. Never before in the history of the United Nations have three permanent members of the Security Council used their veto power simultaneously to kill a resolution.

The South African policy of racial apartness has been at the heart of the difficulties between South Africa and the United Nations since the triumph of the ruling Nationalist Party in 1948. While the policy of racial segregation goes back almost to the first years of the colony at the Cape, it has become a philosophy of life since 1948, thoroughly rationalized, and elevated to a religious dogma. The Pretoria government has applied the philosophy of apartheid with rigid consistency to every phase of life, with rarely a deviation from principle. The government's goal is to demarcate a number of separate territories in South Africa into distinct ethnic communities. The reserved areas are linked to white South Africa, and their inhabitants exist mainly on wages earned in the "white zones", where they have the status of immigrants from the "homelands".

In 1947, the Election Manifesto of the Nationalist Party described the system of apartheid this way: "In general terms our policy envisages segregating the most important ethnic groups and sub-groups in their own areas where every group will be enabled to develop into a self-sufficient unit. We endorse the general principle of territorial segregation of the Bantu and whites....the Bantu in the urban areas should be regarded as a migratory citizen not entitled to political and social rights equal to those of the whites. The process of detribalization should be arrested." From the very beginning of South African participation in the United Nations in 1946, other members have challenged its racial policies. For instance, during the second part of the first session of the General Assembly in 1946, the Indian delegate charged the Union with having enacted discriminatory legislation against Indians, who had been brought as laborers by the British colonists, instancing the Asiatic Land Tenure and Indian Representation Act of 1946. The South African delegation denied the competence of the United Nations in such domestic matters and asked that the question of competence be referred to the International Court of Justice for an Opinion. The United Nations refused the request for an Opinion from the Court, and, ever since, apartheid has remained the South African policy.

The Western powers which vetoed the Resolution have demonstrated that apartheid, as practiced by South Africa, is a necessary extension of Western capitalism. Apartheid guarantees Western capitalism a pool of disciplined cheap labor from the so-called bantustans to the factories and the mines. It is to be deluded, to believe the plea by Mr. Botha, the South African delegate, before the United Nations, that his country is preparing to change her policy of white supremacy. The proposed changes are cosmetic, and nothing but balderdash, because the Afrikaner still insists on reading the ancient Bible, which encourages him to believe in his racial superiority. With Providence on his side, he is sure that nothing but his own pertinacity is needed for the perpetuation of the social system of South Africa. But let South Africa and her most pugnacious apologists in the United Nations remember that, in a court of fowls, the cockroach never wins his case. •

WHO is responsible

According to agricultural experts several South Asian and sub-Sahara African nations will suffer a seven million to eleven million ton grain shortage within the coming year. In terms of human beings these figures mean that a probable half billion people will starve to death within the next eight months in the void of appropriate assistance.

Who is responsible? Perhaps WHO itself, World Health Organization of the United Nations, will share the burden, but nevertheless, the United States has promised the World Food Conference in Rome that food assistance to hungry countries may double. However, this undertaking has been temporarily shrugged aside until the U.S. can manage to establish long term political negotiations with such countries as South Vietnam, Cambodia, Chile, and several nations of the Middle East where more than half of the one billion dollar Food for Peace program is being devoted to the cause of political ax grinding. These countries, none of them considered to be on the list of most acute hunger pains, are receiving almost six hundred million dollars from the U.S. Meanwhile in Washington, Secretary of Agriculture, Earl Butz has shaved the humanitarian and food grant program down to approximately one hundred and twenty-three million dollars.

Recently Butz has penned a telegram to President Ford under pressure from a group of concerned Congressmen headed by Iowan senator Clark, requesting that the assistance level be increased from one hundred and seventy-five million to three hundred and fifty million dollars. There is no reason to believe that Butz has changed his negative opinion to the food situation as he is still a political bureaucrat concerning the food conference in Rome.

Government sources say that it is hard to calculate exactly how much grain is available for aid right now without even considering the probable one million ton increase as proposed. In a November 12th article of the New York Times, these sources said that the Food for Peace program has been "taken over by the National Security Council." When the Administration discovered that it had failed in having Congress vote for what it wanted in foreign assistance for such strategic nations as South Vietnam, it started to use Food for Peace as Food for Politics and thereby dropping humanitarian aid for political reasons.

What can be done? If, for example, fifteen per cent of the fertilizer consumption that is used in American lawns and golf courses was diverted to India, that nation could boost its wheat harvest by two to three million tons. But even if this or any other program was set into action, what could possibly be accomplished within the next few hungry months? How many will die; starve to death, by the time diplomatic relations are established? How many lives will be gambled and lost?

There are so many causes that the Americans must somehow latch themselves on to. Can we take them all on? Is America responsible for feeding, policing, running the world? In this situation the people can move while the government lies dormant.

Within the next week or so a relief fund is being organized on campus in expectation of sending enough money to these countries to make a difference; perhaps not a big difference, but what price can be set on a human life?

Another cause? Another guilt-ridden responsibility? Sure we need a veterinarian's school, and better racial understanding, an answer to busing problems, and gay's liberation; but right now we're dealing with life and death, and existence precedes essence. It's not a question of philosophy, gurus, or Christian brotherhood; it's a question of dollars and cents. So use some sense and then give some.

I blew the LSAT's

First there was the pressure, and now there is the peace. For months, maybe years it was building up. Then came the day when it all happened. "Will everyone please line up in two lines, to have your fingerprints taken?", said a man rather meekly, somewhat bored, and with no sense of drama.

Two lines. There were two lines of people getting ready to be printed. Only left thumbs were being used. Consistency is a key element for bureaucracy. A police bust? No way. This was the scene of the Law School Admissions Test Center at UMass on October twelfth. Rumors had gone out that this was "the test", if you flubbed this one, just forget being a lawyer....ever.

Sitting there. Listening. People sitting to the left of you. People sitting to the right of you. Nobody next to you for fear that such a move would encourage cheating. The monotone of the moderator inspiring us all on. Each student signing their name on the back of the test. "I swear that I am the person taking this test", and then you sign. This is to avoid cheating in the larger sense, by proxy. If worse gets to worse they can call in the FBI. Make no mistake about it, Educational Testing Service in Princeton, New Jersey is big business. Literally hundreds of thousands of people meekly submit themselves to the whims of this corporation every year. This corporation that can make or break your future.

On October 12, 1974 I was one of those people who decided to take the test. For weeks, rather months before the test there were ads in the paper "how to improve your score", "how to go places with the LSAT". Somehow prepping for a test like the LSATs seemed absurd, almost unethical. I decided not even to try.

Studied my Barrons, and kept taking the "trial" tests. For a month, two or three nights a week I would take a trial test. I'd read graphs about unemployment, passages about Babe Ruth, and answer questions concerning liability under the law. After a while the tests became predictable. My test scores were usually in the upper 500's.

There was an envelope waiting for me the other day. It had a clean printed address on it. It had my name on it, written only the way a computer printout can. On the top was the simple green letters, ETS. My fate was sealed.

So I decided to unseal my test. Reasoning that my fate was decided the day I took the test, and not now when the results were already without question, I didn't wait long before opening up the envelope. The score was there. Clear and foreboding. There could be no denying, it was a 466. Computer mistake? No way. My score was in the percentile that is considered "not probable" when your application is processed by Law Schools. In three hours, four years of solid academic work was negated. My hopes for Law School shattered, and I was calm.

Calm? What was there left to do? Sure I could take them again, and perhaps do better. But the point was that it was over. I had been so afraid of the results that I had done all my fretting before the results were in. Now, all that was left was to get philosophical.

Now I realize that by letting it all "hang out" and tell just how badly I did on the LSATs that some will really needle me with kind jokes. Some people will not be so kind. But I tell the 15,000 people who will read this column that I bombed out on the LSAT's, because that is the best that I can do, as my act of personal rebellion against Educational Testing Service in Princeton.

People treat them like they would a monarch." A letter from the King, is it an invitation to dinner, or an order to the tower?" I've even heard that there are some people who leave their LSAT score on their desks for days, waiting for the courage to open the envelope and find out their scores.

When I was in high school I wanted to go to Yale or Amherst. Both schools told me that I would be admitted if I just passed the SAT's. My verbal score on the SAT was a 480, and it looked like I might never go to College. After enthusiastic interviews and empty promises from these two noble institutions, the only letter received on April 15, 1971 (April 15, is the day of infamy for most high school seniors) were the standard "Dear   , the committee on Admissions is sorry to inform you....".

At the time of the SAT's I was really angry at myself for blowing the test. Now I realize that I'm just not a good test taker. Somehow sitting in a room with a dozen other people half scared out of their mind seems like something out of Kafka, Hesse, or even Solzhenitsyn. However it just doesn't seem to be the kind of criterior that will have a huge influence in determining your future

First ETS did their best to help keep me out of college. Now once again ETS has passed down "the word", and unless some member of the Admissions Office of the Law Schools that I want to go to really take the time to read my application, read my recommendations, there will be no Law School in the near future.

I'm not alone. My sympathy goes to those taking the GRE's, or the test for business school, or the business school or Med. School tests. The people from ETS say that their "standard" test is the best insurance against misleading data causes by grade inflation. While there is a problem with grad inflation, the answer doesn't seem to be in a three hour test.

O.K. Education Testing Service. You might win this year, like you did three years ago. I may never get into Columbia, Harvard or Yale. Perhaps not even Michigan, Wisconsin, Virginia or a list of half a dozen other fine Law Schools that I was interested in. But you won't stop me. You didn't stop me from going through college with honor's and you won't stop me from going through law school.

I won't give up. I may work a year, or simply travel. Go for a Master's Degree or try and write a book. But eventually I will get into Law School, because I want to be a lawyer. You once tried to tell me I'd never go to college, and I proved you wrong. I know literally hundreds of people who prove you wrong. People that you counted out, but who are doing well. People who you said "couldn't miss", and are just dead would. Sure, you admit that you make mistakes, doesn't everyone? Yeah, I guess so. But ETS, you're dealing with peoples lives.

You can't have mine. Maybe someday everyone else who is victimized by your arbitrary testing will stand up and do the same.

Tripoli not responsible

To the Editor:

I am quite dismayed, shocked and upset over the blatent hypocrisy or one of your columnists, Steve Tripoli. Not only have his articles in the past month been two faced but he has resorted to crying over spilled milk.

For those readers who are unaware of any of the background of my allegations I think a brief summation of the facts is in order. Around the middle of October Mr. Tripoli presented us with his reasoning behind the conclusion that Student Government should be abolished. He felt that the S.G.A. was ineffective, and in no way related to the needs and desires of the student body at UMass. For this he said that S.G.A. should be abolished and replaced with a union. Somehow in Mr. Tripoli's wisdom he feels that this would solve all the problems.

Maybe so, but why then when Mr. Tripoli was fired from his job at the Collegian does he turn to the Student Judiciary and the Attorney General's office to get his job back. If we are so unnecessary and non-responsive then why does he use a branch of the S.G.A. to solve his problems?

Then on Tuesday, November 12, 1974 the Judiciary finds the Collegian to be not guilty of Mr. Tripoli's charges that he was wrongly fired and that Mr. Tripoli's removal from the advertising staff was in fact proper given the circumstances. The interpretation of the decision was: the Collegian was not offering Mr. Tripoli an educational, vocational experience anymore by mere virtue of the fact that he had been removed from that ad staff, but more importantly, Mr. Tripoli was not taking advantage of the educational, vocational experience by being neglectful in his job and duties associated with that job. It is obvious that the Collegian feels that Mr. Tripoli is far more useful only as a Collegian columnist than as an ad rep as well as a columnist, being that part of the judges' decision was that Mr. Tripoli was not contributing to the welfare of the Collegian, the Collegian here meaning a group of students in an RSO who come together with a common interest in journalism and business procedure.

The final crap de l'ass is Mr. Tripoli's column of November 15, in which he says the court "either can't or won't see the real issue of the case." Although he never states it in his article, it is obvious to those who have been in anyway associated with his case that he is talking about his own case. Why doesn't he say so? Could it be that had he done so people would have seen his hypocrisy?

I feel that Mr. Tripoli is not being a responsible journalist and should look back at what he's done and re-evaluate his charges in October against the SGA and against the Student Judiciary.

Tripoli a great American

Dear Mr. Tripoli:

Your column "Leo who?" [11-7-74], was brought to my attention. Let me congratulate you on doing a very outstanding job of unbiased newsreporting which is much needed in not only this state but also this nation. Your exceptional writing reminds me of a statement by Abraham Lincoln: "Let the people know the facts and the country will be saved." Thank you very much in trying to save the country.

Why I am fasting

To the Editor:

Yesterday, the Collegian ran an article about my two week political hunger strike. I'd like you to know the motivation for this action.

In the last issue of Newsweek Magazine there was special coverage on the world food crisis and it stated that we are "witnessing mass starvation in the world on a scale never seen before." During the past two weeks I found myself bombarded by the facts of the world food shortage by the news media. I was tired of reading and talking about the food crisis. I wanted to act upon my beliefs and I wanted to help so I decided to undertake a hunger strike in witness to this world injustice. At first it was to be a personal, silent and symbolic protest. The decision to make my hunger strike public was difficult, I didn't want to draw attention to myself. I realized though, as a symbolic action it could only be effective made public; and only by making it public could I draw attention to the issue at hand: World Starvation.

In the same issue of Newsweek it is stated that the "U.S. can no longer remain an island of plenty in a sea of hunger — we must be wise and compassionate enough to design a better food security system or else we may see the beginning of the end of our civilization." A strong statement and perhaps a hard one to believe; however, if one does some serious reading and thinking about the world food crisis one can see if this consequence is not a possibility.

There have been many proposals raised as to the "how" of easing the food shortage around the world. There is one proposal that should be of special interest to all of us, that is: Eating Less. I emphasize this proposal over other proposals because it is one that each of us can act upon now something we as individuals can do.

Senator Hubert Humphrey suggested that "we eat one less hamburger a week in order to make more grain available for consumption by the world's hungry and was criticized by Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz as a 'fuzzy thinking do-gooder!'" Similarly, British Economist Barbara Ward "suggested that the Western affluent countries reduce their food consumption in order to free food for the one-third of the world that faces starvation, her plea was dismissed as impossibly high minded and utopian." In underdeveloped countries individuals consume about "400 pounds of grain each year, whereas in the U.S. nearly one ton of grain is consumed by us each year either directly through cereals and breads or indirectly through meat, eggs and milk [by grain fed animals]." Consumed indirectly through meat is an important issue; it takes "about 6 pounds of grain to produce one pound of meat." "If Americans decreased the amount of meat they consume by 10 per cent it would release enough grain for 60 million people." Also, we Americans are said to waste 25 per cent of the food we buy, if we take into account food contributing to obesity the figure raises to 50 per cent.

Thinking is the first step and every individual must decide for himself what he can change in his own life to help this situation. Plan your meals before you head for the food market; this will help you to not buy food you don't need and may not use. Buy and eat only as much as you need to stay healthy [what "healthy" is is an individual decision]. Use only as much food as you need for each meal; that way if you dislike leftovers there won't be any. The point of eating less meat must be stressed again. I can give suggestions but each of us must make decisions within our individual living situations as to what we can do to help. Eating less and wasting less are both steps we can take that are beneficial to us as well as the world food crisis and it won't cost you anything but some extra thinking.

The nation wide Fast for a World Harvest is on November 21 [this Thursday]. They are asking that the money you would save by not eating that day be donated to Oxfame-America, the group sponsoring the fast. They in turn would use the money to help the starving masses in the world. This day of fast is something we can do to become involved in the fight to relieve starvation. Keep in mind that fasting is the voluntary withdrawal of food while starvation occurs when food is involuntarily denied to the body.

McGilvray, never on Sunday

To the Editor:

I would like to make an editorial correction that appeared in the October 24 edition of the Collegian. Scott Bacherman referred to the Women's Media Project as the organization that presented a petition against Don McGilvray's cartoons for WMUA's advertising. This is false; the petition was presented by the Sunday News Collective. The people involved in the News Collective felt that Don's cartoons did not represent the views of an alternative media group.

As with all new awarenesses, whether they be collective or personal, it takes time for the necessary changes in individuals to see and recognize it. So it is with all new groups coming to WMUA. As a progressive radio station, WMUA welcomes new media groups to become involved with it's function. We endorsed and encouraged the efforts of the Women's Media Project, the Alternative News Collective, and the people involved with Gaybreak in the hope that WMUA may expose people to different views and perhaps even change their existing prospective of the world.

Abortion is a necessity

To the Editor:

This letter is addressed to Pallotta and Neimczura who wrote the so-called "pro-life" article. People like you make me angry. What right have you got to say whether or not a woman has the right to have a child? As far as I'm concerned the Catholic church has fucked up enough times that they are not even worth listening to anymore. You say that there are plenty of people waiting for children to adopt and this is true. I have heard of waiting lists as long as four years. But why should women who get pregnant go thru the pains of having the child just to give it away? Maybe the idea of setting up a baby-making service, "we make 'em you take 'em" sounds enterprising to you, but it is not going to work as long as women have a say with what their rights are! Or perhaps if abortion is abolished, will you take the responsibility for the black market abortions that will crop up once again, or maybe you can go into the coat hanger business. I suppose you want birth control abolished too. Why don't you just have sex abolished and then we won't have any problems. After all, sex is also a sin except for reasons for procreation, right?

I have known 12-16 year olds who have become pregnant or have even been raped and become pregnant. Do you expect them to ruin their future chances of making it in this world trying to bring up a child, without a father in many, [most] cases.

If the production of illegitimate and unwanted children went unchecked, how long do you think the dwindling resources of the world would last? What about our survival, would you be willing to give the food and clothing that you have worked for for yourself and your family to the many children, who will be [and are] without? It's not the value of human life that is going down it is the value of human rights! As far as the belief in Christianity is concerned, Jesus suffered and died for us anyway, he was only showing us our sins and it obviously didn't do much good. Because we are sinning today and tomorrow [and yesterday!] If you can prove to me that you are free of sin then you can tell me and everyone else what they are doing wrong. Will you be the one to cast the first stone?

Fast on Thursday

To the Editor:

On Thursday people will be fasting from the Dining Commons in the light of the recent problem of world wide starvation.

It would really be good if we could all participate in the fast. If people are at all concerned, if we, as affluent human beings care at all, we can help.

Red Cross blood drive successful, beneficial

By CARL LUKENS
Staff Reporter

The UMass Campus was visited again this semester by the American Red Cross Blood Program, sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega and Gamma Sig. From Monday to Thursday, 1319 people, students, faculty and University Personel, as well as walk-ins from the area, went through the hour-long procedure of giving pints of blood.

It seemed like "a good thing to do" replied Steve Lewis, (a 20-year-old sophomore from Ashland, Mass. living in Orchard Hill), when asked why he took the time to go through the 6-stationed procedure and give blood. "I feel like I've done something worthwhile".

While waiting to be asked whether he would want coffee, coke, ham and cheese, or a peanut butter and jelly sandwich during the 15 minute rest period after, the 3-time donor said there was little or no pain at all involved, and that the people were "very friendly" and "made him feel at ease".

He added, "I feel like I've done something that is worthwhile". "The feeling you can receive from giving blood encourages you to continue helping people."

The people responsible for creating this friendly atmosphere were faculty wives, volunteer nurses, student nurses from the University, Senior Citizens, Red Cross staff, The Junior Women's Club and student service organizations.

The blood donated will first go to Springfield, from where it will be distributed to the 25 hospitals in Western Massachusetts. A small proportion of the blood is sent to Boston to be typed and tested; the results will be sent to the appropriate donor. The blood program visits colleges, industries, high schools and localized blood banks of the 4 counties of Western Massachusetts.

So this reporter's advice to the person who is wondering what the individual can do to help or change things is to give blood and the next time she-he can, and perhaps save a life.

Energy referendum... what will happen?

By JOHN BUSCAGUA
Alternative Energy Coalition

Progressive news Service is the result of many people's need for free access to the media on a regular basis. Anyone who wishes to write an article or a series of articles, should submit them to the PNS, c-o Veteran's Coalition, in the Student Union, second floor.

Two of the referendum questions on election ballot last election concerned nuclear powerplants in this area. The results of those questions made it clear that a substantial number of voters in this district -- even more than was expected -- are opposed to the construction and continued operation of nuclear powerplants.

On the first question, one voter out of every two voted to oppose the construction of the twin nuclear plants at Montague, and, on the second, one out of every three voted to shut down and dismantle the plants presently operating at Rowe, Massachusetts, and Vernon, Vermont.

Last spring, a referendum regarding the proposed Montague plants was placed before the town of Montague itself. At that time, it was expected that the plants would receive approximately an 8-1 approval in Montague, though the actual results showed only a 3-to-1 approval. With last Tuesday's election, the margin of support had diminished to 2-1. What this means is that, even in the town which will supposedly receive direct economic benefits from the plants, one out of every three voters is opposed to the Montague plants. And the movement to stop the plants from being built seems to be growing.

Throughout the state senatorial district the vote was extremely close on the first question, the question to oppose the construction of the Montague plants. In some towns, like Amherst, Sunderland, and Leverett, the question was carried by a substantial majority, while in many others it came within a few per cent of a majority. The final figure for the entire district was slightly over 47 per cent, or about one out of every two voters, in favor of the question to oppose the Montague nuclear plants.

The second referendum called for the closing and dismantling of the two currently operating nuclear powerplants in Rowe, Mass., and Vernon, Vermont. As might be expected, this question received less support than the first. Approximately 33 per cent of the voters approved this question, which was still considerably higher than anticipated. This means that one voter in every three favors closing and dismantling these plants immediately.

Reaction to the outcome of the referendum was varied. Northeast Utilities was conspicuously silent, stating only that the referendum will in no way affect their plans for the construction of the Montague plants.

The Alternative Energy Coalition, who originally placed the two questions on the ballot, asks: "How can Northeast Utilities, which is ostensibly devoted to serving the public, simply disregard the expressed opinion of half the people it claims to serve? This is simply not a responsible position to take."

The AEC also observed that this was a new issue for the voting public and one about which many people were still uncertain. Several thousand voters who cast ballots for political candidates did not vote on the nuclear power referenda. The political impact of the first question's 47 per cent support might swing enough of these undecided voters to gain a majority on the first question, the AEC says, if the referendum were held again today.

Anyone who wishes to join in this effort can contact the Amherst office of the Alternative Energy Coalition at 253-2564.

Environmental Economics course offered

For the second year, the popular course, "Environmental Economics" will be offered by the Dept. of Food and Resource Economics. The course is especially geared for environmental advocates who want to learn why ecological awareness in governmental decision-making is so difficult to achieve.

The 3-credit course, FRE 226, will be taught by Professor Barry C. Field. It will meet Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 9 a.m.

"We'll look at the present economic incentives that cause environmental degradation and explore alternative economic arrangements for reversing the trend," Field said.

He said the course assumes an interest in economic policy and environmental quality, but does not require any economics courses as prerequisites.

For further information, call Prof. Field at 545-2493.

UMass Credit Union soon to be a reality

The University Federal Credit Union, a credit union for UMass students, may soon be a reality on this campus if all goes according to the plans of the Credit Union Coalition, a group of concerned students operating under sponsorship of the Student Organizing Project.

"We will have a table set up from about 10:00 AM to 4:00 PM, Tuesday through Thursday of this week to sign up people who would be interested in depositing their money in the credit union," says Peter Birnbaum, president of the Credit Union Coalition. The table will be in the Campus Center Concourse.

According to Birnbaum, the purpose of the table is to sign up interested parties so that when the credit union opens, it will have a list of potential members. "At this point, we aren't asking for money. What we're after is an indication of how many students are interested enough in a credit union to sign 'intent to join' cards. These cards aren't even legally binding. They are just a way of showing who's interested."

Coalition members will be present at the table to explain what a credit union is and how it could benefit UMass students.

"The primary purpose of a credit union," Birnbaum said "is to provide its members with low-cost loans and high-interest savings. Control of credit union affairs lies in the hands of a democratically-elected board of directors.

"The whole idea of forming our own credit union is to give students a chance to have their money working directly for them. Since the savings, which will be insured, are invested in student loans, investments that will directly benefit students, and other sound financial investments, students benefit twice: once from the high interest rates and once from the nature of the investments."

Membership in the proposed credit union would be open to students, (both undergraduate and graduate) student employees, and former members who graduate. A nominal membership fee of about fifty cents and a minimum deposit of $5.00 will be required of new members, but the fee will be waived for those who sign up during this week.

Larry Parks, no apologies necessary for performance

Apology For Larry Parks, the first production of this year's University Theater season, which played this past weekend in the Studio Theater, has as its best asset, good ensemble acting spotlighted with very fine performances in the leading roles.

The play is an original adaptation of a book by Eric Bentley, Are You Now Or Have You Ever Been? a condensation of testimony before the House Committee on Un-American Activities on the influence of the Communist Party in show business. As conceived by Don Nigro, a graduate student in playwriting at UMass and director Gary Stewart, a faculty member in the theater department, the production is a dramatization of selections of testimony before the Committee by Larry Parks, a mediocre actor who suddenly rose to stardom by playing the celebrated jazz-singer, Al Jolson in the 1946 film, The Jolson Story and later in Jolson Sings Again.

Parks admits to having been a member of the Communist Party, but finds himself in a moral and political crisis when he is finally forced to reveal the names of other party members within the motion picture industry. Through a series of dream sequences and actual testimony re-enactments, the play examines the mind of a man who is torn between the fear of incriminating himself and the guilt of betraying his friends.

The timelessness of the set and the closeness provided by the Studio Theater with its audience capacity of about 45, were well applied in maintaining a sense of intimacy and inward exploration into a confused and guilty conscience.

Robin Swados, who portrays Larry Parks for his Senior Honors Thesis, plays the role with sensitivity, control, and an acute awareness of Parks' pathetic situation. During the hearing scenes, he has the obvious charm of a celebrity often in the public eye, but slowly under heavy strain from Committee interrogation, he loses his cool, his chain-smoking becomes more apparent as he takes more and more shorter puffs from a cigarette, his slow pacing becomes faster and more erratic, and his pleasant voice begins to stutter as he trips over repeated questioning by the Chief Counsel.

Towards the end, when he exposes the names of fellow party members, and denies knowing others when asked, his voice becomes anguished but constrained, in a painful rhythmic recitation. He has lost his career, and has become as he knew he would all along, a completely ruined man.

Jim O'Connell is absolutely marvelous as the bored, mindless Committee chairman. His constant references to "Mistah Pahks" and his empty rhetoric on the blasphemous theater provided some much needed comic relief.

Also giving fine performances were Michael A. Guido as the Defense Counsel, and the four representatives on the Committee, Marc Cuddy, Bob Tracey, Harry Dion, and Rick Martin.

The additional 6-member chorus however proved most of the time to be annoyance on an already overcrowded stage.

The only real problem with Apology For Larry Parks is that it takes itself too seriously, that it tries to say too much in too little time, which is why the chairman's comical remarks come as such a welcome diversion.

What exactly is Larry Parks trying to say? Is Larry Parks Everyman, and are we supposed to figure out what we'd do in his universal dilemma? Or is it about making close-minded judgments on a person's morality without examining one's own morals? Parks toward the end starts condemning the audience. Is he criticizing us the way we criticize art? Or does it all come down to the old cliche of man's inhumanity to man? Perhaps Larry Parks questions all these things. Perhaps more, and maybe that's all it set out to do so that we must wait for "Larry Parks Apoligizes Again" to tell us more.

... just a reminder that anyone can play at the Hatch Wednesday Night Coffee House.

Just call Ed any time at 584-6279 and reserve yourself a spot.

Boston pub schools teaching rep on campus

William Bergen, a representative from the Boston Public Schools, will be on campus tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Room 904-908 Campus Center to talk with any seniors or graduate students who might be interested in teaching in Boston.

Teaching opportunities in Boston seem encouraging for minority applicants with Massachusetts teacher certification, especially at the secondary level, and for the bilingually certified. Openings are likely also in mathematics, general science, biology, chemistry, physics, home economics, physical education, and industrial arts. In special education the fields for teachers of speech and hearing, severely emotionally disturbed, and the visually handicapped are promising.

In order to be on the April Eligible List for September 1975 positions, the essential first step is that the candidate take the January National Teachers Examination in the Teaching Area of the Massachusetts Teaching Certificate, if the candidate wishes to teach that level or subject.

At the time of registration at Princeton, he-she must also notify the Board of Examiners, 15 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. 02108, that he-she has registered, has requested Educational Testing Service to send the score to R7420 (at the Board of Examiners of the Boston Public Schools), and is interested in a specific Eligible List. The closing date for registration and notification is January 2, 1975.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, November 21

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — It is your own personal contacts that count today. Don't rely on others to do for you what you can easily do for yourself. Take on responsibility.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — There is nothing to be gained by flattery alone. You can apply soft-soap initially, but for results you would be wise to follow it up with hard work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — The wise Capricorn will stick fairly close to routine today. This is no time to experiment either with a project or a method.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Although you may have to step out of line in order to do a friend a good turn, for the most part you would do well to keep close to home.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Morning hours are not such that they inspire confidence. Work through the difficult hours, however, and you should be able to gain by evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — New developments early in the day make this a Thursday to remember for a long time. Get new project underway as soon as possible.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Refuse to be stopped by obstacles that seem to have arisen overnight. You may be slowed down — but you need not give in completely.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — The quickest way to get things done is not always the safest. Even if it postpones the attainment of your goal, seek the best method of operation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A day which begins with a flourish — but is very likely to end simply by petering out. Do what you can to explain yourself to an unbeliever.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You can catch up with the competition today if you are quick to take advantage of an opportunity for gain early in the day. Bestir yourself!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — The wise Virgo will take on no new responsibilities until he is certain the old ones have been met. Children may work a hardship in the afternoon.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Take care of unfinished business as early in the day as possible. Otherwise, you will find yourself under mountain of work by week's end.

Howard, Frank, and quality

By RON ARENA
Sports Staff

Ah yes, Monday night football, in the beginning known as Monday night madness, the greatest new dimension to sport coverage since the instant replay. An end to the Monday night doldrums. Give the wife a few bucks to take out the kids, buy a six-pack and a bag of pretzels, relax in your favorite chair and enjoy a night of paradise.

Without a doubt, when ABC introduced this gem, the sports fan drooled in his mug. Tears of joy blotted his morning paper. Alas, something other than Medical Center! Dinnertime cliches of "How was your day?" fell victim to such classics as "How many points does the Greek have Miami favored by tonight?"

Along with this delirium came a new concept of broadcasting. People no longer thought the "big three" as G.M., Ford, and Chrysler, but as Keith Jackson, Don Meredith, and Howard Cosell, the original crew. They added a new light to the mike, humor and informality. They were loved, they were hated, but most importantly they were talked about. Their style became the most prolific creation to hit the media since the nightly talk show.

But finally, after four years of greatness, Monday night football has faultered. To quote a certain musician, "The thrill is gone." What has caused this decline of trauma such that the halftime films result in the highlight of the show?

Commentary

The first fault lies in the announcers. With Don Meredith gone, the crew lacks unity. Frank Gifford as play-by-play announcer, succeeding Jackson, just doesn't communicate any sense of excitement. If a poll were taken rating individuals on their charismatic qualities, Gifford would rank behind such notables as Pat Paulsen, Tom Johnson, and Richard Nixon. Rumor has it that Roone Arledge waves thousand dollar bills in front of "the Giff" to keep him awake.

And Howard Cosell, well what can be said about Howard? He does add humor to the game and would probably outscore any coach in a trivia quiz. His biggest fault though, arises from his somewhat liberal usage of the word "great". To Howard, a player rates this adjective if he:

a) once tackled Joe Bellino or Wayne Patrick or both, or

b) once intercepted a pass floated by either John Huarte, Norm Snead or Joe Kapp.

With standards like these, the WFL must have a surplus of talent.

And finally Meredith's replacement, Alex Karras. I swear it was Alex's mother who coined the phrase "dumb jock". Karras has done little to tarnish this image with such stellar acting performances as "Mongo" in Blazing Saddles, and lest we forget, The 400-Pound Jerk. His lack of displaying any intelligence should be an insult to the audience. For instance, in a recent telecast, placekicker David Ray of the Rams tried to run in an extra point after a fumble prompting Karras to shout "He's going all the way, folks!" This comment also proved how many times he is wrong as Ray didn't even go all the way.

The bulk of the fault though, can be found in the scheduling. Of ten games so far, only two contests did both teams have a winning record. We've had such eye-opening teams in Atlanta, the Jets, and Philadelphia, and have viewed such nerve-wracking battles as Denver-Kansas City, Detroit-San Francisco, and Green Bay-Chicago. Maybe an audience demand will even bring back these classics as summer reruns.

Granted, some games have been exciting (no thanks to the announcers) such as Buffalo-Oakland and next weeks' Miami-Cincinnati struggle should be. But for the most part, the matchups have been poor.

Next year, ABC hopes to lure Joe Namath off the field and into the booth. If Namath agrees, a vast improvement will be made. As for the schedule, we can only wait. One thing for sure though, if it does not out-do its current repertoire, Maude and Rhoda can be assured of high ratings once again.

Van Breda Kolff gets Jazz job

NEW ORLEANS [AP] - Bill van Breda Kolff was named coach of the New Orleans Jazz Monday, replacing Scotty Robertson who was fired Sunday just before the fledgling franchise's 16th game.

Van Breda Kolff takes over a National Basketball Association team which has won only one of its first 16 games. Sunday night the Jazz lost their 15th to Detroit 99-85 with assistant coach Elgin Baylor in charge.

Van Breda Kolff, who once benched Wilt Chamberlain during a playoff game and as a result later was fired, said no changes in Jazz strategy would be made until he has had a chance to assess his new team.

Although the new Jazz coach conceded he was unsure of all of the terms in his contract, he described it as "a trusting one."

"I never worry about contracts," he said. "If you do good, you don't need to worry about one. If you don't, you don't deserve the protection."

The appointment put the fiery van Breda Kolff at the helm of his fifth professional basketball team in seven years.

In his first two years of professional coaching, 1968 and 1969, he guided Los Angeles to NBA division championships.

But he and star Lakers' center Chamberlain became engaged in a public, running feud. Van Breda Kolff called Chamberlain a quitter and benched him in the seventh game of the 1968-69 title series. The Lakers dropped the game 108-106, and van Breda Kolff was fired.

After being ousted by the Lakers, van Breda Kolff guided Detroit to a 31-51 season in 1969-70, 45-37 the following year and was 6-6 before losing his job in 1971-2.

He put in a brief stint with Phoenix, guiding the Suns to a 3-4 mark before moving to the American Basketball Association with Memphis. He went 21-63 at Memphis last season and was not rehired.

BU, Crimson picks in hockey poll

BOSTON [AP] — Boston University, Harvard and Cornell have taken their usual places a top the preseason poll of Eastern collegiate hockey coaches, but no one is betting the season will end that way.

The University of New Hampshire, which led national ratings most of last season, was ranked fourth, according to a poll of 29 eastern coaches conducted by the Boston Sunday Globe and the Hockey Newsletter.

Boston University, the defending Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference champion, was rated first because of its impressive scoring power. All 17 returning players scored in double figures last season, and BU has two All-Americans, including defenseman Vic Stanfield.

The Terriers also play seven of their toughest nine games at home.

BU received 16 first-place votes; Harvard had 18; and New Hampshire received one. Vermont, a scrappy newcomer to Division One is ranked eighth. Other top ten teams include Brown 5; St. Lawrence 6; Rensselaer Polytech 7; Providence 9; and Dartmouth 10.

Assuming that BU, Harvard and Cornell, a perennial powerhouse, slug it out for first place, the coaches see the rest of the division as a dead beat. New Hampshire has an All-American goalie and veteran defense, but Brown has several top sophomores moving up from an undefeated freshman team.

St. Lawrence, which reversed nine straight losses last season to make the play-offs, is considered a dark-horse challenger.

Cornell coach Dick Bertrand bases his challenge for the number one ranking on depth and experience at every position.

"We'll use five sophomores, ten juniors and six seniors. That's good balance," he said. Rounding out the rankings, from 11th through 17th are Boston College, Clarkson, Northeastern, Pennsylvania, Princeton, Yale and Colgate.

WFL Americans need $750,000

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. [UPI] -- Birmingham Americans' owner Bill Putnam Monday said the World Football League Club must have $750,000 to pay its bills for the remainder of the season.

Putnam said the team had been relatively successful during its first season, taking in "a little over $2.3 million at the gate.

"Our preliminary figures show a loss of only $300,000 from the time we began putting this together last December," Putnam said. "That's not a bad loss for your first year."

However, he said the team must have $750,000 to pay about $90,000 in state taxes, $14,000 each in city and county sales taxes and four weeks in back player salaries.

Rucker claims Pats jinxed

By GIL PETERS
UPI Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — Reggie Rucker thinks someone put the whammy on the New England Patriots this season.

"It seems like we were cursed," said Rucker Monday night after being shelved for the season as the result of a broken wrist he suffered six weeks ago. Also placed on injured reserve list and out for the season were star running back Sam Cunningham and wide receiver Steve Schubert — both injured in Sunday's loss to the New York Jets.

"First I was hurt, then (Darryl) Stingley, then Bob (Windsor) then Sam. These guys are all good players and you can't get hurt and not have it affect the team."

The Patriots chances of a miracle rise in the NFL fell steadily with the unending injuries to key players. New England won its first five games then lost four of its next five.

Rucker broke his wrist in the fourth game, but played the next six with a lightweight cast. Wide receiver Stingley broke his forearm in the fifth game; Windsor, a big tight end, tore up his knee scoring the last-second game winning touchdown against Minnesota in the seventh game and Cunningham and Schubert were crippled two weeks later.

Cunningham suffered a fractured fibula of the lower right leg after slashing 18 yards to the Jet five late in the fourth period to set up the possible winning touchdown. Schubert reinjured his right knee making a tackle on a punt.

But Rucker did not reinjure his slow healing wrist. "No, I didn't reinjure it. It's (being placed on injured reserve) got to do with my inability to play like I want to and do the things I can't do with the cast on. And it's got to do with giving a performance that's less than my best."

The fifth year pro from Boston University refused to comment when asked if there was a disagreement between him and coach Chuck Fairbanks over the deactivation.

"I met with Chuck today (Monday). I expected something to happen for one reason or another. But I decided that if he didn't call me into his office that I was going in on my own."

Rucker caught two passes for 24 yards against the Jets but dropped one that was in his hands for a potential long gainer.

"Mentally the injury was getting me down to the point where it was getting me down as a person. The passes keep hitting you and bouncing off the cast (which loops around the palm of his hand). It's great playing injured when things are going well. But Sunday...I just couldn't get the ball."

The Patriots have just two healthy wide receivers — Randy Vataha and Eddie Hinton. They also will use former Georgia quarterback Andy Johnson, a rookie special team member, at wide receiver.

Erving leads ABA scoring

NEW YORK [UPI] — Julius Erving of the New York Mets, aided by a 44-point performance against Kentucky on Nov. 13, has retained his scoring leadership in the American Basketball Association for the third consecutive week, it was announced today.

Erving, the defending ABA scoring champion, has scored 515 points in 18 games for a 28.6 average. Travis Grant of San Diego ranks second with a 27.9 mark and George McGinnis of Indiana of third with a 25.2 average.

A real fish story

As one looks through the sports pages and reads about the new leagues such as the World Hockey Association, the World Football League, the North American Soccer League, the American Soccer League, World Team Tennis and World Team Boxing, yet another new league is planned to start play next year, that being World Team Swimming.

Johnny Weismuller, Mark Spitz and Don Scholander are the founders of the new league, with Weismueller temporarily acting as commissioner.

The WTS, like the WFL, prides itself in its original team names. They are: The Toronto Trout, who will be coached by Shrimp Heat; the Johnstown Flood, who will be coached by Bill Rivers; the Buffalo Bends, coached by Phil Waters; the Boston Bikinis, coached by Tom Trunks; the BisMarck Spitz, coached by Mark Spitz; the New York Wets, coached by Splash Gordon; the Chicago Cramps, coached by Fred Nausea; the Miami Dolphins, coached by Whitey Waves; the Newark Noseplugs (who will have a unique emblem of a huge nose with two plugs in it), coached by Jack Meoff; the Schnectady Skinnydippers, coached by Craig Nickerson; the Olympia Pools, coached by Wade N. Pool; the Phoenix Sundecks, coach unnamed; and the Topeka Towels, coached by Terry Cloth.

The league plans to expand in two years and place teams in Reno and Fairbanks.

As in the case with all new leagues, the WTS is having some problems in some of its cities. The Buffalo Bends have no facility of their own and they must share one with the Buffalo Braves of the NHL. The Bends must wait for the ice to melt in the hockey arena for each meet and even then they only have four inches of water in which to swim. Bends' coach, Phil Waters, said, "It will be tough on the divers."

Other teams are experiencing schedule conflicts with local YMCA's.

Commissioner Weismueller announced that there will be 13 divisions, one for each team. "The only requirement to make the playoffs," the old Tarzan explained, "is to make it through the season without folding financially."

The Commissioner also announced that second graders can only be signed by the WTS teams in hardship cases.

The league takes unique positions by endorsing drugs and gambling.

To promote attendance, the various teams will sponsor giveaway attractions such as fin and goggle nights.

The WTS has already signed a T.V. contract. WH20 will televise one meet a week. They have finally found a sport for Chris Schenkel to cover, as he will do the play by play along with Curt Gowdy and Fipper, who will be the colorfish.

Each week a knowledgable guest commentator will join the broadcast crew. Already signed up to appear are Eviel Knievel, Joe Frazier, Pearl Bailey, Fred "The Hammer" Williamson and Lloyd Bridges. Floyd Flounder will be the rule explaining cartoon character.

The sponsors also have been decided. They will be Visine and Nair.

Commissioner Weismueller also announced a new concept in swimming cards. "You just add water to them," he said.

One of the WTS swimming events will be the dead man's float. Everyone will be out to break the late Marc Wachtell's record of two days and four hours. The record is unofficial because they couldn't tell just when Wachtell died while establishing the mark. Other events will be the dog paddle and the long distance pool walking event.

Since the arenas have such small seating capacities, fans will be given the choice of paying five dollars for a seat or paying ten dollars to be allowed in the pool to swim alongside their favorite swim star.

The new league will begin play on November 1, 1975 and will end its first season, culminating with the Fish Bowl, on October 31, 1976.

Cowens to practice

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Celtics could learn today when they can begin playing their type of basketball again.

Center Dave Cowens, the NBA's most valuable player two years ago and the key figure in last season's title victory, was to work out with the team today at the Celtics' Lexington practice site.

Cowens, who broke a bone in his foot in preseason play, has not appeared in Boston's first 16 games and the Celtics have staggered to a 9-7 mark.

Also testing a healing injury will be second-year cornerman Phil Hankinson, who underwent knee surgery before the start of the season.

Cowens reportedly can run at top speed straight ahead but has yet to attempt any sharp cuts. Hankinson is reported healthy by slightly out of condition.

If the two are activated for Wednesday night's game in Providence, R.I., against Golden State, the Celtics will have to trim a pair of players from their roster.

Harriers capture ic4As

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

Staff Photo by Mike Gillen

Coach Ken O'Brien enjoys IC4A title with Bill Gillin (middle) and Tom Wilson (right) after learning of UMass victory.

There's a maxim that states, "On the day of victory none are tired." Yesterday definitely was THE DAY of victory for the UMass harriers, but tired was not a very good descriptive word; it was more like exhausted. But somehow the thrill of winning the IC4A Championship compensated for the pain and hard work that began a year ago when the Minutemen runners placed fifteenth at the NCAA Championships.

The victory was the first IC4A (Intercollegiate Athletic Association of Amateur Athletes) Championship in UMass cross country history. After the UMass victory was announced, an emotionally touched Ken O'Brien commented, "The team wanted it so badly; we've been working for this for a year. We thought we could do it, but to win it..." O'Brien was so elated he had trouble expressing his feelings. Tears of joy trickled from O'Brien's eyes after the long wait for final results that followed the race, as coaches, fans and reporters congratulated the UMass coach. O'Brien added, "I thought we could place two runners in the top seven, but the guys ran better up front than I thought they would." Randy Thomas outran everyone in the race except Dennis Trujillo, who took an early lead and was never really challenged. Thomas ran a fantastic race in his last appearance at the IC4A's and his last college cross country meet in the East. While Thomas was waiting for the official results he typified the closeness of a cross country team and showed just how much the meet meant to the harriers, saying, "If we don't win this meet, our places don't mean a damn thing."

It may be self-satisfying for an individual to place first or second in a race, but team success is what cross country running is all about. For Thomas and company, the success was marked by finishing first at the competition-filled IC4A meet, a fitting climax to the four-year careers of Thomas, Bill Gillin and Tom Wilson.

The team came a long way since 1971, the year in which Thomas placed ninety-sixth at the IC4A's and UMass finished twenty-third in a field of twenty-five teams. In 1972, the UMass runners finished tenth and jumped to third a year ago.

Gillin, who was just five seconds behind Thomas, captured fifth, as UMass placed two runners in the top ten, something no other UMass harrier had ever before accomplished. "I was tired at the two-mile mark, but I just kept rolling," said Gillin, who noted that the cheers and word that the rest of the team was doing well provided incentive to continue pushing. "We were more psyched than for any other meet," added Gillin, and it showed as the distancemen achieved a goal set by the team in September.

"I was tired," admitted Thomas after the race. "Anyone would've been tired running that pace, but in the heat of a race you forget about being tired," said the senior co-captain. Thomas was in fifth place after half of the five-mile race had been completed. Within the next mile, the moustached harrier moved into third and on rugged Cemetery Hill, Thomas passed Villanova's Eamonn Coghlan to move into second, a position he held for the last mile of the race.

John McGrail, who finished fiftieth in 1973, also overcame fatigue and placed thirteenth. "I got out relatively quick, and although I was tired near the two-mile mark, I didn't have time to think about it," commented the team's third finisher. McGrail was running step for step with a Georgetown runner for a part of the race and his desire to win enabled him to beat Gordon Oliver of Georgetown by two seconds. "I knew they (Georgetown) were strong, so I wanted to beat him (Oliver)," explained McGrail. It was no surprise that McGrail beat Oliver, because as opposing runners have learned, McGrail is a tough competitor, thriving on competition.

The harriers finished with the winning score of 106, nineteen points ahead of Providence College, which was ranked fourth in the latest national cross country poll. UMass placed two runners ahead of the Friars' first man, Tommy Smith, who captured tenth. The top three runners beat New England champion Mike O'Shea, the fourteenth place finisher.

Tom Wilson finished thirty-seventh, using a strategy with which he feels comfortable. Wilson went out a little slower than his teammates, picked up places in the middle of the race and then held his position at the end of the race. The fourth UMass harrier ran his best race at Van Cortlandt Park, knowing that Thomas, Gillin and McGrail were going well. "I could see the maroon shirts up ahead of me and it helped," stated the senior harrier.

The rest of the team pointed to the "super performances" of Thomas, Gillin and McGrail. John Scheer, the team's seventh man, noted that UMass was the only team that had three NCAA finalists on its roster. Gillin and Wilson were NCAA steeplechase finalists while Thomas ran the NCAA three-mile during the track season. "We're a better team than this season indicates," quipped Scheer, and certainly the harriers proved that in New York yesterday.

Other finishers in the top ten included Coghlan of Villanova, the third finisher, Alexander Kasick of West Virginia, who placed fourth, Ronald Speirs, Gary Cohen, Jim Peterson and Kevin McCarey.

Tom Maguire finished sixty-first, the fifth UMass runner to complete the challenging course. Although Maguire did not run as well as he did in 1973 when he placed twenty-seventh and ran fifty seconds faster, he was instrumental in the team's outstanding effort. Maguire finished one place behind Providence's fifth man, Gerry Redmond, and the unbeatable front running of Thomas, Gillin and McGrail more than made up for that one point difference.

Navy's tight pack running earned the Midshipmen third place behind UMass and Providence. Georgetown captured fourth and Northeastern placed fifth as New England took three of the top five positions. It was tremendous victory for the harriers, who have only one race left together — the NCAA Championships.

Dave Eibel

David, the Minuteman

Okay folks, strap yourselves in and close your eyes. It's time to go back in time.

Back to a cold November day in 1972, on Thanksgiving weekend to be exact, when we enter Alumni Stadium with 20,000 other football fans for the battle of New England football supremacy.

On one side of the field the Boston College Eagles stand rubbing their hands together to fight the frigid elements. On the opposite side of the field a band of redshirted individuals united in a common cause clap their hands at the expectation of fighting the hated Eagle and for the first time in 60 years, clipping its wings.

Then on a day that will live forever in the hallowed halls of UMass sports history, the Minuteman, firing from the hip with careful aim, shot the Eagle down for evermore.

It was 28-7 UMass over BC, Saturday, November 25, 1972. The bell on Chestnut Hill didn't peal that day. The mystique of BC was destroyed forever as UMass proved to themselves and to those smug Bostonians who would listen, that Aggie football could compete with the silver-helmeted Eagles.

Then there was last year, a year we'd all like to forget. The battle between the Hill and the Valley ended in Himalayan-like proportions, 59-14 for BC.

And now there's this year. If anything the game's a natural, for a certain kind of sports fan. If you're into the David-and-Goliath cult, you'll love this one. Sit in Section 11 and fire your rocks at Fred Steinfort who's just killing time before he threads the uprights for some team in the NFL, or Mike Kruczek who thinks that the BC turkey shoot is standing behind a ton of offensive linemen and completing 65 per cent of his passes.

This year, no one on this campus can say that the game is for New England football supremacy. UMass may have won a share of the Beanpot, but it's only a share with a team they clobbered 42-0. It hasn't been a good year for football on this campus. Although the potential has been there all year, it's been evident only in fits and starts. Any time the Minutemen machine started rolling, it was ingloriously brought to a thudding halt, more from UMass mistakes than anything else. Sure, officials may have cost UMass two or three games, but the fact is that UMass would have beaten Holy Cross, UConn, and Vermont if it could have avoided untimely fumbles and interceptions. Mistakes are mental, but the more you make them, the harder it is to stop making them. It's a vicious circle, and UMass was caught up in it all through the season.

But although the game seems a foregone conclusion, a game's a game and anything can happen on any given day. In other words UMass football players have got to put BC's 6-3 record out of their minds as well as the Eagles' tough schedule.

The Minutemen have got to go into the game fresh. Forget their own season and BC's. Just think of Saturday.

BC can't afford to lose to the Minutemen. Losing to their Western Mass. rivals would have people in Boston scoffing at the fact that BC opens with Notre Dame next year.

On the other hand UMass has everything to gain by pulling off what would rank as *the*Upset of the eastern season. It would quiet some of the discontents on this campus who still can't get Vermont out of their heads, and for the players, it would make 1974 a season to remember.

So the stage is set for what many of the people on this campus feel could be one of the most humiliating defeats ever suffered by a UMass team.

But who can tell what might happen if the Minuteman's rifle turns into a cannon this Saturday?

It could put David to shame.

Fasters should tell Commons' workers

Action needed today for fast

UMies who eat in the dining commons can participate in a nationwide fast Thursday to protest famine conditions around the world by taking action today.

Arthur Warren, acting director of Food Services, said yesterday students willing to give up one, two or all three meals Thursday should tell ticket takers today as they go through breakfast, lunch and dinner lines.

The ticket takers will then cross of the correct number of tickets numbered for Thursday according to the individual student's wishes.

Tonight dining commons workers will tabulate the number of meals crossed off for Thursday. Seventy-five cents for each meal not served will be donated to "Oxfam-America", an international non-profit famine relief organization, Warren said.

Warren said students who plan to fast for one, two or three meals Thursday should not eat more at other meals as a result because no money will be saved.

"The problem will be if students decide to give up their dinner meal and then eat more lunch instead," Warren said yesterday, adding, "that wouldn't be in the spirit of a fast."

The Food Services Dept. spends about $15,000 per day feeding 11,000 UMass students who are enrolled in two or three meal plans, according to Warren. Theoretically, the bulk of that could be turned over to Oxfam if the entire campus chooses to fast on Thursday.

The fast plan was worked out between Warren and student Food Services Board head Matthew J. Burns at a Monday meeting.

Faculty Senate stops hiring policy probe

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
Staff Reporter

An UMass professor has been denied access to the assembled Faculty Senate to challenge the hiring policies in the appointment of a fellow professor.

Dr. Benjamin Ricci, in a recent Faculty Senate Rules Committee meeting, petitioned to address his challenge of Dr. Gideon Ariel's appointment to the Exercise Science Department before the entire Faculty Senate. The Rules Committee denied Ricci's request claiming it was not empowered by precedent or constitution to establish personnel hiring policy.

The Committee further concluded that even if the issues of product endorsement and double publication of articles by a university professor were considered separately by the Senate Committees, the structure of the committee system as it now stands is inadequate to handle the issues.

Despite the fact, the Governance Policy issued by the Trustees of the University, specifically provides for the organization of faculty into governing bodies and empowers them with "the privilege of recommending policies and procedures affecting the campus and the University as a whole including matters of faculty status" the Rules Committee concluded it could not rule on policy procedures involved in the hiring of Ariel.

Richard Lautit, head of the Psychology department, asked, "The Faculty Senate is not constituted to take action on specific personnel issues, to pass on motions which affect the academic processes. Can we even entertain action individual personnel matters?"

"The Senate has ever attempted to prescribe for faculty recruitment. We would be breaking into entirely new territory of academic development," says David Booth, professor of Political Science.

Stephenson Fletcher of Hotel and Restaurant Administration echoed the committee's consensus of the Senate's inability to with the issues of the Ariel case. "The Faculty Senate is a powerful body when operating in it's proper place."

He questioned "the ability of the Senate of endorsing for faculty new

Preregistration week is now in progress

Preregistration for the spring semester for all UMass students is now in progress.

To register students should already have received a computer coding sheet to indicate their course preferences. In addition, a course description guide to select courses and a schedule guide which lists 7-digit computer numbers of courses are needed.

Additional schedule guides are available at the scheduling office in Whitmore Hall room 168. Students who did not receive a computer coding sheet by now should obtain one at the Registrars' Office, also in Whitmore.

The deadline for submission of completed computer coding sheets to the Registrar is November 27. After that date, a $5 fee will be charged to process coding sheets.

Early submission of coding sheets means early computerprocessing of course requests for a student -- and a better chance of getting requested courses.

Late course descriptions are still being received by the Academic Affairs Committee, chairperson Martin Miller. They will be printed by The Collegian Friday.

Trustees' counsel remains quiet on legality of dorm requirement

By KATHY SHEEHAN
Staff Reporter

William Searson, general counsel for the UMass Board of Trustees, has refused to respond to the contention made by William M. Dorsch, attorney for the UMass Legal Services Office, that the mandatory dormitory residence requirement for persons under 21-years of age is illegal and unconstitutional.

Dorsch sent a letter to Searson November 12 advising him of legal research conducted which proved (to Dorsch) that the residence requirement violated students' right to Equal Protection as guaranteed by the United States Constitution.

Howard White, a spokesperson for Searson, said yesterday Searson felt it "inappropriate to carry on a legal dispute on the pages of the Collegian".

Searson expects to discuss the matter with UMass President Robert C. Wood and make a serious response to Dorsch's letter, but will not make a public statement, according to White.

"It would be most discourteous" to both Dorsch and Searson to engage in public debate over legal questions, White said.

In his letter, Dorsch told Searson prompt action was expected by the University in rescinding the restriction to avoid further legal action.

On campus parking

Council urges voluntary compliance

By ROBERT SHEMELIGION
Staff Reporter

The Parking and Transportation Council is urging "voluntary compliance" of parking regulations on campus. The group met yesterday.

"Selective enforcement will be used, as in the past", said David Johnston, director of The Department of Public Safety. Ticketing is presently enforced in certain lots and based on "motorist's complaints and observations from guards," he said.

Because a $25 towing fee has been considered "excessive" by members of the department, towing has been stopped on campus except for fire and access lanes. Ticketing, however, still goes on in "problem lots," but only on a "Short-term basis."

"It's not open season on any lot. If people do not comply stronger measures will be taken," said Johnston.

Last year, of the 500-600 tickets issued per day on campus, only about 30 per cent were ever payed. Ten per cent of the payments were voluntary. The unpaid parking tickets total over $150,000.

This year only 200 parking tickets per day are issued and Johnston claims it "hasn't made a bit of difference."

"Yesterday at 9:30 we went around and there were spaces. Some lots had hundred of spaces," he said.

The gravest danger of the present system is the possibility of failure of students to pay the parking fee; however it is the consensus of the committee that "this won't happen."

Parking fees finance about 40 per cent of the budget of The Department of Parking and Transportation making it the "single biggest chunk." The rest of the financing is taken from parking meter revenues and Student Senate funds.

The UMass bus system benefits the parking system by providing free public transportation both on and off campus. The chairperson of the meeting, Alan Gross, brought up Amherst merchants "as a possible source of funding." The reason being that merchants benefit from UMass busses taking students to and from town. The matter was set aside for future consideration.

SBA holds career conference today

The School of Business Administration is conducting a Career's Conference Day today in rooms 163 to 168 of the Campus Center.

Speakers from marketing, management, accounting and general business and finance will be addressing the conference. Classes for undergraduates at the SBA have been cancelled today.

Collegian reps listed

The following is a list of dormitory representatives in the Collegian's "Help the Hungry" campaign. Volunteers are needed to help those listed below, and to represent the drive in dormitories not listed. Those who wish to represent dormitories not listed should call Collegian News Editor Mike Kneeland between 11 and 1 today at 545-3500. Other volunteers should call the dormitory reps to help out. Students are being asked to donate one dollar to the campaign which will run until finals begin.

Demonologists discuss ghosts, apparitions

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

Investigation of paranormal activities and the existence of ghosts and apparitions were the topics presented by Ed and Lorraine Warren, experts in the field of demonology, speaking as guests of the Distinguished Visitors Program last night.

The Warrens, who have been investigating such activities for 29 years stressed they are not exorcists.

They have investigated over 3,000 haunted houses, and claim that, although there are many reasons why hauntings occur, the cause is often due to violent or tragic deaths that have taken place in the house.

See picture, p. 12

A major part of the narrated slide presentation dealt with one of their recent cases in which the former owner of a house had committed suicide and vowed to return three days later to possess the house. The owner had been involved in the practice of Satanism, and a number of tragic occurences had taken place in her family.

The new residents of the house have been victimized by this spirit for the past two years. There has been evidence of psychokenesis (objects moving by mind over matter), telekenesis (telepathic communication) and other supernatural phenomena taking place in the house.

Five college courses offer educational alternative

By DONNA MARIA T. FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Now that pre-registration is upon us, this is a good time to investigate alternatives to UMass courses.

One of the many educational alternatives offered at UMass is the Five College Course Exchange.

A Five College Course is any course taught in the Five Colleges-UMass, Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke and Hampshire.

Any student in good standing at any of the Five Colleges may take a course at any of the other colleges without additional cost to the student.

According to North Burn, Five College Coordinator, "a student in good standing" means; "any student enrolled at any of the Five-Colleges — any student."

Contrary to public opinion, registering for Five-College courses does not involve a lot of red tape.

"Generally speaking, we're trying to make enrollment in Five College courses as simple as possible," said Burn.

The registration procedure involves filing a Five College Course Registration Form, similar to the UMass form, a short application form and a card for each semester course taken at another college.

The forms should then be turned into the registrar of the home institution.

According to CASIAC, "It is easier to pre-register than to register for a Five College Course." In other words sign up now. Don't wait until registration.

Approvals of the student's advisor and academic Dean of the College (Provost at the University) are required.

"If a course is restricted and home students must get permission from the instructor, than so do interchange students," said Burn.

"Students are also encouraged to notify the professor that they will be taking his course," he advised.

Interchange students are subject to the rules and regulations of the home institution, including the grading system, deadlines, academic honors etc., of the home institution.

All credits are transferrable to the home school.

Asked if students in the home institution get first preference for courses over Five College Students, Burn replied, "It's impossible for Five College rules to control faculty members. What we encourage is that interchange students are treated like home students as much as possible."

"We're trying to create a climate rather than rules", Burn concluded.

To further simplify life for Five College Students, a free Five College bus system, meal exchange and use of library facilities are available to the students.

Any student can eat lunch at another college free upon presentation of an ID and proof of participation in a meal plan. To eat dinner or breakfast a student needs a justifiable reason (use of library facilities, taking a course etc.) subject to the approval of the Food Service Office.

Five College Interdisciplinary Studies are also offered. These studies such as Black Studies, Legal Studies, Latin American Studies plus nine more cross departmental boundaries. They are promoted through faculty consultation on new course offerings and faculty seminars.

"Faculty members talk to each other to offer courses in all colleges in effect saying 'This is what's in the Valley'", said Burn.

For more Five College Course information and registration forms contact CASIAC in E-22 Machmer.

Remember — it's easier to pre-register than to re-register.

Mt. Holyoke SGA enters the ring

By DANA FIELDS
Mt. Holyoke Choragos

The Mt. Holyoke College SGA Legislature didn't come right out and flex its muscles at its Monday night meeting, but there was a novel awareness that the Legislature has muscles to flex. The student involvement in the proposal for student membership on the Board of Trustees has inspired in the dorm representatives and SGA officers a sense of increased desire on the part of the student body for a greater role in policy decisions.

Much of Monday night's discussion was necessarily tentative, pending Mr. Truman's official explanation on Tuesday afternoon of the reason for the Trustees' rejection of the proposal. But members of Legislature indicated that they intend to continue sounding out student opinion on this issue and on the general question, "What do you want out of Mount Holyoke? and to act on student suggestions.

In assessing the Trustees' rejection of the proposal, the members of the Student Conference Committee, who met with Trustees last Friday, indicated they felt the members of the Board misunderstood both the reason for placing students on the Board and student capabilities in general.

"There didn't seem to be any notion on their part, or on Mr. Truman's part, that we could add anything to the Board," said Susan Cartmell, President of SGA and a member of the Conference Committee, adding that there seemed to be a fear among Trustees that student members would be "hangers-on." They asked questions such as, "Would you have time to read and reflect? How about the opportunities you'd be missing while you were busy on the Board?"

"The questions were mostly along the lines of 'Do you think you are competent to serve?" added Jeanne Amster, another member of the Conference Committee. She was joined by SGA Treasurer Nancy Turbak in expressing the belief that there is one thing that students alone can contribute to the Board of Trustees--the viewpoint of the persons for whom Mount Holyoke was founded.

Ms. Amster said that while she felt Friday's session between Trustees and the Student Conference Committee was polite and mutally respectful, "we scored a lot of brownie points and that's about it." She and other members of the Conference Committee concluded that there was a lack of direct communication on the key issue-recognition of students' ability to determine the course and details of their own lives.

Far from feeling defeated at the demise of the proposal, however, SGA President Susan Cartmell expressed optimism and prepared for further action on this and other issues.

"The important thing about this whole issue is that it got people talking together about what student power means," Ms. Cartmell stated. "The next step is to determine how we make sure we know what we want, and that we get it."

Striking the theme of student consensus, Ms. Cartmell further stated, "We must get the thoughts of the whole campus, everyone, on what they want. We need support from greater numbers of people.

"It is student opinion that will determine what we do next with this proposal for student membership on the Board of Trustees," she continued. "The role of the legislator will be a new one, more important than making announcements at dinner."

The suggestion that dormitory representatives go door-to-door and talk to students about SGA activities was warmly received. Some members hinted at frustration with the numbers of students who, regardless of their own feelings, are willing to go along with whatever their representative decides.

In a brief interview following the meeting, Ms. Cartmell flatly rejected the possibility that Mount Holyoke students may not know what they want, and furthermore may not care to think about it.

Ms. Cartmell stated, "It comes down to this simple question: Do you view your four years here as a whistle-stop?Or do you realize that everything that happens here affects your life in some way?

"Every person on this campus is articulate and is smart enough to know what's happening to her," Ms. Cartmell asserted. "But the institution tells students they don't know what they want, and the students start believing it."

Hub colleges to fast

BOSTON [UPI] — More than 4,700 Boston area college students are expected to participate in a one day fast tomorrow "in order to experience what hunger feels like," according to the best campus estimates and the president of Boston College.

"The tragedy of world hunger has stirred a profound type of concern among students that I have not witnessed in 25 years of college experience," said Rev. J. Donald Monan, S.J., president of Boston College where 1,500 students are expected to participate.

The fast is not just a demonstration of sentiment, according to Rev. Monan who added, "the fast for World Harvest, organized by Oxfam-America, is asking Americans to go without food for a day in order to experience what hunger feels like."

Oxfam-America, The Oxford Committee For Famine Relief, hopes 200,000 people will participate nationwide.

Davis, center of Smith social life

By CAROLYN HULL-RYDE
Of the Smith Sophian

Behind Cutter and Ziskind stands a building, once a gym, which has been a student center for over 25 years. Named for a former Smith president, Davis Student Center is used by more than 500 students each day.

Geographically a center of campus, Davis is used by students from Ellen Emerson to Chapin to Baldwin House.

Davis came under the control of College Food Servies (Paul Garvey and his assistant Stanley Rosco) in the fall of 1973. Between the spring of 1970 and fall 1973, Davis was operated jointly by Garvey and Smith's business manager. Before 1970 Davis was run solely by the business manager.

Davis received its "erector set" look in 1970. "It was designed," said one employee, "at a fantastic cost, by an architect commissioned by former Smith business manager Charles DeBruler. Students have complained that the low couches are "uncomfortable and impractical." Garvey said he hopes to install new sofas in the near future.

The erector construction provides no extra support for the second floor. The few orange columns without perforations were the original structural supports. The remaining columns were added in 1970 and have no structural purpose.

Rosco said beams were beginning to sag but that the second floor is still structurally safe for mixers. He added that he would like to remodel the second floor to provide more of a "nightclub" atmosphere. On the third floor is the women's center and scholarship loan library.

Several changes have occurred on the first floor of Davis and more are scheduled during the coming school year. A major innovation came last spring when Davis received a license to sell beer and wine.

Profits from the first year of independent operation help defray the cost to the student center for the equipment needed for beer and wine service. Approximately $3500 was spent for equipment and another $3500 for physical alterations, Garvey said.

The Smith entertainment council now sponsors a Thursday night cabaret on the First floor of Davis. The entertainment provides exposure for student musicians and lasts from 8:30 to 11:30. Nancy Close of Parsons House is head of Thursday entertainment. Close said she was working also with art professor David Stokes on plans for murals to be drawn by art students on the first floor walls.

Davis employs seven full-time workers and a day supervisor, Ed Hart. It also employs 40 student workers on a part-time basis. Student workers were not used until Davis came under the management of the food services.

Prices for food are, like the beer and wine, generally lower than retail prices elsewhere. Bagels and cream cheese are 45 cents, ice cream is 30 cents a cone. These are two of the most frequently requested items. Milk shakes are 45 cents, hot fudge sundaes are 45 cents, hamburgers, 50 cents and a daily luncheon special costs 99 cents. Pies are home-made along with the doughnuts in the Cutter and Ziskind kitchens.

Garvey said he is optimistic about the future of Davis. We came when they were just breaking even, he said. "Now our operation is self-sufficient; our profits pay for additional improvements. We are open to student suggestions on how to spend these profits," he added.

Hampshire students call all college meeting on $

By BIFF PRICE

Student organizers here at Hampshire College have called an "All-College" meeting to discuss solutions to Hampshire's money problems and will present ideas on how to keep the upcoming tuition hikes low. The meeting has been set for Thursday, November 21st at 7:30 p.m. in the Main Lecture Room of the Franklin Patterson Hall.

The meeting was called under a section of the College Constitution; this allowed for a small nubmer of the Hampshire community to petition the President for a collegewide meeting. Hampshire President Charles Longsworth has agreed to the meeting, according to the Hampshire Climax.

Students on and off financial aid have taken part in organizing the meeting. All possibly anticipating feeling the crunch of a tuition hike of at least $500 announced by the administration.

The meeting will be student-run, with staff, faculty and administration viewpoints included. The students will be airing their demands for no change in present financial aid plans. The College announced that most likely loans and jobs, both important parts of the aid program, will be increased.

The major issue at this gathering will definitely be the financial aid program. Many are asking just how much it will be cut back. The Administration said it might be severely cut. It was cited that financial aid was a luxury that could not longer be afforded. The students, however, contend that to cut financial aid drastically would change the atmosphere at Hampshire. They feel that for Hampshire, financial aid is not a luxury but a necessity.

Hampshire questions Buckley amendment

By MELANIE SHORIN
Of the Hampshire Climax

The Buckley Amendment, a federal law making illegal, withholding student records from the student, became effective yesterday. Hampshires president Longsworth reacted by sending out a memorandum to all budget managers. The memorandum said that ambiguities existed in the law, and there is an uncertainty on the part of the institutions as to their responsibility with regard to materials submitted by persons, on the assumption, that the contents would be maintained as confidential.

Mr. Longsworth also stated that "until we have clarification and are able to enunciate a policy for the college, please continue to operate as we did before the legislation was effected. There should be no change in the criteria by which access is afforded to student records."

The admissions office at Hampshire is the only place where confidential files are kept. Hampshire students have always been able to see their transcripts. The only problem is concerning recommendations, and until the situation becomes more clear the admissions office will abide by Longsworths request and continue to withhold, any records in the files, which have been preveiously regarded as confidential.

In reply to the question: "What would happen if a student requested his file and made a big fuss about getting it?, Hampshire's Dean, Barbara Turlington said, "The institution has 45 days before it has to reply to the request."

Tape bares Nixon orders

Mitchell was urged to take Watergate blame

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Convinced that John N. Mitchell was "not gonna make it anyway," President Richard M. Nixon once ordered a top aide to pressure him to take full blame for Watergate and draw attention away from the White House, according to tapes played in federal court yesterday.

Nixon's order to "go see Mitchell" was relayed to aide John D. Ehrlichman during a lengthy April 14, 1973, meeting at the time the Watergate cover-up was collapsing and threatening to uncover high White House involvement.

The tapes of White House meetings that day, played in the tergate cover-up trial of Ehrlichman, Mitchell, H. R. Haldeman and two other former Nixon aides, also indicated that Nixon planned to pardon the Watergate principals toward the end of his term as president.

In a meeting with Ehrlichman and Haldeman, the discussion focused primarily on trying to get Mitchell, the former attorney general and Nixon campaign manager, to admit his role in Watergate to the prosecutors because — as Nixon put it — "he's not gonna make it anyway."

Nixon said it was "god-damned painful" for him to do that to Mitchell, gut that he had to somehow "prick the god-damned boil and take the heat."

Mitchell was summoned to Washington that day and given the word by Ehrlichman, who was carefully rehearsed beforehand by Nixon and Haldeman on what to say. But Mitchell apparently refused.

The portion of tape in which Nixon discussed pardons was so badly garbled it was impossible to determine if he was referring to the seven burglars or perhaps to his own aides involved in the aftermath of the bugging. But his voice was firm and his meaning clear.

"It would be my (unintelligible) a reasonable time had expired after the thing uninteligible and before I leave office they'll get off, Nixon told Ehrlichman.

"You get them full pardons. That what they have to have, John."

The three men also discussed whether John W. Dean III should be fired as White House counsel because of his knowldege of thousands of dollars in cash that had been passed to the Watergate burglars.

Hirohito toasts Ford during state banquet

Compiled for Wires

TOKYO - Emperor Hirohito, toasting President Ford at a state banquet before millions of Japanese television viewers, expressed regret yesterday over the "unfortunate period" of World War II and thanked the American people for their help in rebuilding Japan.

The 73-year-old emperor read his statement slowly and haltingly during a state banquet for Ford, first American President to set foot on Japanese soil, at the Imperial Palace in downtown Tokyo. Earlier in the day, Hirohito had accepted Ford's invitation to visit the United States.

The President expressed understanding for Japan's "special sensitivities" about nuclear weapons, a key domestic issue, and tried to clear the way for purchases of choice American beef, now in abundant supply in the United States as farmers sell off cattle they can't afford to fatten up on expensive grain.

"Our paths are not always identical," Ford told Emperor Hirohito in a banquet toast, "but they all lead in the same direction - that of world peace and harmonious relations among mankind."

Afterward, he and Hirohito drove off in a long, black Nissan limousine to the Imperial Palace. Crowds were kept back by police but some 2000 selected spectators, most of them women, were allowed within reach so that Ford could shake a few hands.

Cheers rang out and small American and Japanese flags were waved in the spring - like breeze. In contrast to Monday, no demonstrations against Ford's visit were reported anywhere in the Tokyo area.

Arab guerrillas kill 5 Israelis before being killed by police

BEIR SHEAN, Israel [UPI] — With eight persons killed in the latest Arab guerrilla raid on this town near the Sea of Galilee, Defense Minister Shimon Peres pledged yesterday that Israeli armed forced would hunt down Arab terrorists until "the last one of them is eliminated."

Anti-Israeli raids broke out in occupied East Jerusalem for the second day yesterday and Arab high school girls threw rocks at Israeli police until police drove them back with streams of green-dyed water from water cannon and arrested 30 of them. There were other anti-Israeli demonstrations on the West Bank for the seventh consecutive day.

Israeli officials said three Arab guerrillas armed with Soviet-made automatic rifles and hand grenades seized a three-story apartment house in this town near the Jordanian frontier but were shot to death by Israeli commandos who stormed the building four hours later. Five Israelis also died.

The guerrillas killed five Israelis, three men and two women. One man thought to have died from injuries suffered when he tried to leap from a window actually died of guerrilla bullet wounds, police said.

Another 22 persons, mostly children, suffered minor injuries when the leaped from windows in the stone apartment house.

Witnesses said that after the shooting stopped, enraged neighbors and tenants threw the bodies of the guerrillas, one headless, out of the window. The bodies were doused with gasoline and set afire.

As the guerrillas' bodies were dumped one by one from the window, the crowd milling outside shouted, "Here comes another one!" Then, as the bodies burned, the crowd shouted, "Death to the terrorists!" Police doused the flames and dragged away the corpses.

In Damascus, the Marxist Popular Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine claimed responsibility for the attack and vowed the guerrillas would "continue to strike at the enemy until the liberations of our land from the Zionist occupation."

The guerrilla communique said the guerrillas blew themselves up when the Israeli soldiers attacked and that "a large number of the enemy" also were killed.

Backed by big cities and Ford

Senate passes bill granting mass transit aid

WASHINGTON [UPI] — With strong support from President Ford and after intensive lobbying by big-city mayors, the Senate yesterday approved the nation's most far-reaching program for federal aid to urban mass transit systems.

On a 64-17 vote, the Senate approved a six-year, $11.8 billion package, fashioned by the administration and congressional negotiators.

Despite the size of the Senate vote and the backing of Ford, the bill remained threatened by a procedural squabble in the House.

Prior to the recess for the Nov. 5 elections, which ended Monday, the House Rules Committee refused to clear the bill for floor action because of a feud between the Banking and Public Works Committees over which should have jurisdiction.

Supporters of the bill hoped the impasse could be broken, and the bill passed and sent to the White House before the end of the year.

The bill is in two sections and provides:

—$7.8 billion over six years to transit systems for construction and improvement programs, with the federal government paying 80 per cent and the local government 20 per cent.

—$4 billion over six years for either operating costs on a 50-50 matching basis or for construction and improvement grants on an 80-20 basis.

The $7.8 billion would be granted on a case-by-case basis, but the $4 billion would be allocated on a formula based on population and population density.

Cities, such as New York which is desperately trying to hold subway fares at 35 cents, could use construction grant money for operating costs if they agreed to repay it within two years.

Sen. Harrison A. Williams, D-N.J., in reference to difficulties the bill faces in the House, said, "It would be tragic if during the limited time available this year the Congress failed to act on a comprehensive long-term transit program due to procedural difficulties and technical haggling.

"To take no action in response to the combined transit and energy crises would be, in effect, to condone further deterioration. Affirmative action is imperative if we are to provide a better way of life for all of our nation's citizens."

The Senate had approved legislation authorizing federal funds for operating costs five previous times but the House broke the barrier only in 1973.

The final bill was worked out with Ford's blessing and included his demand for a long-range program held under $12 billion to meet budget requirements.

Auto insurance rates may increase soon

NEW YORK [AP] — Despite a nationwide drop in the number of automobile accidents this year, auto insurance rates are almost sure to go up soon across the country, industry spokesmen and observers agree.

Industry spokesmen say inflation has sharply increased medical and repair costs this year, but auto insurance premiums actually have declined slightly.

The industry spokesmen said the lower accident rate after nationwide speed limits were lowered to 55 miles per hour did not save enough money to offset current loss payouts.

Traffic deaths for the first nine months of this year declined about 20 per cent, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Bureau.

The National Safety Council said the total number of accidents also declined, but by a slightly lower percentage. Those figures will not be made public before the end of the year, the council said.

In addition to the higher costs of medical treatment and repairs, the slumping stock market has reduced the value of insurance companies' holdings and higher premiums are being sought to offset some of the market losses.

A spokesman for the Insurance Services Office, an industry-owned data gathering group located here, says, "We've already begun to file in all 50 states for a higher factor on auto insurance increased limits tables." That means that the more insurance a customer has, the higher the increase being sought.

AEC says cracks fixed in 3 nuclear plants

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Small cracks found in cooling system pipes in three nuclear power reactors have been repaired and no cracks were found in 18 other reactors of the same type, the Atomic Energy Commission said yesterday.

The cracks were discovered in September at two plants in Illinois and one in Connecticut. The AEC ordered inspections at the other reactors of the same boiling water type.

General Electric Co., the reactor manufacturer, said the cracked pipes were manufactured from the same batch of steel and a preliminary investigation indicated that stress assisted by corrosion was the cause of the cracks.

The cracks were found at Commonwealth Edison Company's Quad Cities Unit 2 and Dresden Unit 2 in Illinois and at the Northeast Energy Company's Millstone Unit in Waterford, Conn.

Deficit hits $316m

BOSTON [AP] — Secretary of Administration-designate John R. Buckley said yesterday that the state has a $316 million budget deficit.

Buckley said, however, that he still believes it is possible for the state to make it through another year without new taxes.

Buckley announced the deficit to newsmen following a day-long meeting with the current Secretary of Administration David R. Marchand.

The size of the deficit has been the key issue in determining whether new taxes will have to be raised.

Gov. - elect Michael S. Dukakis made a no-tax campaign pledge, but after the campaign he said the pledge was made with the understanding that the deficit would not exceed $100 million.

Coal pact delayed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Possible snags that could push the nationwide coal strike into December were reported yesterday as the United Mine Workers bargaining council gathered to resume the first step in the contract ratification process.

Union sources said they expected the bargaining council to recommend sending some sections of the new 175-page contract agreement back to negotiators for revision. The possible sticking points were not listed.

Marijuana laws o.k.'d

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Ford administration is not ready to support removal of criminal penalties for possession of marijuana for personal use, a White House official told Congress yesterday.

Instead, it is watching the experience of Oregon, New Mexico and other states which are trying, with variations, to discourage marijuana smoking with a fine but no criminal penalties, said Dr. Robert L. DuPont, director of the Special Action Office for Drug Abuse Prevention.

N-plants vulnerable

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A small group of armed men-as few as two or three-could seize a nuclear power plant and release radioactive materials into the neighboring area, a government report warned yesterday.

The General Accounting Office said the take-over of a power plant would pose a threat to public safety, especially if it occurred in a metropolitan area.

King asked to quit

BOSTON [AP — Edward J. King, controversial director of the Massachusetts Port Authority, was given an ultimatum yesterday to either resign or be fired.

King's annual salary of $59,500 makes him the state's highest-paid official.

Nixon agrees to exam

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Former President Richard M. Nixon has consented to a physical examination by a court-appointed panel of doctors "if they really feel it is necessary" to determine if he is able to give testimony for the Watergate cover-up trial, his lawyers reported Monday.

In a formal "interim report" filed with U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, Nixon lawyer Herbert J. Miller Jr. said Nixon's consent was "conditioned on the fact that the examination and consolution with Nixon's doctors will be conducted at absolutely no cost or expense" to the former president.
